WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Louis Machat, owner of the Cinema Art theatre, is reported negotiating for a lease on the Punch and Judy theatre, which, if successful, will see the house opened under a unique policy which Mr. Machat as yet has not disclosed. Mr. Machat made the Punch and Judy the talk of the town some time ago when he rebuilt it along new and novel lines and attempted to operate it as a reserve seat house at $2 top. The public failed to respond, however, and the house passed into other hands. Now Mr. Machat has another plan for this unusual playhouse.

The old Rialto theatre, recently renamed the Loop End and switching from burlesque to vaudeville and feature pictures at the time, has once more reverted to burlesque and short subjects.

Walter Floegel of the Pekin theatre, Pekin, Ill., was a visitor along Film Row last week.

Bill Brumberg, RKO Radio branch manager here before the merger, has been named manager of the Radio-Pathe branch in Omaha. Eddie Phelps, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, has now recovered his health and is back with Radio-Pathe as country salesman.

M. Van Praag, sales manager of National Screen Service, must be carrying plenty of charms with him, his friends here decided, upon learning that Van Praag left a Kansas City theatre lobby just in time to miss by a couple of minutes a "pineapple" outburst that raised plenty of havoc and might not have done Mr. Van Praag's health much good.

The Hawthorne theatre has passed into new hands. The Vendome theatre on the South Side has been closed.

Irving Mack managed to slip away for a bit of early vacation, hieing himself off to Waukesha, Wis., where he put in five days of rest and relaxation.

Sol Edwards, assistant to Budd Rogers, of Educational-Sono Art-World Wide-Tiffany, was in Chicago to confer with Max Stahl, Educational branch manager, on the feature picture situation.

The midnight preview of "Union Depot" at United Artists theatre last week brought out a packed house, despite the fact it rained more cats and dogs that night than it has since last spring.

In addition to getting swell new offices in the Standard Oil building, Allied members are going to receive a pretty metal plaque to display on the box office, to emphasize their Allied membership.

207 Hungarian Houses Closed

Trade Commissioner George R. Canty reports from Europe that foreign press reports that the Hungarian film fund will be abolished are premature. According to the press abroad, 207 Hungarian theatres have closed, temporarily or definitely.

New Seattle Exchange Opens

The Cosmopolitan Film Exchange has opened offices in Seattle and will handle the product of Big 4, independent. D. C. and C. W. Millward are operating the exchange.

Fighting Brazilian Tariff

Representatives of major companies, Hays office representatives and commercial attaches of the United States are concentrating their efforts in Brazil, especially, and Argentina and Chile, to bring about a downward revision of the extremely high tariff upon imported film. No definite action is anticipated for some time. Since the problem is purely a domestic one, definite action on the part of outside interests is somewhat difficult, it was explained by Major Herron of the Hays organization.

Publix in Southern Reversion

Publix, turning over more houses to independents in a management deal in the south, has recently completed the largest theatre deal in North Carolina's history, with more than two dozen houses valued at several million dollars involved.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 106, No. 5 January 30, 1932

ADVERSITY BREAKS BOUNDARIES

THESE days of grey skies in the amusement world are bringing to the motion picture a new, unwonted, but wholesome tolerance and broader vision among competitors and across international boundaries and seas. It will be many and many a year again before any Napoleon arises seeking control and dominance in the terms of the past. It is all most frankly admitted now that no one organization is equipped in creative resources to make more than a fractional contribution to the seasonal output of screen drama. It is even admitted that motion pictures of merit and earning power capable of recognition by the American exhibitor can be made otherwhere than Hollywood.

It required the pressure of adversity, the sting of some failures, the ruby illumination of considerable accountancy, to bring this breadth of vision.

At the peak of several cycles of the past there were those who sought to make all the pictures for all the theatres. One is reminded by the lines of the now almost forgotten Milton who wrote of those "sons of Belial flown with insolence and wine," and the fall thereof. Success is heady stuff. Once upon a time there was a cartel of picture makers called "the Patents Company crowd." Little independents like Zukor, Fox and Laemmle came along, and the answer was one of scorn, because "we have the know how." All the kings of the old "know how" have been fallen these many years, and some of those who came after fell, too, under the wreckage of arrogant ambition.

London, Berlin, Paris, Moscow, all are capitals in a world of creative thought. There are no boundaries, no tariffs, and no monopolies which can ultimately prevail to keep them from important expression in the medium of the screen for the screens of all the world, including America. In those ponderable commodities like wheat and steel, in such services as shipping, and in terms of gold and silver we have learned well enough that the supply is world supply and the market world market. Just now, in the developments becoming apparent within the last few weeks, there is the dawning of a recognition that the same laws must apply, regardless of the will of any man, any men, any corporation or group, also in the commerce of the speaking shadows.

Some forthcoming announcements of foreign product by important American distributors will very shortly reveal the trend, the coming of the inevitable.

SCIENCE TRIUMPHANT

LISTENING to the radio the other night the impressive thought came that as a result of something more than a century of research from the great Michael Faraday to Edison and DeForest we are now enabled to hear a banjo player around the world. But this week Science has achieved a new apogee. The solemn, vast and dignified Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company officially reports on Form 10161, through the technical press editor, that an illustrated story is available giving the details of an investigation by Westinghouse engineers, using a color matching device, resulting in the decision that Jean Harlow's hair is a true platinum color.

Would that some super-radio might bring us back from the Beyond the comment of the late George Westinghouse.

KENT AND PARAMOUNT

THE very considerable attention of the press and filmland given to the announcement of the resignation of Mr. Sidney R. Kent from his post at Paramount Publix constitutes in itself an important recognition of his fourteen progressively successful years with that increasingly important organization. Mr. Kent is unique in the industry in the achievement of place in the uppermost stratum of the business sector of the industry functioning entirely as an employe, an investor of abilities.

To the vigorous Mr. Kent this somewhat spectacularly sudden movement will presently represent but an interlude in his career. To Paramount it is a part of the evolutions of a cycle of adjustment, a process which, in varying degrees, is now being undergone by every great American enterprise.

Important expression of policy is made by Paramount Publix in adjusting the executive personnel by the promotion of trained men from within the organization, in the instances of Mr. Emanuel Cohen and Mr. George Schaefer. In this there is a consistency with the policies of the sound older industries enjoying reputations of more conservatism than the amusement institution.

INDIANAPOLIS CHEER

RETRENCHMENTS, broad and general as they are, have probably least affected expenditures for children. Mothers see to that. The reports of department stores and specialty shops in indicative lines tend to support this impression. Now comes word from R. R. Hesselding, manager of the Uptown and the Ritz theatres in Indianapolis, in a letter in which he remarks that the figures from both houses now show an increase in 1931 over 1930 in child patronage. Discussing Rita C. McGoldrick's monthly "Juvenile Show" department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, he observes that juvenile business "doesn't just grow like Topsy, but on the contrary requires intensive application of the sort of entertainment and personal attention that every normal child expects without having to make a demand for it."

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

ABOUT OUR JOB

MR. RICHARD E. HAYS, motion picture editor of THE TIMES of SEATTLE, comes bravely to the defense of the motion picture and its share of responsibility to public morals, saying:

. . . With a daily audience of more than 20,000,000 men, women and children, the screen does have a definite responsibility to society, but it is silly and unjust to ask it to play exclusively the role of custodian of morals and of human nature. History and individual experience should remind us that the world had its crooks and drunkards, thieves and murderers, bad boys and bad girls in the usual proportion long before motion pictures were thought of. . . .

The screen should be credited with improving public taste in acting and literature, music and art, and generally with being a great constructive force in education. The world knows more about the world because of its cameras and screens. I take it that instead of ruining the youngsters of the land, with its plays depicting the excesses of flaming youth, the screen aroused mothers and fathers to a consciousness of the menace in the trend of modernism; and instead of teaching young America how to rob and shoot with its gangster films, it roused the country to action against lawlessness—if the recent great mass meeting in New York meant that city was aroused. . . .

To scrutinize the output for the year and give a thought to the constant improvement in the mechanics of picture making, is to find much praise.

WHAT'S NEWS

THE ENQUIRER of CINCINNATI gets editorially annoyed about some aspects of some newsreel treatments, but makes the more common error of intelligent lay observers of thinking of the newsreel as a vehicle of news. It in the main can not be and only rarely is news presented on the screen. The newsreel is, by force of sheer commercial evolution, an amusement short based on events which have been in the news. The Cincinnati editorial follows:

As a potential means of bringing vivid impressions of news events to the public the motion picture newsreel is a splendid medium. For some types of event frequent in the news, the movie, with its graphic and kinetic qualities, is to be commended. But this is based on the assumption that the newsreel is not abused and not made to misrepresent the news.

Such unfortunate misuses of the newsreel are all too common. When we see an alleged picture of the "war" between Japanese and Chinese, in which both armies are advancing with swords flashing and bayonets fixed, and with broad grins on the faces of the soldiers, it is apparent that we are watching a posed picture, and not a news picture—fiction, and not fact.

When the Nipponese wielder of a tremendous sword stands poised at the summit of a Manchurian Bunker Hill, smiling into the camera while his "enemy" stands patiently ten feet away with guns held in readiness, there is something radically wrong.

Examples might be multiplied, and complaint might also be made of the inane comment after the manner of radio announcers destroying the vitality of the pictures with moronic "interpretation." These shortcomings are still the exception, but there is a well-defined tendency to ruin the potential usefulness of the newsreel by making it too simple, too obvious and too artificially staged. It is a tendency that ought to be checked, if the newsreel is not to become merely a banal ramification of Hollywood screen-fiction.

There is a vast divergence between what is important and what is interesting or exciting. Newspapers make their choice and variously such institutions as the New York Times or per contra the New York Graphic. The newsreel may on occasion purvey importance, but mostly it has to be just interesting. It is related to journalism about as the Sunday rotogravure section is.

NEW METHODS

PUBLIX OPINION, the official organ of Publix Theatres Corporation, published for its press representatives and managers, under the supervision of Sam Katz, in its issue of January 15 says:

A new day calls for new business methods. If nothing else, the last two years have delivered a knockout blow to routinized procedure. In merchandising, in manufacturing, in every form of commercial enterprise, there is marked concentration on new ideas and unusual angles. Show business has done its share of experimentation but no industry needed it more than ours, and no industry continues to need it as much as we do.

LOS ANGELES SEX

THE DISPATCH of COLUMBUS in OHIO is editorially not a little out of patience with the municipal government of Los Angeles, as well as the government of these United States, in certain moral matters, thus:

Los Angeles has a suburb called Hollywood. Hollywood's chief industry is motion pictures, and if there is anything about sex that Los Angeles doesn't know—well, we'd like to hear about it just to satisfy a purely academic curiosity. But Los Angeles has banned Aristophanes' ancient comedy, "Lysistrata," on the grounds that it is immoral, and is going to make the venerable Nance O'Neil and her players answer a charge of giving an "indecent" performance, or something. The city of angels thus gives us a strange, but thoroughly American, exhibition of morality. Turning out thousands of feet of sexy film every week to be seen by impressionable youth and adults with low boiling point morals, it turns thumbs down upon a classic masterpiece to which only intelligent adults are attracted. For fallacious reasoning in this direction, the city has but one close competitor—the federal government, which bans classic literature at the ports, but permits pornographic periodicals to thrive within the borders.

YES, SIR!

THE STATE JOURNAL of SPRINGFIELD in ILLINOIS has been reading a resolution adopted by Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic fraternity, in which it denounced "misrepresentation of newspapers on the screen," and so the editor remarks in print:

. . . One of these days the Sigma Delta Chi brethren will settle down and realize that filmdom's screened estimate of the press is no worse than newspapermen's published opinion of various Hollywood residents.

14,750 THEATRES ARE OPERATING; ONLY 1,538 OF THEM ARE SILENT

Only 46 Theatres Closed in Canada, and All but Three Are in Small Towns or Villages; 775 Houses Wired

[By Canadian Correspondent]

A breath of encouragement is found in the official survey of theatre operating conditions throughout Canada, which shows that only 46 theatres are closed in all Canada, of which but nine are in Eastern Canada, that is, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Comparatively, the most theatre darkness is found in the Prairie Provinces, which have been hard hit by the collapse of the wheat market and droughts. In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the total on the wrong side is 37 houses. Five out of the 78 theatres in British Columbia are also dark.

Only Two Closed in Ontario

These figures have dispelled the general talk that a large number of theatres have folded here and there in the Dominion. The powerful Province of Ontario heads the list with only two theatres closed out of a total of close to 300. There are only five marks against the Province of Quebec, while two theatres are dark in the Maritime area on the Atlantic Seaboard which comprises Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

With three exceptions, the theatres not operating are in small towns or villages where the going has been particularly tough because of falling prices of agricultural products. Vancouver, according to the report, has two closed theatres, the listed names being the Columbia and the National. Winnipeg is the only other large city with a dark house, this being listed as the Dominion theatre. Neither Montreal, with its million population, nor Toronto, boasting 900,000 people, has a closed theatre in their midst. These are the two largest centers of the Dominion. The total number of theatres in Canada is given as approximately 900.

Canada is apparently also well advanced in the matter of sound installations. The City of Toronto has 90 theatres, of which only one is silent. Further, a recent tabulation showed that 38 out of 284 theatres in the Province of Ontario are still silent and the number is constantly growing smaller.

99 Per Cent Seats in Wired Houses

Another way of sizing up the situation with regard to sound installations is the compilation with regard to the capacities of theatres, wired and otherwise. In Toronto, 99 per cent of the aggregate seating capacity of 73,038 is found in the wired houses. The capacity of all theatres in Ontario outside of Toronto is 123,352 seats and the wired theatres have 113,845 seats or 92.3 per cent. In the whole province, including Toronto, there are 196,390 seats and 95 plus per cent of these are found in the wired theatres, the total of the latter being 186,345 seats.

The smallest theatre in Ontario offering talking pictures is the Princess at Listowel, with 189 seats. The largest is the Imperial in Toronto, 3,444 seats.

Progress with sound installations in other provinces has been definitely substantial but the compilation for the rest of Canada is not yet ready.

It is known, however, that 775 theatres in all Canada have been wired and, with 20 other systems for censor boards and screening rooms, the total number of installations in the Dominion is 795. Film exchanges work on the basis of 900 theatres in the country all told; so it can be estimated that there are approximately 125 silent houses under the Canadian flag. By regions, the wired theatres are:

Ontario, 256; Quebec, 127; Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 238; British Columbia, 78, and Maritime Provinces, 76.

Tinker Leaves On First Coast Visit

Edward R. Tinker, president of Fox Film, left New York for Hollywood this week on his first trip to the company's studios since becoming executive head of the organization. He was accompanied by Richard A. Rowland, a Fox vice-president, and Sol M. Wurtzel, who is in charge of Fox production during the three months' leave of absence which was granted Winfield Sheehan, following a physical breakdown.

Tinker plans to remain on the Coast for about two weeks and plans conferences with Sheehan while there. He will express to Sheehan the company's hopes for an early recovery.

W. C. Michel, executive vice-president of Fox Film, made the following statement yesterday:

"In view of the many misleading statements that have been widely published with reference to the validity of its contracts, the Fox Film Corporation wishes to say that the contract between it and James R. Grainger, vice-president and general sales manager in charge of distribution, has been authorized by the board of directors and Mr. Grainger has full authority to negotiate all contracts having to do with the distribution and sale of Fox pictures in the United States and Canada.

"We assume that these misleading statements have been inspired by the fact that a comparatively few employment contracts extending over a period of years have been disapproved by the board, although the great majority of such contracts were authorized and approved. Contracts entered into in the ordinary course of business are not affected by the action of the board."

Ohio MPTO Meet Next Month

The MPTO of Ohio will hold its eleventh annual convention on February 10 and 11, at the Deshler Wallick hotel, Columbus, according to P. J. Wood, business manager.

Total of 20,100 on Books of Distributors; 3,609 of Those Operating Play Disc Exclusively; 11,000 Film or Both

Twenty thousand and one hundred theatres are listed on the books of national distributors, having a combined seating capacity of approximately 10,767,411.

According to figures supplied to Motion Picture Herald by the Film Boards of Trade, 5,339 theatres were dark at the end of 1931; the majority are small independent houses which were unable to install sound equipment and, with the inroads made in box-office receipts by nearby sound competition, were forced to close. Results of the exhaustive survey, for which each of the 31 Film Board secretaries supplied information, shows, therefore, that 14,750 theatres were actually in operation on January 1.

There are 13,223 sound-equipped theatres in the United States, 1,582 of which were reported dark at the end of last year. Of the total, 6,434 have sound-on-film equipment, 3,609 use disc only and 4,898 are equipped for sound-on-film-and-disc. This, it is believed, indicates the extent to which film has supplanted disc, which was declared out-styled by principal equipment and film interests more than one year ago. As the situation stands now, only 3,609 play disc exclusively as against approximately 11,000 which concentrate on sound-on-film.

Only 1,538 Silents Operating

In the accompanying chart is a recapitulation of the entire exhibition structure of the country, in cooperation with the Film Boards of Trade. The chart lists each key city territory separately, indicating states covered by each Board, and shows the total number of theatres in each section, the capacity, number of houses operating and closed, also the sound and silent theatres open and closed, and a reclassification of sound theatres according to type of equipment: film, disc or film-and-disc.

Throughout the entire country there were but 1,538 silent theatres operating on January 1. Five and one-half years ago, the first sound theatre was equipped in New York.

On an average, 1,000 theatres were closed at all times during 1931, which is considered by Board executives to be an unusually high average. As previously pointed out, sound is the basic reason given, plus generally disturbed economic conditions which existed last year.

Results of the countrywide checkup constitute the basis of statistical operation of all national distributors.

Between 75 and 85 per cent of all adult admissions are purchased between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m., according to the theatre analysis. It also is indicated that the average adult admission is ten cents lower than one year ago. A countrywide admission average was not compiled because of the many conflicting scales in existence.

NEGOTIATIONS CONCLUDED, PAPERS READY IN FOX DEAL WITH SKOURAS

Brothers Will Take Over Management of Practically All Fox Theatre Properties, Totaling More Than 550 Houses

BULLETIN

Up to a late hour on Wednesday night, consummation of the deal whereby Skouras Brothers will operate and manage 550 Fox theatres depended entirely on the Skouras interests. The Fox corporation was in entire accord with all phases of the arrangement, and passed on the legal papers to Skouras with certain provisos, which Spyros Skouras immediately set about to fulfill.

Fox officials at the home office "had not heard" of a report whereby Harry Arthur and other Fox West Coast theatre executives would resign upon consummation of the deal with Skouras.

All details pertaining to two proposed deals between Fox Theatres Corporation and the Skouras Brothers have been agreed upon. Differences which arose during negotiations have been ironed out and papers have been drawn ready for signatures. Barring some unforeseen occurrence, the Skouras interests will relieve Fox of the management and operation of practically all Fox theatre properties, totaling over 550 houses along the Pacific Coast, in the North and Midwest and in upstate New York.

Many and divers premature reports preceded actual negotiations, which now have reached the point where the principals are "getting along nicely and are calling each other by their right names," according to one Fox official who said that actual details of both deals are being held closely, with but a few executives of each faction actually participating in the negotiations.

Not For Sale or Lease

It is understood that Skouras would obtain Fox West Coast, a circuit of 500 theatres in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming, these houses being operated in three divisions: Midwesco, headquarters at Milwaukee; Midwest-Midland Theatres of Kansas City, and West Coast, operated from Los Angeles.

Skouras Brothers, it is said, would not advance any money for the properties, obtaining absolutely no ownership rights, which the Fox interests refuse to relinquish. President Edward R. Tinker, in commenting several weeks ago on the reported sale of West Coast, said that the corporation would not consider its sale or lease.

"TELL 'EM QUICK," WRIGLEY'S TENET

"Tell 'em quick and tell 'em often" was the keynote of the philosophy of salesmanship of William Wrigley, chewing gum manufacturer and member of the board of Paramount Publix, who died Tuesday at Phoenix, Ariz.

"You must have a good product in the first place, and something that people want, for it's easier to row downstream than up," Wrigley held. "Explain to folks plainly and sincerely what you have to sell, do it in as few words as possible and keep everlastingly coming at them.

"Advertising is pretty much like running a furnace. You've got to keep on shoveling coal. Once you stop stoking, the fire goes out. It's strange that some people's imagination can't compass this fact."

The Fox West Coast deal has been in the conversation stage for quite some time; only late last week did it reach the point where each asked the other to submit propositions "on paper."

Preceding negotiations for West Coast and Midwest properties. Skouras had been negotiating with Fox for the acquisition of the upstate Schine division of Fox Theatres. This deal probably will be signed simultaneously with the Coast operating agreement and will embrace almost identical terms. Both deals would become effective immediately.

Ludwig Assists Skouras

Skouras acquired 47 Fox theatres in the New York territory and obtained a small block of Publix theatres in the East on an operating agreement several months ago, following his sudden resignation as chief of the Warner theatre circuit, which followed disagreement over operation.

L. J. Ludwig will become first assistant to Spyros Skouras in the management of Fox West Coast Theatres, which Skouras Brothers are to operate after February 1. Ludwig resigned as Publix Central Division director during the week in what was described as "a friendly arrangement," in order to accept the Skouras post. He had been incharge of the former Finkelstein and Ruben theatres, and Iowa, Nebraska and Salt Lake territory for Publix.

Martin J. Mullin, Publix New England divisional director, has been named to succeed Ludwig, and will be established in the Publix home office. Other promotions bring Ralph G. Branton, New England divisional manager, into the post vacated by Mullin, and Ed Cuddy becomes district manager, succeeding Branton.

William Wrigley Dead; New Figure In Film Business

William Wrigley, Jr., financier and sportsman, died at Phoenix, Arizona, on Tuesday morning from acute indigestion. He was stricken suddenly one week ago.

Wrigley, who was born in Philadelphia on September 30, 1861, was chairman of the board of the Wrigley Company in Chicago, owner of the Chicago National League Baseball Club and a member of the board of directors of Paramount Publix Corporation, to which post he was elected in November, 1931, after he, John Hertz and Albert Lasker became interested in Paramount.

Wrigley's business career began in Philadelphia in 1882 with his father. He removed to Chicago and entered business for himself in 1891 under the name Wm. Wrigley, Jr. & Co., manufacturers of chewing gum. On Jan. 1, 1911, the plant of the Zeno Mfg. Co. was absorbed and the name of the corporation changed to Wm. Wrigley, Jr., Co., of which he was president.

He was a director of the First National Bank, Chicago; First Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago; Boulevard Bridge Bank, Chicago; Consumers Co., Chicago, and of Paramount; chairman of the board Bon Air Coal and Iron Corp., Tennessee; Wilmington Transportation Co., California; Santa Catalina Island Co., California; Chicago National League Ball Club; Angel City Baseball Club, Los Angeles.

Funeral services will be held at his Mt. Ada home at Catalina, where he will be buried.

Independents in New York Organize

Independent circuit operators in New York have banded together and formed the Theatre Owners Guild of New York, of which A. H. Schwartz, of Century Circuit; Frisch and Rinzler; Lee Ochs, Lawrence Bolenigno, Leo Brecher and George and Spyros Skouras are the sponsors.

The group will meet at luncheon once weekly for the purpose of cementing relationships which, it is hoped, will eventually lead to a strongly-knitted independent unit in the Metropolitan territory, enabling these independents to present a solid front in controversial matters in the industry, particularly with distributors.

Whether or not the group will agree to a cessation of price cutting and double featuring as is most pronounced in certain neighborhoods, could not be learned.

ADAPTED ACTION DRAMAS DO BEST OVERSEAS; "WISECRACK" FILMS OUT

Foreign Managers More Likely to Be Inspired Enemies of Sophisticated Pictures; And Football Pictures Don't Go

By SHERWIN A. KANE

How best to make American pictures intelligible to foreign audiences without incurring great expense in adapting them for the alien market is now, as in the days before sound, the first problem of the foreign departments of American distributors.

Action dramas, whenever not too pointedly "American" in theme, lend themselves most readily to inexpensive and facile adaptations for foreign versions. Naturally, pictures of this type—swift moving, spare on dialogue—are the particular delight of every foreign manager. They are easily translated into plentiful bookings and certain profits. Not so with those parlor dramas whose entertainment values are based primarily on sophisticated dialogue and the essentially American "wisecrack," or those which depend on dialogue rather than action to advance the plot. Foreign managers are more likely to be the inspired enemies of pictures of this type than are censor boards and Parent-Teachers' associations.

Football Dramas Fail Abroad

The only exceptions to this classification are found among those action pictures which are built about purely American institutions. The group of football dramas released this fall, for example, were better than average box office performers in this country, yet not one of them brings so much as a smile to the face of a foreign manager invited to try to sell them abroad.

Somewhat similar pictures, a few of which were in the way of being recognized as film triumphs in domestic markets here, came to ignominious ends abroad. Not the least of these was the Dempsey-Tunney fight picture, acquired for European distribution by Universal and delivered on the Continent before cables from America describing the encounter could possibly have been forgotten by readers. Universal's feat was regarded as being little short of an achievement, so you may be able to picture the surprise of the company's foreign manager, abroad at the time, when he was asked, immediately upon ending a lengthy and inspired sales talk on the earning possibilities of the film, just who Dempsey and Tunney were. The question was put to the manager by one of the European representatives, obviously chosen by his fellows as a spokesman for them all.

"Where's the Rest of It?"

"Dempsey," the astounded executive answered patiently, "is the former world's heavyweight champion. Tunney is the new champion who beat him. Here is your picture of the fight; the only one which will be released in Europe."

The foreign representatives were still perplexed.

When seven foreign governments abandoned the gold standard only one more problem was added to the many already confounding the foreign departments of American motion picture distributors. Mr. Sherwin A. Kane, of the staff of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, browsing about Broadway, learned that what with such matters as the oversea patron's likes and dislikes on subject matter, dialogue, the great American "wisecrack," revolutions, and increased taxation, to name a few, the lot of the foreign manager is perplexing at best. Hence the accompanying article.

"But your picture is just a fight," protested the group's spokesman, at last. "Where's the rest of it? What were they fighting about? What did they get for it?"

The Dempsey-Tunney fight picture, it may be observed in passing, was not a box office champion of Central Europe.

As for Stage Adaptations—

Pictures which have achieved excellent grosses internationally have been those which, in addition to possessing "action which tells the story," have been based on story formulas which are universally comprehended—the comedy of "City Lights," the human trials of "All Quiet on the Western Front," the adventure of "Hell's Angels," and the music of many of those productions of which American audiences tired two years ago, but some of which continue in popularity in many corners of the earth even now.

Pictures which have failed in foreign markets likewise fall into readily identified groups. Either they are pictures which depend on dialogue rather than action to advance the story, or they are built around peculiarly American characters and institutions. Adaptations from the modern American stage have provided a goodly number of the pictures which, although they may have been far above average in box office performance here, showed the least impressive earnings elsewhere.

"The Royal Family of Broadway" is regarded as a good example of the type of picture which is difficult to sell in foreign markets. It involves not only dependence on dialogue, rather than action, for its movement but it also was built around distinctly American characters and institutions, unintelligible, for the most part, to aliens. Paramount, we are informed, made no attempt to sell the picture to any but English speaking audiences, and the picture's earnings outside of America were unimpressive.

Similar characteristics are to be found in such pictures as "Strictly Dishonorable," "Front Page," "Five Star Final," "Private Lives." All are aimed so directly at American audiences that their international appeal is negligible and likewise their probable earnings in foreign markets. In the case of such pictures, producers can hope only to realize production costs and profits in America. If they were to be financial failures here, foreign revenues to be obtained from them never would be sufficient to overcome the domestic losses. Fortunately, dramas of the kind which fail to show a profit in the American market alone are not numerous.

Lavishness of Settings Is Definite Asset in Film Abroad; Dialogue and Localized Themes Likely to Spell Downfall

Various practices are employed by foreign managers in gauging the potential value of pictures in foreign markets and in planning the least costly adaptations necessary to make them intelligible to alien audiences. One system followed with considerable success by one foreign manager involves screenings of the company's pictures without sound. In this way, any phase of the picture which is not explained by the action alone is readily identified, and titles are inserted at only such points. Thus adaptations are made only where required, and the cost of preparing a picture for foreign markets is kept at a minimum.

The lavishness with which even the average American picture is staged, a feature often assailed by critics within and outside the industry, definitely proves its investment worth in world markets. Hollywood's output owes its world supremacy, in large, to the prodigality of its production habits. This was clearly demonstrated when American studios, seeking an economically sound plan of producing multi-linguals, attempted to supply world markets with talking pictures in a variety of languages which were produced on the slenderest of appropriations. The result was that, in spite of the fact that Hollywood offered complete talking pictures in native languages, alien film audiences refused to buy the more cheaply made productions, and indicated their preferences by patronizing the standard American releases with English dialogue instead.

An International Advantage

Compared with the unpretentious settings of foreign offerings, American pictures continue unchallenged as the most elaborate and colorfully staged productions available to world markets. On this basis alone, an American picture holds an international advantage over the competition, whatever it may be. The world demand for Hollywood's pictures has made it possible for them to be delivered profitably in spite of exorbitant foreign taxes, tariffs, quotas, and a miscellany of confining trade and financial legislation in virtually every foreign land. More, it has produced an important part of that revenue which goes to make possible the superior and lavish productions which no studios but Hollywood's can begin to regard as standard. Without those markets there would not be available the $200,000 or $500,-

WAIVED GOLD STANDARD IS PROBLEM

000 now expended on even the average Hollywood production.

Picture quotas and tariffs imposed by many countries are foreign department problems ranking next in importance to those presented by dialogue and foreign version adaptations. Still another problem, increasingly vexing since world markets became unsettled, has had to be faced by foreign departments. This problem embraces foreign exchange and came into new prominence recently with disturbed monetary values and with the enactment of legislative measures by foreign governments in their attempts to stabilize their own currency.

Abandonment of the gold standard by Britain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Japan, Australia, and Portugal resulted in immediate fluctuations in the currency of those nations with consequent perplexities for everyone dealing in those markets. Few exporters attempt to gamble on foreign exchange, as this form of speculation is frowned upon by stockholders and most directorates. Of late years, still another influence has lessened the amount of gambling on foreign exchange done by exporters. This has been the economic situation at home which has increased company cash requirements and made it impossible for most to permit their foreign revenues to remain in the countries of origin in the prospect of an upturn in exchange rates. Consequently, most exporters return their monetary balances to America immediately, accepting prevailing exchange rates even though they may entail losses. The recent depreciation in sterling is estimated to have resulted in a loss to American exporters of about 20 per cent of their British revenues alone. Losses on other exchanges have been correspondingly significant.

Return Balances at Once

The American film industry has suffered, of course, along with other exporters. The balance sheets of American film companies are as sensitive to world events affecting the foreign exchange market as are those of oil, automobiles, and farm machinery. Every motion picture distributor who sells to Britain benefits from as remote an incident as a shipment of gold from the Bombay bullion market to the Bank of England, with its consequent rise in the exchange rate of sterling. Inversely, they accepted their losses when Britain abandoned the gold standard and the pound depreciated on the world exchanges.

Likewise, the sensitive South American currencies react to countless internal disturbances, and these reactions immediately are apparent in the balances of South American exporters. The not infrequent revolutions to the south of us have been a temporarily disrupting influence on South American monetary values on numerous occasions. One republic in particular, not so long ago, witnessed one revolution follow another with such amazing rapidity that the home offices of picture companies gained the impression from the reports of their local representatives that the country was in an almost continuous state of warfare.

A Slim Chance!

If the average man, woman or child cared to bet on himself as a possible star in motion pictures before he packed the amateur theatrical makeup and took the train for Hollywood, he would have to give odds of something like 4,000,000 to one, it is indicated by Rex Bailey, Radio casting director on the Coast. The industry when operating at peak production, uses only 5,000 extras, he estimates, which leaves some 120,000,000 people out of luck. Not more than one in 10,000 of the studio newcomers he daily interviews show feature player possibilities, Bailey figures. He says there are approximately 25 "stars" in Hollywood. "Think carefully," Bailey warns all embryonic screen luminaries, before buying that ticket. After all, climate isn't everything!

No sooner was one revolution reported settled, than a cable flashed the news of another just begun. All the while, picture earnings within the country suffered, and what little revenue was forthcoming to distributors was further depreciated by the lowered rate of exchange. Evidently convinced that in such a situation his company needed a little encouragement, the resident Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer representative sent the following cablegram to his home office:

"Patience. Good prospect of revolutions beginning on Monday hereafter. Means no interference with weekend theatre business."

"It's an Ill Wind—"

However, depreciated currencies occasionally are advantageous to distributors, particularly those who have periodic financial obligations to meet abroad. Obviously, when payments are made abroad in a depreciated currency, fewer American dollars are represented than would be the case when the foreign issue was at par. Thus, those companies which are now paying for theatre acquisitions abroad are able to profit by depreciated foreign exchange rates through applying the profits of foreign operations to those payments, instead of returning foreign revenues to America and accepting the loss in exchange.

Situations of the kind offer an excellent alternative to taking either a loss or a gamble on exchange rates. The uncertainty of the gamble was forcefully demonstrated to one major distributor, tempted by the recommendation of its London office to hold the company's money on deposit in England following abandonment of the gold standard, as the belief in London at the time was that sterling would suffer only a temporary recession as a result of Britain's action. Fortunately, the distributor followed the customary procedure of returning its money to America immediately, for the pounds continued to register depreciation.

The effect of exchange rate fluctuations on picture companies' earnings may be estimated from the experience of one large distributor who last year showed a 25 per cent gross increase over the previous year on operations in England; despite that, due to the decline in the pound, the company's net for the year was only equal to the net for the preceding year when a much smaller gross was shown.

Attempts to stabilize currencies abroad have led to a variety of legislation of a kind to perplex the already sorely tried film exporter. Increased taxes and new tariff regulations have been inaugurated by many countries, and others prohibit the removal of moneys from the country by alien controlled enterprises. Australia, one of the foremost film markets for American distributors, enforces such a restriction. Revenues originating in Australia, however, may be cleared by transfer to London, on which there is no ban, and from London to America, as England has not enacted legislation of the kind. The process involves payment of additional interest charges and circuitous and often delayed shipments.

Chile and Austria likewise prohibit the withdrawal of moneys by alien enterprises, although the situation in Austria is of less significance as most American exporters agree there is no money to be taken from Austria in any event.

The Mexican Situation

One of the most formidable actions which film exporters have to face today is the prospect of an imposition of a prohibitive duty on American pictures by Mexico. Action on the proposal has been deferred to April 1, but film distributors agree that if it is enacted the duty will make it impossible to do business in Mexico.

The threat of taxes, new or increased, on American films abroad is a constant one to all film distributors. Particularly in the present state of worldwide economic unrest, American motion pictures are inevitably the first to be singled out for taxation by revenue-seeking governments. The common belief abroad is that all of Hollywood's output is made exclusively for America and a fair profit is realized on domestic distribution. Whatever film revenue is obtained outside America, foreign legislators believe, represents clear profit, and as such is the target of any and all revenue measures.

In fact, however, foreign sales more often than not represent not an additional or excess profit but the actual difference between producers' profit and loss. In this light, foreign markets are of prime importance and any and all legislation affecting them is of vital significance to the entire industry.

Heads SMPE Meet Committee

N. D. Golden, assistant chief of the motion picture division, department of commerce, has been appointed chairman of the Washington arrangements committee, by W. C. Kunzmann, chairman of the convention committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, whose annual spring meeting is set for the capital, May 9 to 12.

TO DEPORT QUEEN KELLY AFTER STAMFORD TRIAL

Famous Swanson-Kennedy Production Screened Without Publicity in Up-Country Theatre and Goes to Export

"Queen Kelly," a Gloria Swanson production of hectic history, dating back to the summer of 1928, and originally undertaken under the management of Joseph P. Kennedy, has been at last completed and will be offered in the foreign market. It is held unlikely that it will be offered to exhibitors in the United States.

The picture has had a highly involved backstage career, flitting from studio to studio and corporation to corporation with endless treatments and doctorings by numerous experts, in operations which have ranged from Hollywood, California, to Mombasa in British East Africa.

Shown Without Publicity

"Queen Kelly" was revealed for its first public inspection, without advance publicity, at the Stamford theatre, in Stamford, Conn., last Tuesday evening.

The production shown is a salvaged version of what probably constitutes one of the industry's most pretentious and most expensive failures. It is a non-dialogue picture with a synchronized musical score. The production is definitely "dated." In its production aspects, including direction and acting, it is old-fashioned. Its written titles are reminiscent of the feeble and inept work of the early days of picture making. Gloria Swanson's efforts may be construed as a libel upon her reputation.

Apparently a Patched Fragment

Erich von Stroheim is charged upon the screen with the guilt of direction. While it is understood that von Stroheim appeared in one or more of the several versions of "Queen Kelly" which have been produced, he does not appear in the picture as shown. The socalled von Stroheim touch is variously illustrated in the revealed version, largely in incidents set in scenes of ridiculous splendor—and in incidents of bad taste, obscenity and perversity.

The revealed "Queen Kelly" is apparently a patched fragment of the vast quantities of footage which were made at a cost totaling in the neighborhood of a million dollars and upon which were lavished the talents of a long list of prominent writers, directors and technicians. The picture could be disposed of as simply futile and unimportant were it not for the profane and insulting handling of many persons and things which are commonly respected.

Test of Audience Reaction

It is understood that the "Queen Kelly" footage became the property of Gloria Swanson in a settlement of affairs which was negotiated some time ago with her former manager, Kennedy, and that she has looked to the United Artists corporation for distribution of the subject in event that it should be considered to qualify for release. It is understood that United Artists does not consider the subject fit for distribution. The Stamford preview was arranged as a test of audience reaction.

"Queen Kelly" was conceived as the first ambitious project of the new cycle in the career of Miss Swanson when in the summer of 1928 Kennedy organized Gloria Productions, Inc., as the star concluded her relations with the Art Cinema Corporation and Joseph M. Schenck.

Story Authored by Von Stroheim

Miss Swanson had been dissatisfied with the dramatic material which she had been given and in a search for a suitable story for her first Gloria production, "Queen Kelly" was turned up. The story was authored and owned by von Stroheim, then under contract to P. A. Powers, for whom he had produced "The Wedding March." Von Stroheim would not sell the story without his services. Swanson insisted on the story. Powers wouldn't relinquish von Stroheim without some arrangement to repay Powers for advances to von Stroheim. Ultimately a deal was worked out between Kennedy and Powers for von Stroheim, and although von Stroheim and Swanson were recognized as a dangerous temperamental combination, plans went forward for the picture.

The production was originally scheduled to start about August 1, 1928, but differences between Swanson and von Stroheim over the details of the story and with the producer over cost led to innumerable delays. In the succeeding months virtually all the executive and writing personnel of FBO Studios and Pathe Studios, at one time or another, took a hand in the construction of the story, and before it went into production, a long array of story minds had contributed to it, including William LeBaron, Benjamin Glazer, Paul Bern, William Sistrom, Maurice Revnes and Ralph Block. In this interim the transition began into sound pictures, but a decision was made to shoot "Queen Kelly" silent and Kennedy dispatched his right hand man, E. B. Derr, to Hollywood to produce the picture. Soon after the picture was started, Kennedy sold his interest in FBO Pictures to Radio Corporation and the production was shifted from FBO Studios to Pathe Studios.

African Portions Discarded

It was late in March of 1929 before the production of the picture was completed at the studios and at that time it was stated that the negative investment was approximately $920,000.

At the instance of von Stroheim, negotiations were had with Martin Johnson, then in Africa, to shoot several thousand feet of atmosphere material and some elaborate harbor sequences. This film was delivered, but all of the African portions of the story, once dominant in the script, were ultimately discarded.

There ensued weeks of effort to cut and edit the hundreds of thousands of feet of negative into a picture that could be safely released but before that was accomplished dialogue pictures had been so thoroughly established that it was decided that any further expense in completing "Queen Kelly" would be futile and the picture was shelved pending a determination of the permanence of dialogue production.

Conferences for New Studio Wage To Be Continued

Settlement of wage scales for organized studio workers is about half completed and an amicable settlement is believed to be near following a series of conferences in New York, according to Pat Casey, motion picture producers' labor representative. Several more conferences between Casey, production executives and President William S. Elliott of the I. A. T. S. E. will be held in New York, with a final meeting to be held in Hollywood during the second week in February.

Studio craftsmen employed by Universal, Educational, Paramount, Fox, Warners, M-G-M and RKO are affected by the negotiations in progress. All crafts were asked to accept a wage reduction of $1 per day, but have refused. An alternative offer has been made by several studio brotherhoods to accept a reduction of 50 cents per day on the condition that high-salaried stars, writers and directors be given proportionate reductions.

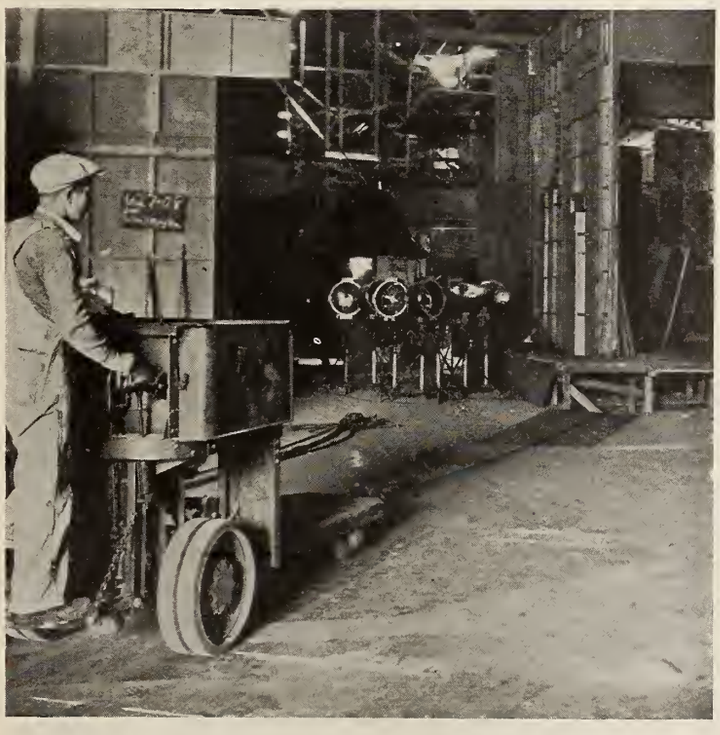
Urges Public Give Credit to Industry

Declaring pictures a most important instrument in the cause of world peace, Harry M. Warner urged greater efforts be expended by the public to understand producers' problems, in an address delivered this week at the 25th annual banquet of the Washington, D. C., Chamber of Commerce. The occasion marked the first public showing of "Washington," the Warner Brothers' short subject being issued in conjunction with the Bicentennial celebration of the birth of George Washington. The Washington Chamber of Commerce cooperated with Warners in the production of the subject.

Stating that the picture had been made for national as well as international understanding of the man, Washington, Warner declared that the film would have a wide foreign distribution. He added that it had been produced in the face of objections on the part of certain stockholders, to satisfy whom Warner had himself guaranteed the picture against showing a financial loss to the company.

Decrying unreasoning criticism of motion pictures and the industry, Warner made a strong plea for tolerance and urged that credit be given the industry for its achievements as well as criticism of its shortcomings.

"People seldom consider the good that is done by any agency serving the public, but are quick to criticize and discover errors," Warner said. "Why not consider the good the motion picture industry has done and is doing, for a change?"



THE CAMERA REPORTS

KIDS AGAIN. (Left) Appearances to the contrary, Irving Thalberg, M-G-M production executive, and his wife, the M-G-M star, Norma Shearer, as among those present in guises out of their own past at a "Kiddie Party" given by a sister M-G-M celebrity, Marian Davies.

RECOVERED. (Right) Pola Negri as she arrived in New York from Hollywood the other day, now declared entirely well again following an illness that threatened to halt her second screen career. The Polish star, who left the screen about three years ago, returns in RKO-Radio's "A Woman Commands."

A "TRICK" ELEVATOR. Used at the Warner Brothers studio for conveying between three stage levels. The electric truck is attached to a cable, and the latter to the elevator placed behind the staging.

THOSE OLD CUSTOMS. Be they Spanish or otherwise, they help make staying home a pleasure. Here is Ruth Hall showing how she doesn't feel about those inspectors in Warner's "Union Depot."

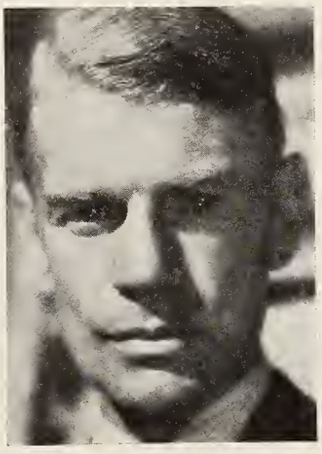
AMBITION. An informal study of James Schnozzle Durante contrived as the eminent M-G-M nose specialist was discovered instructing himself in finance while dunking breakfast in his palatial home.

MAKING OPERATIC SHORTS. (Below) Rehearsal, symbolized in a group pose by members of the Kendall-de Vally Operalogues company producing two-reel operas for Educational release. Shown are Madame Sugi Machi, Japanese prima donna (left); Antoine de Vally (standing); Willow Wray, mezzo-contralto (and sister of Fay Wray); and Gerald Kendall, secretary of the unit.

SIGNED. Harry Barris, song writer and entertainer, who has been signed by Al Christie for Educational's Vanity comedies.

IN HOLLYWOOD. (Below) One among many curious lands to be visited on the modern studio lot without annoyance of passports. This peaceful replica of troubled China is to be found in Movietone City. The laughing lady waiting for a street car—believe it or not—is Cecilia Parker.

CLOSE-UP. Loretta Young submits, with justified confidence, to the intimate gaze of the camera in a new portrait from the Warner Brothers studio, where she has a featured role in "Play Girl."



IN BRITISH FILM. (Below) Old lace in a modern setting, with Youth exemplified in Dorothy Bartlam, star of the new British International production, "Fascination." Like other British International films, this picture is distributed by the recently formed B. I. P. of America, subsidiary of the English producer which is establishing a complete exchange system in this country.

TROTSKY AS AN EXTRA. (Below) Part of a film from the motion picture's most distant days—so distant that in it Leon Trotsky, later a power in Soviet Russia, now an exile, appears as a $5-a-day extra. The film is included in Warner Brothers' quaint Vitaphone short, "The Movie Album."

MAKEUP ART. The classic face of John Barrymore as to be seen in M-G-M's "Arsene Lupin." This is the film in which both John and Lionel Barrymore will for the first time appear together.

DIRECTED. James Whale, who held the megaphone on Universal's new Lew Ayres production, "Impatient Maiden."

SNAPSHOT. In which the photographer took Ramon Novarro just as he came. The M-G-M star, whose latest role is in Greta Garbo's "Mata Hari," is shown striding across the M-G-M lot—maybe lunchward.

INDUSTRY AWAITS COMMITTEE'S DECISION AFTER HEARING ON TAX

Problems Within Industry Are Voiced; Pettijohn Returns to Capital With Further Briefs in Denial of Some Statements

The fate of threatening federal admission tax legislation for theatres remains in the hands of the House ways and means committee, which late last week listened to arguments of industry leaders against proposed taxation. Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the MPPDA, returned to Washington this week to file additional briefs in the industry's fight against admission levy of 10 per cent on tickets over 10 cents, as recommended at the opening of Congress by Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury, backed by the Hoover Administration.

It is understood that the additional information filed by Pettijohn was in answer to questions put to representatives of the industry at last week's tax hearings by members of the committee and for which the required information was not available at the initial hearings. Denials and corrections of allegedly misleading information, said to have been given members of the ways and means committee by certain industry leaders during the hearings, were also contained in the briefs.

Censure Allied Representatives

The attitude taken at the hearings by representatives of Allied States Association is reported to have drawn the censure of other industry interests also represented at Washington. That Allied spokesmen devoted too much of their time on the stand to an airing of problems within the business and offered little co-operative effort in the attack on the threatened taxation were criticisms made by several of those who attended the hearings. Allied, in turn, has censured other leaders for their tactics at the hearings.

An indication of the extent of criticism leveled at Allied is contained in the following communication to MOTION PICTURE HERALD from Ed Kuykendall, chairman of the board of directors of the MPTO of Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee, and an important worker in the ranks of the national MPTOA:

"I have just appeared before the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives in opposition to the proposed tax on admissions advocated by the secretary of the treasury and have attended the hearings on the subject before the committee.

"After the smoke of battle has cleared away and I have given some thought to the remarks made by various industry witnesses to the committee, I cannot help but feel a certain regret for some of the things that were said. The outstanding objection of the whole hearing, in my mind, was that some people in this industry are so small and unable to look at a tax problem as a common cause, that they persisted in bringing in our industry quarrels that should remain within the industry, and be settled within the industry.

"I, of course, have particular reference to the gentleman who was so indiscreet as to bring up certain subjects that could not in any way help our cause and only served to cloud the issue. By promoting a discussion of block booking, unfair treatment by the producers and various and sundry other complaints he had to make, he did much to convince the committee that this industry was not a unit in anything, not even in this tax hearing which might mean the closing of hundreds of theatres throughout the country. This discussion had no place at any hearing on admission taxes, and these people were not big enough to submerge their own personal feelings and interests when so much is involved.

"I wonder if, some day, we will be able to hold hearings and public meetings without our family troubles being aired in the presence of the public which is always looking for something derogatory rather than commendable about us.

"There is no doubt in my mind that we made a most profound impression upon the committee and I could go home entirely happy in this if it were not for that ugly jarring note that crept into the hearing purely as a matter of playing cheap politics and I am convinced that the man who said these things knew that it could not benefit us as an industry on this particular hearing.

"We are going to have a convention in Washington and we are going to have, as our guests, many members of Congress. We are going to be on parade, so to speak, on this occasion. I hope that none of us will be unmindful of this position and that we will conduct ourselves in such a manner that they can find nothing objectionable to say about us after we are gone.

"I enjoyed immensely meeting personally the many fine fellows we have in the motion picture industry. There was a most wholehearted response from most of the industry in protest of this obnoxious nuisance tax. In the final analysis, one cannot help but realize that there are many big, fine men and women in the motion picture industry and we are bound to make progress as time goes by."

Allied Advises State Leaders

Almost simultaneously there emanated from national headquarters of Allied at Washington, the following communication which was sent to state leaders of Allied:

"To All Leaders:

"At the hearing before the ways and means committee on the proposed admission tax Allied was represented by Messrs. Myers, Samuelson, Cole, Yamins, Blum, Herrington, Branch, Block, Nolte, Garman, Goldberg, Pacey, and numerous exhibitors from surrounding territory. During the statement by Mr. Lightman members of the committee introduced the subjects of block booking, protection, film rentals and the like, and clearly indicated their sympathy for the independent theatre owners. Mr. Myers, being fourth on the list, dwelt on the inability of the independent exhibitors to absorb the tax in view of falling attendance and the fixed nature of their expenses, and on the impossibility of passing the tax on to their patrons in view of the fact that the theatres had been compelled to cut their prices in order to hold their patronage at all.

"It appearing that the remainder of the hearing would be consumed before the next Allied speaker was reached, Mr. Myers advised the chairman that other Allied speakers would relinquish their time provided Mr. Yamins was heard in answer to Messrs. Pettijohn and Lightman in the matter of film rental, block booking, etc.

"Thereupon Mr. Yamins was heard out of turn and corrected the statements that the producers were no longer enforcing block booking; that film rental constituted only 25 per cent of the gross receipts, and that protection merely held back a fifteen cent house a short while after a picture had been played in a deluxe house. On the latter point the Publix protection schedule in Boston was introduced, showing that theatres with low admission prices have to wait from five to six months before pictures are made available for the subsequent run. So interested was the committee in Mr. Yamins' exposition of industry practices that the committee voluntarily extended his time.

"Congressman Celler, testifying for the legitimate theatres, took occasion to express the hope that nothing would be done to injure the little theatres, but his references to the producers showed no such solicitude.

Sees 50 Cent Exemption

"The impression gained from the attitude and expressions of the committee is that they have no intention of levying a tax on admissions of 50 cents and under. This does not mean that the battle has been won, and the independent exhibitors will have to keep up their good work if they are to escape the tax. Your representatives at the hearing were unanimously of opinion that if the committee reports a bill along the line indicated, it should be supported, but that, in the meantime leaders and exhibitors would have to continue their efforts to avoid any tax on independent theatres.

"Mr. F. J. McWilliams of the Wisconsin Allied Association, submits the following excellent suggestion:

"'My plan is one which has been tried and tested and always found to work effectively. Select a responsible Allied member operating in the home town of each member of the committee and instruct him to arrange a mass meeting of every theatre owner in that Congressional district. Those present to be impressed with the necessity for immediate action. Instructions to be given that each man present wire his representative voicing his objections to the admission tax and saying why. Each man to influence as many as possible of his home-town merchants, business associates, bank, newspapers, etc., and to sell the idea of having one and all wire or write the representative protesting the imposition of an admission tax. The local papers, in which the exhibitors are advertisers, to be induced to write an editorial against the tax, and the local exhibitor to see that copies of these editorials are forwarded to the Representative at Washington.'

"There appears to be no reason to center attention on the committee, as it will doubtless make a report in a week or so, but Mr. McWilliams' method could be employed in enlisting the sympathy and interest of all Congressmen and Senators to advantage.

"Allied scouts who took occasion to visit their representatives during their stay in Washington report an undercurrent of feeling that the attitude of the ways and means committee presages a sweeping congressional investigation of industry organization and practices. You will be duly informed of any further development along this line."

THREE GROUPS PRESENT TAX PROTEST

Allied followed its initial communication to Allied leaders with the following general statement to all members:

"The hearing before the ways and means committee on the proposed admission tax demonstrated both the wisdom and efficacy of Allied's policies in dealing with threatened adverse legislation.

"Their presentation of the facts was courteous and they offered no gratuitous advice as to how to run the country.

"As a result the way was smoothed, and the committee throughout the hearing evidenced a full understanding of industry conditions and complete sympathy with the independent theatre owners.

"All branches of the industry were not equally happy in their handling of the matter and it was necessary to overcome considerable resentment stirred up by film salesmen who had sent in innumerable copies of a form letter telling Congress in a most offensive way how to cut down the cost of government so as to avoid the necessity of raising additional revenue.

"Just what the genius who composed that letter sought to accomplish is a mystery to Allied leaders; but in needlessly offending the men who wield the taxing power he rendered the industry a distinct disservice.

Refers to "Ballyhoo"

"The spokesman for the industry and the representatives of the MPTOA arrived on the scene accompanied by a contingent of camera men, publicity men, reporters, etc.

"It was obvious that one purpose was to oppose the tax and another was to exploit certain personalities and possibly to add a little to the ballyhoo for the forthcoming MPTOA meeting in Washington.

"The result was to get much space in both the trade and lay press, but at what cost to the cause can only be imagined.

"One result was to provoke a sarcastic editorial in the Washington Post on Sunday, January 24, referring to Mr. Pettijohn's crying act for the industry.

"Members of the committee evinced great interest in such industry practices as block booking, protection, film rentals, etc., and the answers given by various spokesmen afford an interesting contrast when placed in parallel columns." At this point, Allied offers a detailed paralleling of statements made by its representatives and those by other leaders.

"The foregoing comparative statement," says the Allied unit, "shows the fundamental differences between a truly independent organization and one that is financed chiefly by the producer-owned chains.

"The trade press recently has carried numerous threats of a membership drive aimed at independent exhibitors in Allied territory. Allied will meet any such campaign with renewed aggressiveness and the resumption of her expansion program under the leadership of her new officers.

"Although Allied has not found it necessary to suggest anything in the nature of a compromise on the bill, indications are that the exemption will be lowered to admissions of 50 cents and under.

"If such a measure is reported, it is the consensus of Allied opinion that it should not be opposed. It will represent the earnest efforts of the ways and means committee to do justice to all branches and further opposition might result in further lowering the exemption to the injury of the great body of independent theatres.

"Moreover, it is believed that such exemption will be fairer to all branches than a lower one, since those who pay higher admissions can better afford the tax and a lower exemption would tend to close the independent houses and further restrict the market for film.

"It is hoped that all branches will see the wisdom of this course."

Says Tax Would Close Thousands

Declaring that the proposed tax of 10 per cent on all admissions in excess of 10 cents would force the closing of thousands of theatres throughout the country, and citing the fact that nearly 5,000 houses have been forced to close in the past two years because of depression, Pettijohn led the fight against the Mellon theatre tax before the Ways and Means Committee.

Opposition to the tax was based on three grounds: first, because it strikes at the essential recreation of millions of workers and farmers; second, because it treats the necessities of the poor as if they were the luxuries of the rich, and third, because of the terrific burden it would impose on the theatre owner, Pettijohn told the committee.

In addition, he said, it would cost the Government one-third of the revenue from the tax to collect it and it would cost the exhibitors as much to handle it.

Faced with a burden which threatened to close the doors of a large percentage of the country's theatres, representatives of the industry pleaded before the Ways and Means Committee to such effect that practical assurance was given that every effort will be made by that body to avoid the imposition of the Mellon admission tax and, if a lowering of the present $3 exemption cannot be prevented, any tax imposed will not hit houses with an admission scale below 50 cents.

30 Exhibitors Attend

Twenty-five per cent of the theatres of the country were dark on January 1, the committee was told; those that have thus far survived are either "in the red" or close to the borderline between profit and loss; admission prices have been drastically reduced in many communities; efforts to attract patronage have gone beyond the limits of "showmanship," and imposition of the proposed tax on admissions in excess of 10 cents would undo all that has been accomplished toward keeping audiences at a reasonable size.

There was no divergence of opinion along general lines among the film representatives. The gist of their argument was that the theatres cannot absorb the tax and if it is passed along to the public, patronage will fall off tremendously. Estimates of the number of houses that would be forced to close if the tax was imposed ran as high as 60 per cent in some sections.

Arguments against the tax were submitted by the three large groups—the MPTOA, the MPPDA and Allied States.

A room full of exhibitors—30 or more—faced the committee when it convened. By arrangement, the number of witnesses was limited and the main arguments were presented by Ed. Kuykendall of Columbus, Miss., and M. A. Lightman of Memphis, Tenn., for the MPTOA, C. C. Pettijohn for the Hays organization, and Abram F. Myers of Washington and Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass., for Allied.

Attendance in his own houses has declined 41 per cent in less than two years and he had been operating without profit for 18 months, Kuykendall declared in opening the exhibitors' presentation. His situation, he said, is analagous to that of the smaller exhibitors as a whole.

Explaining the cause of the industry's present precarious situation, Kuykendall said that interest in silent pictures waned with the advent of radio on a large scale around 1925 and 1926. The houses took considerable punishment, but were able in part to recoup themselves with the introduction of sound pictures. That development, however, necessitated heavy expense, and many theatres installed equipment only a year or so ago, just as depression began to make itself felt.

A federal admission tax would be the final burden, Kuykendall indicated, pointing out that state taxes on admissions or seating prevail in practically all parts of the country, together with license and other imposts.

Following Kuykendall, Lightman discussed the educational value of the motion picture, depicting the cultural loss that would follow the closing of houses and describing the efforts of the exhibitors to assist in unemployment relief and in local movements of all sorts as part of their contribution to the Government.

The 50 cent exemption was first suggested by Lightman who, in answer to questions by members of the committee, agreed that if the tax could not be entirely avoided, it should start at "not less" than 50 cents.

Myers Deplores Block Booking

Estimates that the mortality among exhibitors might go as high as 60 per cent in the event of tax imposition were made by Myers, who declared that most exhibitors are barely getting by. The block booking situation was introduced by Myers, who declared that one of the cause of the small exhibitors' unsatisfactory condition was the necessity of buying en bloc.

This theme was enlarged upon by Yamins, who declared that the very fact that there is only a limited number of high-grade producers —and that every house feels it must carry their product—has given them a monopoly which makes the forcing of block booking easy. Now, he complained, it is often necessary to book shorts and newsreels in order to get desired features.

The treasury department's attitude on admission tax was developed for the committee in a memorandum prepared by Assistant Secretary Ogden Mills in which it was declared:

"The treasury's estimate of $135,000,000 of additional revenue to be collected through a tax of 10 per cent on admissions in excess of 10 cents represents largely collections on admissions to moving picture theatres. As far as I know, there are no data showing the distribution of theatre admission according to price ranges. I understand, however, that, taking the country as a whole, by far the greater portion of admissions to moving picture theatres is at prices ranging from 25 to 40 cents. If this be true it is clear that to place the exemption at 35 cents would be to relinquish a large part of the increase which is estimated on the basis of the treasury's proposal. A 50-cent exemption would further decrease the estimate.

"Some indication of the effect of changes in exemptions is given by collections data for past years. On this basis it appears likely that if the exemption were to be increased from 10 cents, as proposed by the treasury, to 35 cents, the additional revenue which the treasury estimates now at $135,000,000 would be reduced by about 50 to 55 per cent, indicating $61,000,000 to $67,000,000 as compared to $135,000,000 for the fiscal year 1933. Were the exemption to be placed at 50 cents, the treasury's present estimate would be reduced by 65 to 70 per cent, and the probable amount of additional collections would be from $40,000,000 to $47,000,000 as compared with $135,000,000."

EMANUEL COHEN AND SCHAEFER TAKE NEW POSTS AT PARAMOUNT

Eastern Sales Section Reapportioned Into Two Divisions with J. J. Unger in Charge of One, Stanley B. Waite the Other

Emanuel Cohen, production executive, has been elected a vice-president of Paramount Publix Corporation and simultaneously George J. Schaefer, Eastern sales chief, was named sales manager, succeeding Sidney R. Kent, who resigned suddenly last week as vice-president and general manager in charge of sales. Paramount filled the posts vacated by Kent within 24 hours after his dramatic resignation.

Cohen's promotion to a vice-presidency was followed immediately by his election to the directorate. He came to Paramount in 1927 as editor-in-chief of the company's newsreel, a post he occupied at Pathe in 1926 and 1927. In 1927, Cohen also took over supervision of short subjects and since then his production duties have expanded to the point where he now has an important voice in production and studio matters at large.

Cohen was born in Hartford, Conn., on August 5, 1892, and was graduated from City College in June, 1912. He is a member of the National Press Club, Explorers' Club, Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the Judeans, Commodore, Athletic, and Briarcliff Lodge and holds the rank of major in the Signal Corps, U. S. Reserves. He was decorated with the order of Commendatore dell' Ordine della Corona d'Italia.

From 1912 to 1914, Cohen was a writer, concentrating on policies and economics. In 1914 he joined Pathe News as associate editor, holding that post until late 1915 when he was appointed editor of the News and Review, also directing shorts until 1927, when he joined Paramount.

Schaefer's appointment to succeed Kent in charge of sales had been expected. He became a candidate for the position because of his close association with Kent and Kent's method of operating. Insiders say that Kent had been grooming Schaefer to step into his post—if and when he left Paramount.

First With Lewis J. Selznick

Schaefer is a native of Brooklyn. He was born on November 5, 1888, and was educated in the Brooklyn public schools and at Heffley Institute. His business career began when he joined an automobile manufacturing concern, resigning in 1914 to become secretary to Lewis J. Selznick, with whom he was associated until 1916, when he was named assistant sales manager of World Film Company. In the following year he was promoted to district manager and in 1920 joined Paramount as booker at the New York exchange. In 1921 Schaefer was elevated to the district managership of New England territory, and in 1926 was named Eastern district manager, the position he held until last week. He is a member of the BPOE, Kingston, N. Y.

Alfred J. Richard has been handling Paramount News since Cohen assumed more important production duties in the organization several months ago. He is expected to continue in that position.

In New Paramount Positions

Emanuel Cohen

G. J. Schaefer

J. J. Unger

S. B. Waite

Reports on the West Coast of an impending shakeup in the ranks of Paramount's studio executives were set at rest by B. P. Schulberg, Paramount production chief at Hollywood, who said that Mike Levee, executive manager, and Al Kaufman, associate producer, would remain at their present posts with a "slight readjustment" in their duties. It was declared that Levee would assume new duties, while Kaufman would be given other responsibilities.

Immediately following Schaefer's promotion, he announced the appointment of J. J. Unger and Stanley B. Waite to the posts of division managers of the Eastern sales division, which has been divided into two parts. Unger's division will include districts 2, 3 and 4, comprised of New York, Brooklyn, New Jersey, Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Columbus, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

Waite will have districts 1 and 7, which include Boston, New Haven, Maine, Atlanta, Memphis, Charlotte, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Dallas and San Antonio.

Unger, who has been district manager of the New York and New Jersey territory, has been with the Paramount sales organization for eight years. He joined the company in 1924 as branch manager of New York and Brooklyn. Unger is a native New Yorker and a graduate of City College. Before joining Paramount he held sales positions with General Film Company and First National Pictures.

Stanley Waite went to Paramount in 1927 as sales manager of short features and Paramount News. Previous to that he was with Pathe as manager at Boston for two years, central division manager for two years, and home office sales representative. He was born in Menominee, Mich., and attended Yale University and the University of Michigan. Previous to entering the motion picture business he managed a fiber plantation in South America for two years, was salesman for machinery manufacturers, and spent three years in the World War as a first lieutenant in the Second Division, participating in all engagements.

Kent Considering Offers

Following his resignation, Kent moved his belongings from the Paramount home office to "Room 710 at 67 Wall Street, New York City. Telephone: Whitehall 4-0040," from which point, a spokesman for him said: "Mr. Kent is considering many offers." Kent and his new and unnamed associates at Wall Street refused to discuss these "offers," although Broadway again linked his name with many important film corporations, among them Radio and Columbia.

The suddenness of Kent's resignation, which followed a "session" with Paramount's finance chairman, John Hertz, prompted Kent to insert the following personal message this week in advertising columns of trade publications:

"You no doubt have read of my resignation from the Paramount Publix Corporation. Because I am leaving the city for a brief rest it has been impossible to communicate with many of my friends in the motion picture industry.

"Therefore, I am taking this means of expressing to them my very great appreciation for the loyalty and the warm personal friendship they have shown toward me during the 14 years of my service with Paramount.

"To the leaders of exhibitor organizations, to the thousands of individual theatre owners all over the country, to the executives of producing and distributing organizations, to the heads of the various labor groups, to those producers with whom I have been thrown in close contact, and to all the other fine men and women in this industry whom I am proud to call my friends, I write this note of thanks and gratitude for the pleasant relations which have been my good fortune for the last 14 years."

Kent will remain in New York to complete his plans for the future.

Grantland Rice's contractual relationship with the Van Beuren Corporation may, or may not, weather the storm in which differences between both factions have cast it. If Rice and the company are successful in patching up a tilt now current, Van Beuren will continue to make Rice's "Sportlights" for RKO release, in line with a contract which will not expire until May 1, 1933. On the other hand, if an amicable settlement is not made, Rice is expected to look elsewhere for distribution of the sport subjects which Jack Eaton produces.

Irene Rich, screen player now on a vaudeville tour, had an unusual experience at RKO's Downtown in Detroit this week when a woman patron, seeing a feminine "plant" advance from the orchestra to the stage, crawled over the orchestra railing and footlights to reach Irene during the star's comedy skit. The stage manager pulled the woman into the wings where she kicked and fought loose and again approached Miss Rich in full view of the audience. Again she was forceably taken into the wings and finally ejected from the theatre. She immediately purchased another ticket, and when she entered the foyer, attendants practically carried her to the women's room, where she confided to the house manager that she merely wanted Irene's autograph. She got it and then departed peacefully.

ALEXANDER GOTTLIEB, of Publix, and praise agent at the Paramount on Broadway, passes along a study on the mortality of light bulbs which it appears has considerable to do with circuit overhead.

It costs the Paramount nearly $10 every time Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford strike a certain low note on the stage consoles. (The moral is obvious.)

This unusual expense item arises out of the fact that the low vibrations of the larger pipes destroy the filaments in the bulbs, of which there are 300,000 in the theatre. The average life of each bulb, some genius has figured to be 1,000 light hours and about 600 have to be replaced weekly at an average cost of $25 a day.

The greatest mortality, Alex continues, takes place in the arch of the organ pipe chamber and the nearby proscenium arch. Half of the replacements take place in these two spots. Normal vibrations also account for a respectable proportion of the broken bulbs, all of which is undoubtedly appreciated by the makers of Edison Mazdas.

BRITAIN APPEALS TO HOLLYWOOD TO KEEP FILMS CLEAN—OR LOSE

Exhibitors of England Stand Solidly in Line With HERALD Plea for Stringent Adherence to Production Code of Ethics

By W. H. MOORING, London

London is this year to be the venue of the International Cinema Congress, at which it is expected almost every country in Western civilization will be represented. So far there is no indication that U. S. A. will participate in the Congress, which is fixed for May 30 to June 4. In view of many pressing problems upon which Europe—Britain in particular—would like to be assured of American cooperation, something should be done to make this an occasion for "clearing the air."

An Opportunity for America

Congresses, in the usual way, are not functions which appeal to the true man of business: their immediate utility is not always apparent. But in this instance particularly, the opportunity is one which should not be missed by U. S. A. in view of present trends affecting Anglo-American relations in the field of entertainment.

There is, for instance, the outstanding situation arising from the K. R. S. attitude—understood to have the full approval of the big executives in America—towards the attempt to launch a cooperative booking plan for independent British theatre owners. In view of the fact that a large membership has been enrolled by the Cooperative Society, a few explanations direct from a representative American might help to assuage a growing feeling that the distributors here are against combines only when they do not happen themselves to have hold of the reins.

Censorship Issue Urgent

A still more pressing question affects censorship. This is daily growing more and more urgent.

I have spoken to many exhibitors on the matter, and they are solidly in line with MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S plea for a stringent adherence to the Code. The tendency on the part of the larger American concerns—imitated to a large extent by the British producer—to respect the terms of the Code only when it suits themselves, is likely almost immediately to have its direct effect on the box office.

America should appreciate that the British Board of Film Censors, a non-statutory body supported by trade contribution, although by no means unassailable as regards its mechanical assembly, at present classifies such films as it cares to certify, into two categories. The "A" class, according to recommendations in a recent Home Office governmental circular, should be deemed fit for exhibition to adult audiences, and to juveniles under the age of 16 if accompanied by responsible guardian. The "U" class is held fit for general exhibition to all classes without condition as to age.

But the final decision regarding conditions under which the censors' certificate shall operate locally, depends upon local licensing authorities, to whom National Government has long since deputed far-reaching powers. Some months ago an influential local body, operating in Liverpool, right in the center of a belt of thickly cinemaized country, decided to fly in the face of recent Home Office advice, and to regard all "A" films as totally unfit for juveniles to witness, whether or not they are accompanied by adult guardians or parents.

They attached this condition to cinema licenses which they issued. The whole industry was shaken up, for this meant not only a heavy loss of child patronage, but a severe depletion also of general attendance. It was obvious that parents unable to take their children with them to the show might patronize other forms of entertainment or find cinemas in adjacent territories where no such condition obtained.

Exhibitors' Appeal Fails

The C. E. A. appealed to the licensing magistrates, who remained adamant; meanwhile agitation among educational and welfare organizations for the extension of the condition to other districts grew menacingly.

The C. E. A., contemplating legal process to challenge the magistrate's right to ignore Home Office recommendations, was advised by Sir John Simon, eminent K. C. and now a member of Government, that they had no hope of success if they did so. Consequently the matter quietly was dropped, and the trade built its hopes on the good sense of other local authorities.

During the past week three other bodies of local magistrates have adopted the Liverpool condition, and there is now widespread agitation against children in any district being permitted to see "A" films under any condition.

And Others May Act

The cinema industry, already hard hit by heavy taxation and the general industrial situation, is threatened with a further source of leakage. It is almost impossible to estimate the probable loss to the whole industry if this "dry rot" spreads, but it is certain to be many thousands of pounds a year, even if matters remain as they are at the moment, and it is almost certain they will not, for publicity daily is turning the attention of further local bodies to the condition which first started in Liverpool.

How can America help? I am no believer in the dictum that America is to blame for every ill from which the world may suffer. But in this instance she must take her share of the blame, although that share happens to be a big one. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has deplored what once was described as the "Sin and Success" series of films which have dodged the American Code within the past year or so.

Sees Irreparable Harm

The executives of the American studios will live to appreciate that this policy is a fight against tendencies which, if persisted in, cannot fail to do irreparable harm to Hollywood, if not to the motion picture as a world entertainment force.

At least this is so in regard to England. In this country we do not like our children to follow the courses of prostitution, even though degradation is followed by salvation and the vicarious atonement of love. We do not even like our children to digest the codes of honor (?) peculiar to Chicagoan gunmen, or to listen to "smut," however deftly put over by use of double entendre.

Not Prudes, But—

As a race we are not prudes, but in the mass we are possessed of an inborn sense of delicacy, and we draw a limit. That limit has long since been passed by the leading American concerns, and "Code" would be a good word for them to ponder. The British Censor has already made his representations; he has also expressed himself by cutting—almost to death—such pictures as "Susan Lenox—Her Fall and Rise," which had to be retitled here "The Rise of Helga." Exhibitors have expressed themselves positively on such films as "Susan" and "Under Eighteen," where prostitution is suggested as a possible means of escape from drudgery. Too many British girls have to face drudgery, and there are already too many "unfortunates." "Waterloo Bridge," to quote examples, went just as far as the British public will stand for.

If U. S. will keep down the "sin," her British distributors will be able to send up the "success." And if a fairly clean level of entertainment can be assured, escape from new conditions can be effected in part on this side, by the classification of a greater proportion of films under the "U" instead of the "A" category.

If anyone in U. S. A. is in doubt concerning the popularity of such a move, with British theatres, let the Hays organization send over a man capable of testing feeling at the forthcoming Congress.

Why not Will Hays himself? It is too long he has been regarded as a man with a grudge against Britain. Why cannot he forget the past and take up with the future?

STANDING ROOM AGAIN

RKO-Franklin Deal Unlikely; Beck Inactive

Little probability of a deal materializing between RKO and Harold B. Franklin for managing direction of the former Orpheum theatres is seen by representatives of RKO who were willing to comment on the current report that Franklin would further discuss such a contract with Hiram Brown in California. Franklin left New York for the Coast early this week.

It was pointed out at the RKO home office that assignment of Franklin to the direction of the Orpheum group would entail a split-up of the RKO circuit and a division of authority between Franklin and Joe Plunkett. Neither eventuality is given serious consideration by RKO home office executives. It was admitted, however, that some discussion of a post for Franklin had occurred, prompted by suggestions from RKO stockholders in the West and Midwest, where the former Orpheum theatres are located. Approximately one-third of the houses are closed and factions of western stockholders have urged that they be reopened. RKO is reported to have been unwilling to accede to Franklin's terms.

Martin Beck, former head of the Orpheum circuit, who controls 49 per cent of the stock of the RKO Palace Theatre, New York, has relinquished the active directorial authority over the Palace which he assumed less than a month ago. Operating policies inaugurated by Beck at the Palace failed to improve the theatre's grosses after a brief try-out, and the RKO executive withdrew from active participation, permitting the theatre's former policies to be reinstated.

Radio To Handle Sales in Canada

Eight Radio Pictures exchanges in Canada will distribute Radio and RKO Pathe product in the Dominion beginning with the release of the 1932-33 product, probably in June. Regal Films, Ltd., which handles the distribution at present, has a contract calling for product distribution up to and including the 1931-32 releases, according to P. C. Taylor, managing director in Canada for RKO. This contract will not be renewed.

The RKO sales staff in the Dominion will be augmented if conditions warrant such a step, said Taylor. The market there is equally as good potentially as in the United States for short subjects, which, under the RKO Pathe name, will also be released in Canada by Radio. The difficulty, however, as pointed out by Taylor, is the alarming increase of double-featuring throughout the country, which will mean, if it continues as appears likely at the moment, will result in inability to successfully market short subjects and in correspondingly lower rentals on features.

Numerous theatres in Canada are closing, but for the most part they include "silent" houses, whose owners have not the necessary funds to provide sound equipment installations.

FILMS IN EDUCATION CONFERENCE THEME

Specialized Pictures Are Discussed at Conference of Board of Review; Judge Davies Presides at Meeting

The eighth annual conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures opened in New York last Thursday to discuss "Special Functions of the Motion Picture in Recreation and Education." Delegates attended a private screening at the Warner home office in the morning and gathered Thursday afternoon at convention headquarters in the Hotel Pennsylvania where Judge John R. Davies, Board chairman, formally opened the initial session, a discussion pertaining to "Functions and Uses of the Motion Picture in Education." Dr. Louis I. Harris, of the executive committee, presided and the speakers included:

Dr. Wallace W. Atwood, President, Clark University: "How the Specialized Motion Picture is Being Developed"; Miss E. Winifred Crawford, Director of Visual Education, Montclair, N. J., Schools and Instructor, Visual Education, State Teachers College, Montclair: "What the Motion Picture Means to Visual Education"; Mrs. Marguerite E. Schwarzman, Director, Children's Laboratories and Instructor, New York University Institute of Education: "Vitalized Learning in Science"; Miss Rita Hochheimer, Acting Director of Visual Instruction, New York City Board of Education: "The Motion Picture as a Teaching Device in the New York Public Schools."

On Thursday evening, members attended a demonstration of specialized films for teaching, at the Fox home office on Tenth Avenue. Several subjects in the Fox Movietone "School Series" were presented under guidance of Glen Griswold, vice-president of Fox, and Mrs. Grace Allen Bangs, director of the Women's Bureau of the Fox Educational Department.

Discussions were resumed at the Pennsylvania on Friday morning when LeRoy E. Bowman, of the Child Study Association and a member of the executive committee of the National Board launched a discourse on "The Education of Public Opinion Regarding the Specialized Motion Picture." Speakers were:

Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, Department of Geology, Harvard University: "Testing Responses to Experimental Specialized Films"; Mr. F. S. Mathewson, Supt. of Recreation, Union Co. (N. J.) Park Commission: "The Specialized Use of Motion Pictures in Public Recreation"; Mrs. Eva d'B. Hansl, Staff Association, White House Conference: "The Motion Picture and Parent Education"; Mrs. R. R. Purcell, Motion Picture Chairman, New York Parent-Teacher Association: "The Interest of the Parent-Teacher Association in Motion Pictures."

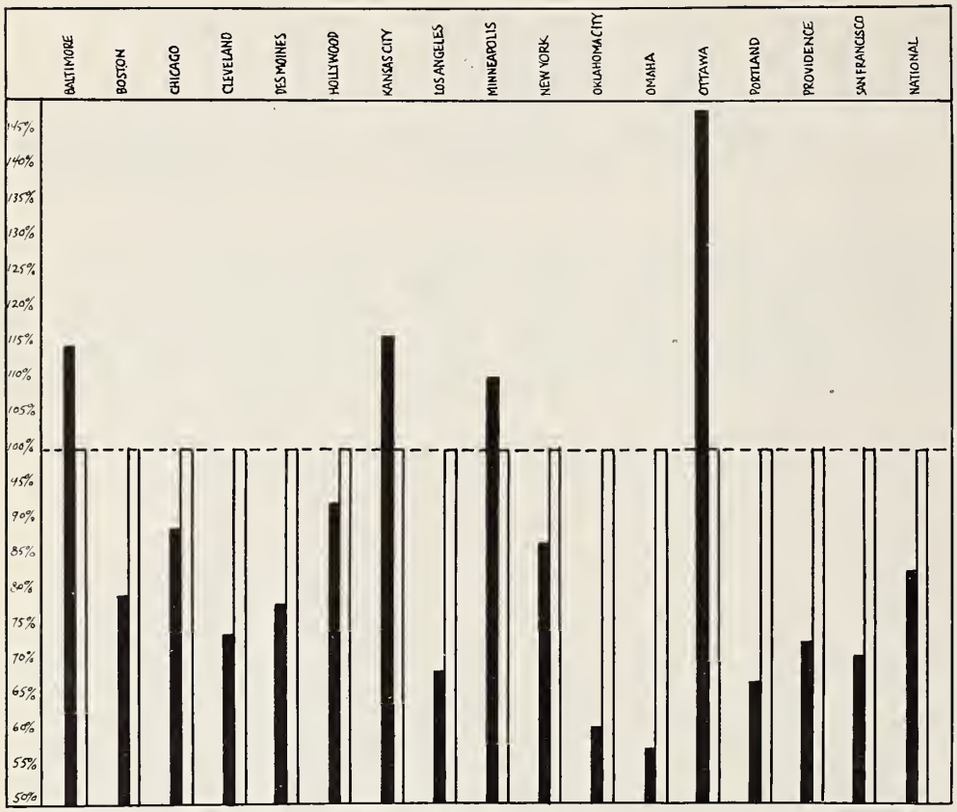
The highlight of the two-day conference was the luncheon on Friday. At the dais were Jean Harlow, Nancy Carroll, Frau Dhyrenfurth, Robert Shippey, Mary Kennedy, John M. Casey, censor of Boston; Judge John Davies, Board president; Terry Ramsaye, Morris L. Ernst, jurist and principal speaker, who discussed censorship of the screen; Deems Taylor, music critic, Leslie Howard, Theresa Helburn, of the Theatre Guild and others. Judge Davies presided and in his introductory remarks regarding speakers and the Board's activities, mentioned Wilton Barrett, executive secretary, as being THE National Board.

Several hundred clubwomen who are affiliated with the Board in one way or another and who traveled to New York from points far and wide looking for helpfulness with their local motion picture and reviewing problems at the regular board sessions and at the annual luncheon, were somewhat surprised when they heard Theresa Helburn, of the Theatre Guild, tell them that "movies are bad, because they destroy the habit of theatre-going!" The theatre Guild is an organization sponsoring plays for New York and for a limited number of road showings.

They also heard Morris L. Ernst, jurist, say that "movies are an outlet for the sadism that is in most of us!"

Friday afternoon, following the luncheon, there was a demonstration of the educational talking pictures of Erpi., with W. A. Bach, manager of the non-theatrical department presiding.

Raise $15,000 To Continue Battle



The Iowa and Nebraska independent theatre owners, branch of Allied States, in recent convention in Omaha, voted to raise $15,000 to continue their legal action against alleged monopolistic business practices of the major producer-distributor companies.

Allied officers in attendance demanded that the producers be "chased out of the exhibition end of the business," suggesting that they turn their attention to the making of better pictures. The Nebraska and Iowa organizations formally merged.

Of immediate interest to the combined group is the prosecution of the action known as the Youngclaus suit, named after William N. Youngclaus, Madison, Nebr., owner, who is described as carrying on a battle for existence by small town exhibitors.

Clifford L. Niles, Anomosa, Iowa, was elected president of the combined unit; W. H. Ostenberg was chosen vice president. Directors elected were: Harry E. Schiller, F. C. Luchsinger, Ludy Boston, Thomas Brown. Retaining directors' posts are N. C. Rice, Ernest Ellsworth, Harry Hiernsteiner.

Lester Martin was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

Box office receipts for the week ended January 2, as compiled by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, are contrasted with the receipts for the same week last year, in the above graph. The heavy black columns represent receipts in the designated cities for the week this year, while the 100 per cent verticals are the receipts in the same week last year. Reference to the "National" column shows that the average for all the cities for the week this year was 83 per cent of the average for the same period in 1931. The graph also demonstrates that the represented theatres of only four cities exceeded the business they did in the same week last year.

Capital Seat Bill Passes In Senate

Legislation regulating Washington motion picture houses was passed by the Senate on Tuesday with little debate and without a record vote and now goes to the House of Representatives.

The bill was introduced by Senator Carey of Wyoming and is designed to prevent misrepresentation by theatres of the availability of seats and requires the houses to install signs in box office windows which will show whether seats are available, in addition to having oral announcements by an employee, as at present.

A provision in the bill prohibiting the sale of tickets when no seats were available was eliminated through the efforts of A. Julian Brylawski, president of the District of Columbia association of theatre owners. Decided opposition to this provision was offered by Brylawski and other theatre men at a hearing on the bill last week, it being pointed out that audiences come in waves and that for a short time each day the houses are crowded, but that it is rarely impossible to secure a seat before the end of a performance.

As now written, the bill is held to be of negligible harm to the theatres.

Women Act After McGoldrick Talk

Preliminary plans for the formation of a women's committee for Friday night "family motion pictures" in New Rochelle, N. Y., have resulted from a talk which Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of the School and Screen department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, gave recently before representatives of the League of Women's Organizations in the city.

Mrs. McGoldrick, who is also chairman of the motion picture bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, said, "I have spent 10 years trying to improve motion pictures, and I have come to the conclusion that I could spend 10 years more trying to improve audiences." She explained that in the last analysis it is the audience which holds the final decision on the type of picture to be shown. The producers are business men, she said, and will give the public what it wants; they will produce the kind of picture that has box-office appeal.

The speaker cited examples of films of acknowledged merit which failed at the box-office, while others, not nearly as noteworthy, were great successes financially. Mrs. McGoldrick noted numerous examples of the great success achieved with the "family night" showings.

General Theatres Holders Establish Protective Group

A protective committee has been formed for the 6 per cent 10-year convertible debentures of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., of which $29,950,000 are outstanding. The committee is said to be working in anticipation of a possible default on the April 1 interest payment, though there has been no default as yet. The bonds are currently selling on the New York Stock Exchange at less than their annual coupon rate.

The committee is composed of Arthur Peck, of Harper & Turner, Philadelphia; Harry S. Durand, Mackay & Company, New York; Conrad H. Poppenhusen, of Poppenhusen, Johnston, Thompson & Cole, Chicago. Marvyn Scudder, New York, is committee secretary, and Wollman & Wollman and Albert G. Starr are its counsel.

It is understood the committee will proceed with plans for a readjustment, though details of its plan have not been disclosed. Debenture holders have been notified that they may deposit their debentures on or before April 15, 1932, with the Manufacturers' Trust Company, which has been designated as the depositary by the committee.

Hays Office Denies Nagel Censor Talk

The why and wherefore of Conrad Nagel's authority to tell the public that the Hays organization favors a federal motion picture censorship board has developed into a deep, dark mystery.

Nagel, it appears, is touring the country in connection with a vaudeville act and in many key cities he is understood to have addressed representatives of women's organizations at luncheon. In connection with a current engagement at Loew's in Cleveland, Nagel spoke before 150 women from practically every organization in the town and told them that a federal censorship board would be welcomed by the Hays organization, because it would eliminate the paradox of a picture being all right for the morals of one state and harmful for the morals of another. To this the Hays organization issued a general denial. That association has not—and does not—favor federal censorship, nor any other type of censorship, for that matter, said an executive of the MPPDA, who appeared at a loss to explain the source of Nagel's authority to say otherwise.

Personal prejudice controls censorship in its present method of operation, Nagel told the clubwomen. He advised the group that "Hollywood does everything to improve pictures, but artistic successes have proven box office failures."

"Prestige" Opens February 12

"Prestige," the RKO Pathe Ann Harding vehicle, which was directed by Tay Garnett, is scheduled to open in Hollywood on February 12.

Naming Alperson Successor Awaits Return of Morris

E. L. Alperson, former general sales manager for Warner-First National, and Edward Peskay, resigned on Tuesday as Eastern division manager for the Warner theatre circuit, are planning jointly to enter the exhibition field in the Middlewest, it was learned late Wednesday night. Any negotiations for Alperson to join Spyros Skouras are reported off.

The duties of Edward L. Alperson, who suddenly resigned last Thursday as general sales manager of Warner-First National, a post he assumed last October 23, are temporarily being handled by Major Albert L. Warner, treasurer, pending the return of Sam E. Morris from Europe in three or four weeks. A successor will probably be appointed at that time.

Alperson's future plans are uncertain. Claiming that he has discussed no propositions, he plans a vacation of several weeks in Florida or Cuba. He is expected to leave the home office at the end of this week. Reports, however, are to the effect that he will join Skouras Brothers, though Spyros Skouras has denied them. Reports have him returning to film buying, with which he was formerly occupied.

The personnel arrangement in force before Alperson resigned, is expected to be maintained, with Gradwell L. Sears in charge of sales in the West and A. W. Smith in the East.

With the reorganized distribution department described by the company this week as "functioning smoothly," a release order of seven new Warner pictures has been revised and two new pictures designed as specials are being added to the program. The additions, both of which will be sold individually, are Ruth Chatterton's "The Rich Are Always With Us" and "The Crowd Roars," starring James Cagney and Joan Blondell.

Revision of release dates includes: "The Man Who Played God," February 13; "Slice of Life," February 5; "Playgirl," March 12; "Beauty and the Beast," March 19, and "It's Tough to be Famous," March 27.

"Chic" Sale in Personal Appearances

"Chic" Sale starts a personal appearance road tour at Warner theatres on January 29 when he will open at Pittsburgh, followed by Washington on February 20, then Philadelphia and other Eastern keys. The Leo Morrison organization, which handles Sale and other stars, this week signed Joe Rivkin as Eastern representative.

Abe Schnitzer at Warners

Abe Schnitzer, former RKO short subject sales head, has moved over to the Warner home office, attached to the sales staff.

GUILD DENIES MOVE TO MAKE PICTURES

Points to Sale of Film Rights to "Strange Interlude," "Reunion in Vienna" and "R. U. R.," As Its Best Screen Material

The New York Theatre Guild within recent weeks has disposed of motion picture rights to three of its best known plays, the Guild announced in denying reports from the West Coast that it again was considering entering into motion picture production.

Picture rights to "Strange Interlude" and "Reunion in Vienna" have been sold to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Paramount has acquired the rights to the Guild's "R. U. R." Norma Shearer, it is understood, will be starred in "Strange Interlude," while Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne will make "Reunion in Vienna," in which they are appearing currently in New York. It will be their second Metro picture, their first having been "The Guardsman."

The Guild offices described the three plays which were sold within the past two weeks as among their best potential picture material, and pointed out that had the Guild any intention of entering into picture producton it would not have disposed of any of them. In addition, a spokesman for the Guild said that its annual production quota of six plays for New York and five for the road utilized the Guild's entire attention and facilities, and that the present Guild organization could not be adapted to picture production.

About two years ago the Guild carried on some negotiations with several picture companies by which the Guild would have provided scripts, casts and direction, with the production organization, providing the studio facilities and financing, had the production plans been consummated. They were abandoned after only preliminary discussion. No revival of those negotiations has taken place or is in prospect, it was said at the Guild offices.

The reports of the Guild's plans to enter picture production emanated from Los Angeles and were carried on financial news wires.

American Newsreel Will Start in March

The American Newsreel, a new bi-weekly issue which will be edited and announced by Lowell Thomas, will make its first appearance shortly after March 1, according to an announcement made this week by Harry A. McCorry, vice-president in charge. Charles Kranz is general sales manager.

Reports that the newsreel would be supplied its footage by Kinograms were denied at the new organization's offices in the General Motors Building, New York. Kinograms controls a large film library, which has been in disuse since the organization went into receivership early in December. In denying the Kinograms report, it was stated that American Newsreel will obtain its footage from its own organization, augmented by open market purchasing from free lance cameramen where advisable. A camera staff of about 30, located at strategic points here and abroad, already has been organized and will be enlarged before the initial distribution of the reel, it was said.

Lowell Thomas, who will give the running dialogue for the reel, is best known at present as the radio voice of the Literary Digest through conducting the daily broadcasts for that publication. He is the author of a number of books on modern history, a former newspaperman of wide experience, fiction writer, magazine editor and lecturer.

Nebraska Court Holds Copyright Law Applicable

Motions by J. H. Hungerford, of Friend, Neb., to dismiss complaints filed by Fox and Metro for infringements of copyright arising out of unauthorized holding over of pictures, upon the ground that the matters were purely contractual and the copyright law was not applicable, were denied by Judge Thomas C. Munger of the U. S. District Court for the District of Nebraska.

Sol Brill Is Dead After Long Fight

Sol Brill, one of the most widely known exhibitors in the Greater New York territory, died at his New York home Wednesday following a lengthy illness.

Brill, who had been an exhibitor for 27 years, opened his first theatre in 1905, in Brooklyn. A New York circuit was rapidly built up thereafter with acquisitions of other theatres in Brooklyn and in Manhattan. He was operating 15 houses.

Four Branch Offices Open For New Trailer Company

Four branch offices have been opened up for distribution of Supreme Screen Service trailers. The offices are in New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Detroit. The firm has animated trailers with voice, music and sound effects, the subjects running from 90 to 130 feet.

Lester Martin in New York

Lester F. Martin, secretary and treasurer of the Allied Theatre Owners of Nebraska, Cooperative, Inc., arrived in New York this week for a brief visit.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

Directors of the newly formed Independent Film Producers Association met this week in the offices of Phil Goldstone to map out a definite program of procedure and draft a form of bylaws for governing the organization.

The board, consisting of M. H. Hoffman, C. C. Burr, Ralph Like, Larry Darmour. Morris Schlank, Phil Goldstone, Nat Levine, Al Mannon and Burton King, decided to present a solid front against the ills of the industry affecting the independent producer. Chief among the problems confronting the industry, according to beliefs of the association, is the matter of labor pay adjustments. While the independents are not so deeply concerned over this as large companies, they have adopted the attitude of "watchful waiting" on the outcome of negotiations between the Association of Motion Picture Producers and the unions.

Women's clubs, colleges and high schools are soliciting motion picture directors, writers and studio executives to address their groups and classes for enlightenment on motion picture technique and other phases of making motion pictures. Al Rogell recently addressed more than 500 students of the Hollywood high school; Rouben Mamoulian spent a morning in giving a lecture on the making of pictures before the Motion Picture Conference of the California Federation of Women's Clubs.

Sol Lesser, now engaged in producing for the independent market, has employed Edward Ralph as production manager and Tom Geraghty to head the editorial department. Carl Heim is film editor; Wedgwood Nowell in charge of sound recording, E. H. Messer, auditor, and Florence Ryan in charge of the research department.

Lesser just completed his first feature based on the fishing expeditions of Zane Grey, titled "Zane Grey's South Sea Adventures."

Mack Sennett is winding up final preparations to film "Mack Sennett's Road Show," which promises to be the most pretentious production yet attempted by this veteran producer.

According to present plans, the production will be released in 12 reels and contain an all-star cast of the outstanding screen comics available.

Ramon Novarro, one of the screen's romantic lovers for many years and lately noted for his prowess as an opera singer will soon be seen on the screen as a football hero if MGM adheres closely to the Francis Wallace novel, "Huddle."

Sam Rork has made no definite tieup with Columbia for the release of his proposed Clara Bow pictures but instead is dickering with RKO for a unit working arrangement similar to that held by Charles Rogers.

If the Rork deal goes through, it will substantiate past rumors of RKO going in for independent unit production similar to that operated by First National prior to selling out to Warner Brothers.

Mae Clarke and Lew Ayres will be costarred in "Night Club" by Universal. . . . Donald Cook's salary for a part in "So Big" at Warners was more than they wanted to pay so he declined the offer in favor of Hardy Albright, who took the job for less. . . . J. G. Hawks, former screen author, has organized an independent company for making feature length productions. The staff consists of Reginald Barker, Charles Stallings, Percy Hillburn and Robert Kern. The product will carry the trade name "Adventure Films." . . . Mitzi Green has followed the footsteps of Rin-Tin-Tin in going on the NBC network endorsing and ballyhooing Nestle's food. . . .

Milliken Answers British Charges

Associated Press this week reported a cable from London to the effect that a magistrate named K. T. Metcalfe, who had three boys up before him, stated:

"These infernal American films are doing more harm than anything else. They are pernicious. They are worse than drink or betting on horses and dogs. They are ruining little chaps like these."

Immediately there was issued by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, a statement in defense of American film exports to Great Britain. Milliken said:

"Over and over we have investigated statements similar to this and in no specific instance have we ever been able to find that American motion pictures induced crime in minors or adults.

"The very success abroad of American films makes them a natural target. Well informed British opinion, however, is represented by such comments as that of Colonel Joseph Wedgwood, members of the committee of the House of Commons, in reference to a charge similar to that of Magistrate Metcalfe:

"No, sir, that's all wrong. American morality on and off the films is quite all right. They are the most straight-laced people in the Universe. Anything that gets put over in America we shan't criticize from the standpoint of morality."

"Philip Snowden, distinguished English statesman recently said:

" 'It would be a lamentable thing if the United States stops sending films."

"It is interesting to note that Australian censor board reports show fifty per cent more cuts in British films than in American films and that a committee of the Indian Parliament completely cleared American films of any deleterious effect on Indian morals.

"As is well known in this country, punishment always follows crime in American motion pictures and the penalties of wrongdoing are clearly portrayed. Distinguished psychologists in great number have agreed that the result coincides with our careful intent in the matter."

Freuler to Visit Exchanges On His Trip to the Coast

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, will make a complete swing of his affiliated exchanges when he leaves New York, probably at the end of this week.

Freuler's ultimate objective is the West Coast where he plans to spend some time with Burton King, Big 4's production supervisor, completing arrangements on the present schedule and in lining up stories, names and studio facilities for 1932-1933.

Edward L. Klein, who handles Big 4 product on the European Continent, has been appointed foreign representative for Big 4 for the British Isles on the new series of Westerns and melodramas.

Klein has left Paris for London.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from key cities of the country here register a fair recovery from the previous week's total. For the calendar week ending January 23, the total reached $2,467,120, marking an increase of $51,359 over the preceding calendar week, ended January 16, when a total figure of $2,415,761 was recorded. Listed in the last report are 182 theatres in 30 key cities, while 183 theatres, also in 30 cities, were represented in the preceding compilation. Three new high individual figures are indicated in the present record, and two new low individual figures, which compares favorably with one new "high" and seven new "lows" for the week ended January 16.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"THE MAN I KILLED," while unquestionably a great piece of direction and acting, is altogether too actionless to roll up S.R.O. records for the outlying spots. Big towns should flock to see it and get by with big grosses but the smaller towns and cities won't take to it the same way.

The title is worth a million dollars for selling purposes. 'Most any conceivable gag will fit it like a glove and even though we sounded a warning about its business possibilities for the smaller spots, it at least offers you a title that can be responsible in no small measure for getting 'way above the average business. The larger cities won't find the going rough and can lay their plans accordingly, but the smaller towns should capitalize on that title as much as possible, selling it so strong that it will get the engagement off to a flying start, which may result in a far better gross than ordinarily might be expected.

Three outstanding performances, besides Lubitsch's direction, make this one of the finest pictures released, from the artistic angle. Lionel Barrymore is marvelous and he is ably seconded by Nancy Carroll and Phillips Holmes. Others in the cast are O.K. but not of value for selling purposes.

In "audience value" the class of patronage appreciating the better things in screen entertainment will vote it a hundred per cent. The story holds you from start to finish. The director's style of making a dramatic scene convincing without resorting to action is splendid, but may not be appreciated by the customers on Main Street.

"The Man I Killed" will go down as one of the best pictures of the year, but we doubt whether it will shatter any records for country-wide receipts. Not much use for kids, but anywhere else OK. Make that title bring them flocking to your theatre. Strong selling should be a great factor in determining your final figures at the b.o.

"CHARLIE CHAN'S CHANCE" is our opinion of what the average theatre-goer of today wants in the way of entertainment. It is interesting, absorbing and not too heavy. The characters are likable and natural, and you are kept on edge trying to figure out who really killed the victim.

Title strength depends on whether you've played any of the previous "Chan" pictures. If so, use them as a basis for your present campaign, plus, of course, the many worthwhile slants bearing on this particular picture. But even if the title is strange to your community you can build up a splendid newspaper series via your advertising that ought to click at the box office.

Names are plentiful and certainly some of them should mean something in your house. There are Warner Oland, H. B. Warner, James Kirkwood, Marian Nixon and Linda Watkins. But go easy as to Linda; her part is too light to warrant billing.

Mystery pictures always have held a fascination for the majority of patrons and here you have one that is well done and holding up the mystery until the very end. Love interest is just strong enough to make it worth while, but real interest centers around Chan and his solving of the riddle. Shots of cross-Atlantic telephone conversation between the Scotland Yard detective in New York and his headquarters in London are likewise interesting.

Nothing objectionable for the kids; on the contrary the detective angle will appeal to them. OK also for Sunday. It's just a matter of selling this one to do real business. Get behind it and give it all you've got. It will more than satisfy them after they buy a ticket.

"COCK OF THE AIR." Why Howard Hughes should release this for a Broadway run is a mystery. Had he been at the Rialto on Times Square and listened to some of the comment while the picture was being projected he, too, would have wondered why.

The title might be worked up because of its air slants, but we advise going very easy. If you start selling them on the idea that they'll see a great picture they'll never forgive you the deception. Sell it for what it is—a crazy picture with a couple of laughs. Maybe a good Laurel and Hardy, rating split honors in your billing, will save the day. About the only idea it conveys is that a woman made a monkey out of the army and the war.

"NO ONE MAN," we regret to advise, is just mediocre screen fare. Paramount's penchant for stories about divorcees, idle rich and over-luxurious sets is a mistake. The small town still thinks the over-wealthy life as portrayed on the screen is a lot of bunk.

The title can be played around with to create interest, but to do so may require an objectionable slant. While they give a fairly good account of themselves in the picture the various names have little b.o. appeal for the marquee.

Most spots are cautioned to screen this one before framing a campaign. This may avoid touching on angles that are not healthy for your particular town; on the other hand, it may reveal selling angles that can help you get it across to at least average business.

N.G. for kids or Sundays. Wherever else used it will require plenty of help in the way of selling and support.

Steady Company

Comedy-Drama

(Universal)

(Seen in Hollywood)

Universal kicks over the traces of tradition in presenting "Steady Company" without the aid of a star or less prominent box office name to put it over. In this instance the producers have succeeded in delivering all around screen entertainment, it was indicated by the reception given its first public showing at the Fairfax theatre recently.

While the picture succeeds in telling a simple story of youth's conquest for love, the usual construction of plot is sacrificed in characterizing a small group of people involved in a short chapter of life, and in doing so, one's interest becomes attached to the actions of the characters more than guessing what the final outcome of the story will be.

Henry Armetta dominates the entire picture by what was termed a superb portrayal of the Italian shoemaker, and J. Farrell MacDonald was praised for his short but very effective performance of the down and out prize fight champion, which leaves the balance of the acting honors to be divided between Norman Foster, June Clyde and Zasu Pitts. Miss Clyde gives one of the best dramatic performances of her career, it was thought, which does much to counterbalance the delightful and hilarious comedy elements of the picture. Norman Foster was not called to exert himself in acting his part of the truckdriving aspirant for pugilistic fame, but instead secured the most out of the part by acting his natural self. As for Zasu Pitts, she brought down the house with laughs by her usual characterization of the spinster, each time she appeared on the screen.

As for the technical side of the production, Edward Luddy received praise and credit for making his characters live their parts and by bringing out the little characteristics that one would observe had he lived with them. Novel situations aid the picture in sustaining interest.

The photography in this offering was thought rather below par.

Produced and distributed by Universal Pictures Original screen story by Earl Snell. Directed by Edward Luddy. Photographer, Charles Stumar.

Cock of the Air

(United Artists)

War-time Comedy

Howard Hughes takes to comedy here, with one or two aerial sequences and Chester Morris in the uniform of an American aviation officer in the war, to maintain the implication of the title.

Morris is the heart-crushing hero who meets his waterloo in the person of the little but splendidly clothed Lilli de Rosseau, French actress, played by Billie Dove, who, incidentally, does not receive top billing and publicity in press material.

The comedy and slight story opens with a rather amusing situation. A conference of ambassadors in Paris decide, with much pomp and ceremony, that Billie must depart from Paris, since her attraction is such that generals of the high command leave the front and suffering troops to escort her to teas and the like. She goes to Italy and much footage of carnival scenes in Venice. There too, comes Morris, on duty but mostly concerned with the opposite sex. They meet; Morris, we must understand, falls completely under the spell of the actress and she leads him on in an unmistakable manner.

What he wants, and what she refuses to give him, is all too obvious, but only by suggestion. When she learns that an understudy in Paris has been captivating audiences in her role as Joan of Arc, she persuades Morris to fly her back to the French capital, though it makes him AWOL. His orderly, played by Matt Moore, who offers much of the comedy, follows in another plane, and presents some fairly effective comedy in the air. Billie had told Morris, when he had avowed his love, that she wanted a champaigne cocktail at a French hotel. She gets it, and several others, until the pair finish the job by indulging in some rough and tumble and general slapstick in the suite he had engaged.

Following the direction in a note she leaves, he goes to an address, finds it the stage door of a theatre, and discovers his unknown as a famous actress. She comes into the dressing room clad in the armor in which she had played her last scene, and the picture ends, as expected.

A few of the lines were thought to be clever; a few of the situations were thought to be amusing and drew laughs at the New York Rialto, but on the whole the story was termed insubstantial, and there was little or no opportunity for real histrionic effort in any direction.

Produced by Howard Hughes. Distributed by United Artists. Directed by Tom Buckingham. Story by Robert E. Sherwood and Charles Lederer. Dialogue by Charles Lederer. Editor, W. Duncan Mansfield. Cameraman, Lucien Andriot. Sound, Frank Grenzbach. Musical score, Alfred Newman. Release date, January 23, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

Football Classic Screened

Harry Beaumont, Sam Wood and Si Masters went out to South Bend, Ind., one Saturday afternoon last fall and took with them a pair or so of cameras and the necessary sound recording equipment. It was a memorable day in the annals of football for the season of 1931, recently deceased, because the southern California lads, surprisingly and smashingly turned the tables on a Notre Dame outfit long thought completely invincible. The score was 16-14, and the Western boys deserved it, sporting history records.

In five reels which are packed with the sort of football action and reaction which delights the heart and thrills the head of the average football fan, of which there are reputed to be many extant, the three cinematic gentlemen recorded all the speed and fury of the game, from the whistle which started the fuss to the gun which called a halt.

In particular are shown all the scoring plays, and those which directly led to scores. Well and unquestionably does the film record attest the superiority of the California team on that Saturday, at least in the final quarter. Vividly and in detail is seen the savage, smashing attack which would not be forestalled, and which resulted in the California victory. Atmosphere of a truly authentic nature is amply supplied by the cheering multitudes who were present in tumultous numbers. The synchronization was aptly described as of excellent quality. Braven Dyer handles the accompanying announcing assignment in good style.

Discarded Lovers

(Tower Productions)

Mystery

A new independent producing company, Tower Productions, of which Joseph Simmonds is president, offers here its first cinematic effort, a mystery, thought well sustained in the matter of suspense situations and the complicated manner in which suspicion falls upon some five or six different people in the course of the plot. It was thought favorably to compare with the similar productions of major producers.

Fred Newmeyer handled the direction in what was thought to be an able manner; the cast, composed of well known and capable feature players, did its part, it was noted, in a sincere and satisfactory fashion. Numerous coincidences which spot the unfolding of the yarn, do not detract in any great measure from the interest.

Natalie Moorehead plays the film actress, seen in the opening sequence on the studio set. Her lovers, past and present, upon whom the shadow of guilt falls, include a director, scenario writer, an ex-husband, a reporter. Following an affair subsequent to the completion of production, Miss Moorehead is found murdered in a parked automobile. J. Farrell MacDonald, as the chief of detectives, takes charge of the case. Ensue complications not dissimilar to the general run of this type of film story. The reporter offers to solve the mystery if the completed picture is screened in the presence of all those involved in the case. A sequence pictures the small and select audience sitting tense as the picture is shown. One in particular seems greatly agitated, until finally he, incidentally the least suspected, breaks out with a highly melodramatic confession, which was thought to have weakened the film as a whole.

Produced and distributed by Tower Productions. Directed by Fred Newmeyer. Author, Edward T. Lowe. Dialogue by Edward T. Lowe. Adapted by Arthur T. Hoerl. Edited by Charles Hunt. Cameraman, William Hyer. Recording engineer, Carson Jowett. Release date, January 20, 1932. Running time, 59 minutes.

Bridegroom for Two

(B. I. P. America)

Farce Comedy

B.I.P. America, distributing in this country for British International Pictures, which produces at its studios, Elstree, outside London, offers a farce comedy, which was thought to be clever, amusing and highly entertaining.

It is a humorous complication of two brides and one bridegroom, tied in a matrimonial knot. Gene Gerrard plays the unfortunate groom and Muriel Angelus and Rita Page the actual bride and the almost bride, respectively.

When Gerrard awakes on his wedding morning with a bad hangover, he is not a little surprised to find a girl, Miss Angelus, in his bed and producing a marriage certificate to prove her implication. His supposed-to-be is a gold digger whose father is forcing the marriage as the result of a harmless kiss that wasn't. Dennis Wyndham, pugilist, bursts in and proclaims Miss Angelus his girl. The two fight, roll off a balcony into the water and are last seen going down for the third time.

Police arrive and an inquiry, in the form of a seance, ensues. Gerrard returns, dripping wet and hides in a closet. Wyndham does likewise and hides in the cellar. Wrapped in a sheet, Gerrard goes down for a bottle or two and Wyndham flees screaming, as the seance is broken up in consternation.

The truth is revealed finally and George decides he will stick with his unexpected wife, until he finds several thousand dollars mysteriously disappeared. He accuses Miss Angelus, and the girl dashes out of the house, returning to her former job as a cabaret performer. Wyndham, still her friend, discovers that the gold-digger's father had appropriated the cash, and a reconciliation in amusing fashion concludes the film.

Western

The youngsters usually like the subject matter and the manner of performance of this type of western, which, however much it may be cut to an elderly pattern, yet seems ever to please the future man, and, incidentally, a certain number of present men.

Buck Jones again plays the upstanding man of the West, out to straighten a bad situation, both from the standpoint of community well being and that of Buck's rather weakened romance. That the air is quite clear at the conclusion in an expected manner, hardly detracts from the entertaining method of accomplishment.

Thought to have handled himself in a particularly appealing style is young George Ernst, playing the orphan, befriended by the romance-sustaining Loretta Sayers, and lending major support to Buck in repairing his damaged pursuit of happiness.

Jones is permitted to leave prison on probation, having been wrongfully accused of a murder. Returning to his home town, he finds a welcome most conspicuous by its absence. He refuses to see his sweetheart, and determines to settle accounts by bringing in the party guilty of the crime for which he had been accused. Robert Ellis makes a rather interesting villain, what with holding up stage coaches laden with gold and similar exploits. A former jailmate of Buck's joins with Ellis and a clue is obtained thereby. After a letter of introduction opens the way further, Jones very easily clears the unpleasant situation of its unpleasantness, and then takes the opportunity to straighten accounts with Miss Sayers.

No One Man

(Paramount)

Drama

Paramount has here adapted for the talking screen Rupert Hughes' novel, "No One Man," with Carole Lombard as the all-too-wealthy young woman who, not knowing exactly what she wanted in the way of a husband, undertook a series of experiments until she found, not so much the man she wanted, as a realization that she had been playing a game rather than looking at life in a serious vein.

Paul Lukas in this instance plays the quiet, polite and always polished transformer, in the role of the foreign doctor, which compensates for his slight accent. He, rather by his obvious sincerity than forceful tactics, causes Miss Lombard to see the error of her frivolous way. The word "sincerity" might aptly be applied to his performance, it was indicated.

The audience at the New York Paramount gave every evidence of having been well entertained by the adaptation and quite satisfied with the work of Miss Lombard, blonde and attractive; Lukas, Ricardo Cortez, as the young man of wealth and physique who marries Miss Lombard after her divorce and then exhibits no slightest sense of honor or respect for the girl; and Juliette Compton as the willowy object of Cortez' attention, particularly after his marriage to Miss Lombard. Others, in less conspicuous parts, who nevertheless were thought to have handled themselves well were: George Barbier as Miss Lombard's father; Virginia Hammond, who, as the mother, amused the audience with her insufferable gushing; Arthur Pierson, as the divorced husband, seen

One of the greatest clashes in the records of all sportdom now ready for those millions of football fans who hung breathlessly over the radio as Baker of U. S. C. sent the pigskin spinning across the bar for the most dramatic victory in modern athletic competition—and Notre Dame's first defeat in three years.

Play by play of the never-to-be-forgotten game—slow motion shots that throw every detail of line play, runs and passes into bold relief.

Individual feats of such All-American stars as Schwartz, Baker, Pinckert, Yarr, Shaver. All dramatically described and explained by Braven Dyer.

No more tense, thrill-packed drama has ever been shown on the screen than the sensational comeback of U. S. C. from the brink of defeat to a breath-taking victory as the last seconds of the game tick away.

A nation of enthusiastic football fans await the showing of this spectacular production.

A small, but rather entertaining bit of comedy relief was supplied by Irving Bacon as the small town license clerk who is awakened for the marriage and proceeds to dilate on marriage in general and this couple, or trio in particular.

Cortez, on a cruise with his wife and the rest of the family, including Miss Compton, is suddenly siezed with a heart attack, just after Miss Lombard has professed her newly awakened love for Lukas and told Cortez she cannot go on with him. Cortez dies, conveniently removing himself from the scene, and making way for the marriage of the transformer and transformed.

Western

Ken Maynard tracks down the crooked bank president, who with the aid of his equally crooked followers, plan to force the attractive young ranch owner to sell out, in this latest western and rather melodramatic effort for Tiffany. The bank president has the idea that he will make a real killing by a quick turnover with the ranch property.

Maynard, hard riding, handsome, and able to shoot with either hand, succeeds in nailing the banker before he is able to accomplish his end, though before the conclusion, Maynard's pal is killed and the youngster he adopted is very badly wounded. Ruth Hiatt as the other half of the romance and the owner of the ranch was thought to have offered a pleasing portrayal.

The fans who like this sort of film will probably enjoy the riding, shooting and fist-battles with which the picture abounds. The beautiful western mountain country forms a splendid scenic background for the narrative. Frank Rice, Philo McCullough, Buddy Hunter and Dick Alexander were thought capable in the supporting roles. The younger element of the population should enjoy it.

Docks of San Francisco

(Action Pictures)

Melodrama

Action presents, via Ralph M. Like, another melodramatic effort, which, though truly fashioned according to the pattern of its type, nevertheless offers a certain amount of entertainment, it was thought, for that portion of the film public which is known to prefer its cinematic entertainment along melodramatic lines.

Mary Nolan, blonde and rather attractive, plays the lead as the young girl who has so far strayed from the well known path as to hold up sailors, after they are paid, along the San Francisco docks, knowing no other company than that of a notorious dive where she reports for orders from the man for whom she works, John Davidson. When she tells him she is going straight, he agrees, says he will go with her and sets a date and place for their meeting and marriage.

Having no intention of keeping his word, he stages a bank robbery for that evening, but the police have been tipped off. Most of the gang is killed, but Davidson and several others escape with one bag of money. Cornered, he drives to the spot where the girl, with her pal, Marjorie Beebe, is waiting, and tosses her the money. She creeps into the car of a novelist, Jason Robards, who had knocked out Davidson on a visit to the dive the previous night, and at the point of a gun forces him to take her to the mountain cabin where he was bound to finish a story.

Davidson and the gang trail them, and a gun battle, with the two besieged in the cabin, takes up numerous very active feet of the film.

Robards is shot, and the girl, seeking to summon aid by escaping to the nearest village, is seen and badly wounded by Davidson. Police arrive in time to save the life of Robards and finish off the gangsters with a bomb, well tossed. The promise of sunshine and fresh air which Robards had offered Miss Nolan vanishes and the gun-girl dies with him beside her, indicating, in a conclusion not quite according to the pattern of the usual melodramatic fadeout, that crime cannot pay.

Produced by Ralph M. Like and Action Pictures. Distributed by Action Pictures on State Rights market. Directed by George B. Seitz. Supervised by Cliff Broughton. Story and adaptation by H. H. Van Loan. Editor, Ralph Dixon. Photographer, Jules Cronjager. Recording, James Stanley. Release date, January 15, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

If They Like Him

George Jessel is this comedy short, as the manager of a politician seeking an office. The lines are funny, and of course Jessel puts them over. If the folks like Jessel's particular brand of humor, they will extract numerous laughs from the short. At the end Jessel has to ask another politician to assist him in passing his mother through Ellis Island.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Fans Will Like It

Personalities of rather more, than less, importance in the world of the screen have their brief moments unconventionally before the camera in this number, with most of the interest, naturally, pointing in the fan direction. Fortunately, and for once, it is not at a premiere. Farina is master of ceremonies in the studio with John Wayne as announcer and Thelma Todd as Miss Information. Presented are George Bancroft, El Brendel, Jackie Cooper, Lupe Velez, Gary Cooper.—Running time, 11 minutes.

A Few Laughs

A Sennett comedy effort, which possesses a few laughs even though the lines are anything but new and the situations have been done and done again. The cast includes Arthur Stone, Dorothy Granger, Helen Mann, Walter Long, Bud Jamison. Del Lord directed the piece.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Broadcasting

(Tiffany)

The Chimps

Tiffany's most versatile animal actors, the chimps, have much to do with radio broadcasting in this particular effort, which is rather amusing, to say the least. They are vastly annoyed at the renditions of one Rudy Valoo, chimp crooner, who makes love, insistantly, to one already promised to another by her father. A clever ruse brings about the uniting of the girl and her Rudy. Clever, these chimps.—Running time, 18 minutes.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

This department, "Your Public," growing more articulate as it recognizes its growing strength through organized activities, has been expressing itself in a very interesting fashion through the papers of the country during the past several weeks. And the expression is extraordinarily emphatic. The public, as the giant customer of the motion picture, has, with a grand indifference to the professional critics' findings, made its own selections of the best pictures of 1931.

There were 77 per cent feature pictures and 72 per cent short subjects recommended in 1931 by one or more of the following public previewing groups:

General Federation of Women's Clubs
International Federation of Catholic Alumnae
Daughters of the American Revolution
Los Angeles Women's University Club
Young Men's Christian Association

SHORT SUBJECTS

Not recommended	240	28%

Of the 627 short subjects recommended, 564 were for family audiences and 63 for adult audiences.

These figures tell the story of a finely systematized and business-like service on the part of the public groups. In total they reviewed 1,303 pictures. These had to be reported most carefully, in a written analysis, to their various chairmen for compilation and record. The findings of these national groups become highly significant. They represent an accurate barometer reading of general conditions. It will be an encouragement to every person connected with the motion picture industry to learn that in this year of the gangster, the glorified sex play and the hurriedly made short feature, there were still enough good films to win a rating of a 75 per cent endorsement. This is good news! It is a cheerful prognosis for the future.

Kansas Editors Speak

Recently fifteen worthwhile pictures in Kansas failed to win public support. The editor of The Caldwell in Kansas wrote an editorial in open letter form to parents stating that he proposed to print installments of recommended pictures which he would gather from the monthly lists of endorsed pictures distributed by national groups. The Topeka (Kansas) Capital, devoting an editorial to this message remarked about the plan of public group cooperation:

"Such an unofficial censorship, if it can be so termed, is much to be preferred to official censorships. . . . It is true that producers are not to be commended for turning out injurious pictures on the ground that they are apparently, from box-office receipts, what the public desires. They have some responsibility in elevating public taste. But when this is said it is to be said also that the public taste can be benefited by constructive cooperation on the part of those who demand something better. . . . Producers, critics and public all have a part to play in elevating the general standard of motion picture entertainment."

A Mother Speaks

"A Mother," writing to the Lyons (Kansas) News, about the proposed censorship in that state, says, with refreshing good sense:

". . . I suppose I'm on the wrong side of the fence on this proposition, but I contend that we are not helping our children to learn how to fight the evil in the world by tying a black cloth over their eyes and telling them the evil is not there. We don't fool them for a minute. Our children will learn more evil from a foulmouthed, profane man on the streets, than from a movie. Censor out the cigaret smoking women on the screen, and they will see it in our own little city. . . .

"Where the real trouble lies, is in the fact that the mothers say, 'Here's a dime—you may go to the movies.' (And get out of the way.) How much better to say, 'Let's go to the movies.'"

A Father Disagrees

A Hood River, Oregon, father wrote to the Hood River News:

"Recently to round out a perfect day the writer took a youngster to a movie and the attractive scenes, artful acting and modest voices of the supposed hero and heroine led one on in their plot, which presented salaciousness most captivatingly. There is only one way to describe this, and that is: 'It's pretty raw'."

Newspaper Co-operation

There seems to be a growing number of newspapers which present regularly lists of recommended pictures of their own, something of the character of the public groups' lists. The Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Detroit (Mich.) News and the Brooklyn Daily Eagle have already demonstrated the place the lay newspaper may occupy in the field of public influence on better motion pictures.

Now comes the Minneapolis (Minn.) Journal whose work in this connection is referred to in an article in that paper of January 5th, stating that the College Women's Club, in an effort to procure better motion pictures for Minneapolis, will make a study of various advance reviews which appear in the Journal and in other publications outside of the city. It is proposed to send this list when complete to parent and teacher organizations and other groups in the city, which would enable them to select the right type of entertainment for their children.

The Christian Century is now running a list of approximately a dozen films a week recommended as suitable entertainment. The International Journal of Religious Education, Chicago, Ill., is also publishing recommended lists of pictures. These religious publications get their evaluations from the National Film Estimate Service of Chicago.

The International Federation of Catholic Alumnae announces that thirteen radio stations and 163 newspapers are now carrying, in whole or in part, its weekly broadcasts on better pictures and its monthly endorsed list.

That Oddity: Public Taste

Within the past week we have seen RKO Radio's clean and wholesome picture "Way Back Home," which was endorsed for "School and Screen" service in Motion Picture Herald, registering a spectacular failure at the Mayfair theatre on Broadway, New York. In four days the picture earned $4,000 at the box office. The company withdrew it, replacing it with "Panama Flo," which the critic of The Daily Mirror, in entire agreement with the reviews of some of the national organizations, classified as "a glorification of girls of ill fame."

In the newspapers of the same date we read an account of Alida True Rodgers' report of "Way Back Home," featuring Seth Parker, which appeared in the Concord Monitor of Concord, N. H. She says of it:

". . . Dr. Allen Stockdale, formerly of Boston, now pastor of the oldest Congregational church, Washington, D. C., devoted a Sunday evening to a resume of this production. A filled church re-lived with him the high lights of the narrative. . . .

"It is the best story since 'The Old Homestead.' . . . Would that public sentiment might clamor for more of this type of comedy so satisfying to a jaded world."

The Railway Carmen's Journal of Kansas City, Mo., picked up and printed Parents' Magazine article, "Most Movies Unfit for Children." After reading the data sent him, the editor expressed the opinion that the item "did not contain a correct appraisal of motion pictures." This Railway Journal editor adds:

"In my opinion there has been a decided improvement in pictures made recently. A few days ago it was my privilege to attend the showing of the picture 'Delicious' and another entitled 'Sooky.' . . . I think the public is fed up on this triangle love stuff and gangster movies and the sooner the movie picture industry realizes it, the better I think it will be for all concerned."

So much for public taste! It is an odd and mercurial quantity. One might wish that in this age of the silver screen's expression we had a Mark Twain to write an essay on "Taste, and Its Reactions."

The Serious Problem of Film Mutilation

Viewing with much concern the great loss which the motion picture industry sustains each year due to the spoiling of motion picture film during projection, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has set about determining the causes of this mutilation of film and the means to be taken for overcoming it. This problem involves at the same time a study of the so-called methods of "processing" green film preparatory to the first run, and closely connected with it is the method of treating the film to preserve the picture and sound track surface from dirt and scratches.

As is well known, under the action of the heat radiated by the light source of the projector and the pressure of the guides against the film, small amounts of emulsion may be scraped off the green film and collect on the guides, increasing the friction between the film and the gate, and requiring a greater pull on the sprocket holes and causing unsteadiness of projection.

Various methods of lubricating the film so as to overcome these difficulties have been devised, some of which have seemed quite satisfactory, but as the mutilation of film still continues, it remains to be found out whether the methods are not so satisfactory as they seem to have been, or whether the continued mutilation is due to failure to apply the methods, either properly or at all.

The projection Practice Committee of the SMPE reports that the situation is quite serious, involving a loss to the industry of perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars each year. The work begun by this Committee is to be continued in great detail by the Committee on Development and Care of Film, and it is to be hoped that a solution of the problem will be available in the near future. Some of the work done on this problem during the past several years has been ably described in the Transactions and Journal of the Society by J. G. Jones, J. I. Crabtree, C. E. Ives and O. Sandvik.

Past work seems to indicate that molten wax, when used for lubricating the edges of film, is likely to cause considerable trouble if not applied correctly, but when it is applied correctly, is quite satisfactory. Both paraffin and machine oil have been used for lubricating the film, although paraffin is preferred on account of the smaller tendency it shows toward spreading and accumulating dust. Sufficient lubrication is obtained if the lubricant is applied along each edge of the film which comes into contact with the pressure springs in the projector gate, and it is not necessary to lubricate the entire surface of the film.

Only the slightest amount of lubricant is necessary to obtain adequate lubrication, the quantity required being so small that even if a slight amount does encroach upon the sound track, no appreciable ground noise would be created.

The objection to the use of wax in the past has been the lack of a means of accurately controlling the amount of wax deposited upon the film. Generally too much wax was applied, and upon becoming heated and upon cinching the film in the roll it would spread to the sound track.

Recent developments of waxing machines have adopted the method of applying the wax as a solution in a volatile solvent such as carbon tetrachloride, which was applied by means of applicator discs, over which the film was passed, so that a narrow band of the lubricant was deposited along the edges of the film. This system was adopted on account of the ability to control the viscosity of the solution, and consequently the quantity of wax-deposited solution of known concentration on the edges of a film moving at a known rate by discs of given width and controlled speed of rotation.

Formerly it was thought advisable to coat the entire surface of the film with a wax, such as carnauba, which is somewhat harder than paraffin, and which protects the emulsion surface from scratches and does not gather dust particles as easily as the softer paraffin. In view of the greater care with which film is now handled in the laboratories, it may be that the carnauba treatment is not so necessary as it was.

Theatre Architecture and Motion Pictures

Recognizing the important relation which subsists between the architectural design of the theatre and the possibility of presenting high-quality motion pictures in a theatre and the ability of patrons to view them comfortably and to derive from them the utmost enjoyment and rewards in return for their having paid the fee of admission, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is initiating a plan of cooperation with the American Institute of Architects with the view of improving in future developments the conditions under which motion pictures are displayed.

The present-day motion picture theatre is the result of an evolution from the socalled legitimate theatre, which, in turn, evolved through the centuries from the early days of the histrionic art. As the motion picture is young compared with the art of acting, it is to be expected that the present-day theatre represents merely an adaptation of the legitimate theatre to the presentation of motion pictures.

In other words, the industry has taken the original theatre, and, with hardly any fundamental alterations in the structure, has introduced into it the motion picture. However, the industry has grown to such a state of importance that it is now imperative that a theatre be designed around the motion picture; that it be designed primarily for the motion picture, and in accordance with the principles involved in projecting it.

The requisite properties of such a theatre are quite well known; apart from the architectural style, relating mainly to the aesthetic and certain utilitarian features, it must possess good sight-lines, permitting a clear view of the screen from all points in the house; it must provide a sufficiently low location for the projection room, so as to permit the projection of pictures free from the distortion caused by large angles of projection; the acoustical properties of the theatre must be good, reverberation must be controlled, sound pockets avoided, and the sound must be capable of penetrating with adequate intensity to all parts of the house; the physical comfort of the patrons must be provided for, both with regard to the posture which their bodies must assume in order to view the picture with ease and with regard to various other physiological factors.

These are some of the problems, the solution of which is of importance both to the architect and to the motion picture engineer; they are of more than academic interest to them—they possess an economic importance which should not, in these days of economic readjustment, be underestimated. For, in the final analysis, the theatre architect must be as intimately concerned with the receipts of the box-office as the motion picture engineer, and it is in the box-office that these factors display their proximate effects.

Past issues of the Journal of the SMPE have included papers dealing with all these various problems, but it was not until the last year or so that the necessity and appropriateness of interesting the architect in this work was fully realized. The motion picture engineer knows what is required in order to display motion pictures to the best advantage, but he does not know how to design buildings; the architect knows how to design buildings, but may not know what acoustical, visual, and other properties the building should have in order to do this.

Preliminary meetings between representatives of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and of the American Institute of Architects have already been held, and the industry may look forward to the accomplishment of a great deal of constructive work in this direction which will be of inestimable value to the entire industry.

B.I.P. AMERICA

MAKES AN ANNOUNCEMENT OF IMPORTANCE TO EXHIBITORS

THE film industry is confronted with a shortage of worth-while product. The fact that B. I. P. AMERICA will release twenty-four quality feature productions during 1932 is of outstanding importance to every exhibitor whose policy is the presentation of high-class entertainment to his patrons.

Each of these productions has been especially created to appeal to discriminating American audiences; each is one hundred percent box-office. And —the complete program provides an ideally balanced selection of dramas, comedies and musicals.

8 FROM B.I.P. AMERICA SIGNED SEALED AND DELIVERING!

BRIDEGROOM FOR TWO
A riotous, rollicking comedy of too many brides.

THE FLYING FOOL
A daring drama with a plot woven in the skies.

THE GABLES MYSTERY
A spine-tingling, baffling mystery thriller.

MY WIFE'S FAMILY
A rib-tickling comedy in which "in-laws" become "outlaws".

FASCINATION
A new kind of wife who offers to share her husband with his new love.

CARMEN
A splendid, convincing screen version of Bizet's famous opera.

MEN LIKE THESE
A tensely dramatic story of seven brave men trapped in a submarine.

THE SHADOW BETWEEN
A distinctly different drama of imperishable love.

Dave Dubin, local manager of Columbia Pictures, is back at his desk, looking a trifle pale and carrying less avoirdupois, but none the less full of the same enthusiasm and vigor. Dubin spent three weeks in a Minneapolis hospital recovering from a serious operation. There were a couple of days, says Dubin, when "things didn't look so good." But—Came the Dawn—and convalescence for Dave.

A plot is underfoot to install some type of electric alarm device in Aaron Saperstein's new private office which will give exhibitors, salesmen and folks with an ax to grind the signal that they have had sufficient time to unburden their grief, problems and history after a reasonable hearing.

Le Roy Alexander, pioneer film man, heads British International Pictures, a new Film Row exchange. Associated with him on the sixth floor at 845 S. Wabash avenue is Charlie Miller. Alexander is handling 24 features for the American market and is already under way on a sales campaign for the first 10.

Herb Washburn, formerly with RKO and Picture Classics, has joined National Screen Service and will handle the city territory.

Add to the evils of double featuring. Ludwig Siegel tells this one: A man and wife, scanning the posters in front of the Lindy theatre, discover they have seen one of the pictures, approach the box office and give the cashier a swell sales argument on why both should be admitted for the price of one, since they are not interested in one of the fillums. Or—they'll take a pass for the next change of program.

The Avon theatre on Fullerton avenue has been taken over by Sandman and Friedman.

Johnny Mednikow is breezing along the Row again, having returned from a two weeks' call among Indianapolis exhibitors in the interests of Master Arts organlogue.

After all the honors heaped upon Aaron Saperstein recently, some one figured that the Saperstein domestic existence might have become unbalanced and as a consequence the wives of local exhibitors last week staged a luncheon at the Auditorium hotel in honor of Mrs. Saperstein.

A number of changes in the Midwest territory has been effected by National Screen Service. Sam Westcott, formerly in Wisconsin, has taken over the state of Iowa. Bert Riesman, formerly in Indianapolis, takes over the Badger state. The Indianapolis and Louisville territory is now under the direction of Gus Carrick. Murray Starr, formerly of Salt Lake City and recently of Illinois, is placed in charge of Nebraska.

Will Rogers should meet up with Chicago's flying ambassador, Jack Miller. Returning to town in a heavy fog the other day, Miller and his pilot lost their bearings. Miller looked over the side of the plane and spied a ribbon of water. "That's the Des Plaines river," he said. "Now we're on Mannheim Road. This is Lake street. To h—— with your compass. From now on we are flying by streets. You're in my backyard now."

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

More Work and Less Fretting!

EVERY time there is a rumor of widespread changes in one or more of the national circuits we are bound to get several dozen letters from showmen working for the outfits in question as to what we think will happen to them.

We, naturally, like to feel that these boys lean on us for some expression of opinion when the weather looks cloudy and changing. But the only sensible advice that anyone can offer when a feeling of unrest and indecision is in the air is to "sit tight and mind your own business."

Anticipating what the new operators will do would require the services of an unusually good fortune teller and we for one have no faith in such fakirs. And anyone else who can honestly claim to know what is going to happen is just as big a fakir.

It would seem that every man working for an outfit about to be reorganized, or any other word that suits the occasion, should concentrate and work harder than ever to keep his house in the black and operating efficiently all the way down the line. Spending valuable time worrying can only bring disaster when the new bosses make their first visit. It will be reflected in your business, your own attitude and the general appearance of your theatre and your staff.

So, forget all about rumors and go about your job of keeping that theatre of yours running nice and smooth and plugging for business as much as ever. If anything, make up your mind that those new bosses will find you a crackerjack showman and a competent business man from every angle. They may have need of such confidence from different men in their new organization and naturally first impressions go a long ways towards establishing what may be a corking promotion for you.

Many towns find themselves handicapped by reason of the present lack of enthusiasm among the merchants to tie-up or cooperate on business promotion slants. In fact, any number of members have cited this as the reason for not doing much in the way of local advertising campaigns.

Such a condition is undoubtedly bad for everybody concerned, not only the theatre but the merchants too. Therefore we can only urge every showman confronted with this problem to do everything within his power to recreate interest in cooperative campaigns for the benefit of the tradespeople and the theatres.

Much can be done to stimulate interest again providing you go about it in the right way and do not attempt to kid those merchants into believing that prosperity is just around the corner. They've probably been listening to that line for months until they are tired of it. Better to show a more sympathetic attitude and show them that you not only understand their present problems but are in the same boat and just as much up against it as they are.

Don't cry with them, in that sense of the word, but try to make them understand that it is a prevalent condition and one that can best be attacked with a solid front. Point out the wisdom of concentrated effort all along the line. Show them that stirring up interest in sales will be bound to meet with some measure of success if tackled in a big way and tending to direct attention to the present low prices in all the stores.

Your newspaper editor and advertising manager should be the first to line up behind you a hundred per cent. They too must learn that concessions are in order and should be willing to give unlimited space to further any campaign to bring about buying in the community. Co-operative pages should be worked out so that they are not an expensive burden to the already overburdened merchant.

Much can be accomplished by the theatre man who takes the lead in pulling his own town out of its "dumps" and getting them to see the sense of plugging, especially in the way of sales and advertising. To lie down in the rut with the rest of the town won't do you or your theatre much good and will certainly drive the customers to nearby towns where there are some indications of life and business pep.

This is a problem for theatreman and businessman alike. They should tackle it shoulder-to-shoulder and between such a group there ought to come some genuine improvement in local conditions. You as the representative theatreman of the town ought to take the lead. It will reflect much to your credit when things start to look up like the good old days.

It seems strange after writing so many things about accomplishments that we should suddenly find ourselves writing a "farewell" to a showman and a friend who passed away only an hour ago. . . . J. B. Hardy might have found life much longer and far more sweeter had the breaks been coming his way . . . but fate decreed otherwise, and in his quest for happiness and a chance to be near his wife he gave up a pretty good job and followed her to New York. . . . The rest of the story is all too brief . . . serious illness laid him low and after a few weeks he finally faded out of this picture. . . . "God Rest Your Soul," Hardy. . . .

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Dick must have had Ed Wynn on his mind when he drew this cartoon. The inquiring gent is a perfect facsimile of that well-known stage comedian and just the type to innocently ask foolish questions. Have you a little Ed Wynn in your town? Haven't we all!!!

HARRISON CREATED TRADE WITH A GOOD ATMOSPHERIC LOBBY

Inner and outer lobbies were arranged in such a manner that a most realistic atmosphere was created for "Spirit of Notre Dame" by J. P. Harrison, manager of the Waco Theatre, Waco, Texas.

In the inner lobby was a panel consisting of a large blackboard about five by seven feet and worked up in the form of a scoreboard. At the top, the scoreboard was worked in; copy reading as follows, "Notre Dame vs. Army in the first full-length motion picture football romance." The line-up for both teams was listed under the score card. The game with the Army was listed as this is the outstanding game in the picture.

Stills were tacked in a neat arrangement on the panel in circular still frames and football togs, helmets, shoes and other equipment were placed in front of the panel.

The front also presented an attractive display. The sidewalk directly in front of the theatre and extending the full length of the marquee was marked off to represent a football field including goal posts at either end of the field. The field was marked off into 10-yard lines and the distance between the lines figured out exactly with the title that we wished to paint on the sidewalk "The Spirit of Notre Dame." The title of the picture was painted across the field in pink letters; the field having been painted green and the lines marked off in white.

Two daily announcements were made over the local broadcasting station. In addition to these announcements, a radio contest was held on the opening day of picture as Baylor University (a Waco institution) was playing an important game on that day. The play by play analysis was not given from the field, but was coming in over the local station by wireless. A score guessing contest resulted. This was plugged every few minutes with the picture and theatre getting plenty of plugs.

The above may suggest angles for adaptation to other pictures or the information can be filed away for use next season when Club members are searching for appropriate atmosphere for a football picture. Harrison did a good job and is to be congratulated. We'll hope to hear more about his work.

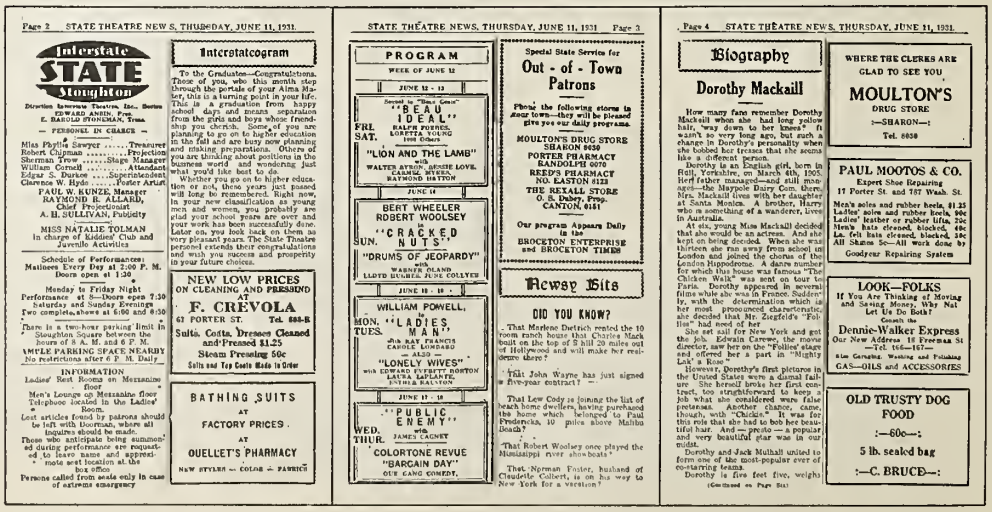
TWO TIE-UPS AIDED FRED V. GREENE SELL A NEWSPAPER PICTURE

Two tie-ups conspicuously figured in the campaign made on "Five Star Final" by Fred V. Greene, Jr., manager of the Irving Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

He arranged with the proprietress of a beauty shop to hold a hair-dressing show on the theatre stage, in which fifteen models appeared with different styles of coiffure. The show opened with an overture after which the Madame made a brief introduction on the apron. The stage set was an upright piece with an oval opening just large enough to disclose the upper portion of the girl's body, the girl standing on a platform. The traveler was fastened just above the frame which was backed with a set piece and then the lower corners were pulled back making a V-opening, or rather an inverted V-opening-disclosing the girl with two stage spots as well as the booth spot on her. Each model was given a thirty-second introduction by her employer, in the middle of which the traveler opened and the model slowly turned around. The entire show lasted about eight minutes and skipped along at a fast pace.

His other tie-up was made with the local telephone company which loaned one of its new six-foot high 'phones, presumably a papier-mache affair, for display in the lobby. A tag on the 'phone read, "Two of the Biggest Things Today—The Telephone and Five Star Final."

It happened that a local boy played a small part in the picture than this fact was given lots of publicity over the air from a local broadcasting station and by local newspapers. This boy also sent a telegram in reference to picture, which was enlarged and used as an advance and current display for the lobby.



Greene's hair-dressing caught on well with the audience and entire expense of same, including pay for extra musicians, newspaper ads and other sundry items, was defrayed by the beauty shop. Many of our members have caught the interest of women patronage by staging one of these affairs, some preferring to hold the show on the mezzanine in order to give closer views of the exhibition and to provide a more intimate touch to the occasion; however, the show put on by Greene undoubtedly made a good flash and it's fast pace used up very little time. We saw your old friend Morris Rosenthal the other day, Fred, and he sends along regards. Keep the Club posted on Wilkes-Barre doings.

A 'NEWSY' PROGRAM!

Once again we had to dig into the files to find the sort of program called for by another member who is getting ready to start publishing one of these interesting little house organs.

Paul Kunze of the Interstate Circuit turns this one out for the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass., and finds it very useful for broadcasting not only his current and coming attractions, but, news of the various pictures, announcements for his large kiddie club and other items of current interest and importance to him and his theatre.

Emphasis is placed on the week's attractions by setting them in a special box on page three. Balance of copy, including the paid ads (making this program self supporting) are distributed throughout the rest of the two-fold newsette.

To the Graduates—Congratulations. Those of you, who this month step through the portals of your Alma Mater, this is a turning point in your life. This is a graduation from happy school days and means separation from the girls and boys whose friendship you cherish. Some of you are planning to go on to higher education in the fall and are busy now planning and making preparations. Others of you are thinking about positions in the business world and wondering just what would like best to do.

Whether you go on to higher education or not, these years just passed will long be remembered. Right now, in your new classification as young men and women, you probably are glad your school years are over and your work has been successfully done. Later on, you look back on them as very pleasant years. The State Theatre personel extends their congratulations and wish you success and prosperity in your future choices.

Biography

Dorothy Mackaill

How many fans remember Dorothy Mackaill when she had long yellow hair, way down to her knees? It wasn't so very long ago, but such a change in Dorothy's personality when she bobbed her tresses that she seems like a different person.

Dorothy is an English girl, born in Hull, Yorkshire, on March 4, 1903. Her father managed—and still manages—the Marpole Dairy Co. Mrs. Mackaill lives with her daughter at Santa Monica. A brother, Harry who is something of a wanderer, lives in Australia.

At six, young Miss Mackaill decided that she would be an actress. And she kept on being decided. When she was thirteen she ran away from school in London and joined the chorus of the London Hippodrome. A dance number for which this house was famous "The Chicken Walk" was sent on tour to Paris. Dorothy appeared in several films while she was in France. Suddenly, with the determination which is her most pronounced characteristic, she decided that Mr. Ziegfeld's "Follies" had need of her.

She set sail for New York and got the job. Edwin Carewe, the movie director, saw her on the "Follies" stage and offered her a part in "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

However, Dorothy's first pictures in the United States were a dismal failure. She herself broke her first contract, too straightforward to keep a job what she considered were false pretenses. Another chance, came, though, with "Chicken." It was for this role that she had to bob her beautiful hair. And — presto — a popular and very beautiful star was in our midst.

Dorothy and Jack Mulhall united to form one of the most-popular ever of co-starring teams.

Dorothy is five feet five, weighs

COOMBS MADE MODEL OF AIRSHIP TO FIT ON TOP OF AN AUTO

Occasionally we have an inquiry as to the making of a "stock" dirigible airship and from time to time we've passed along the desired information. Now comes along a few words from J. C. Coombs, manager of the Palace Theatre in Post, Texas, who furnishes a brief description of one he made up for the exploitation of the picture "Dirigible."

Coombs' airship will fit any model Ford and can be attached in 10 minutes. It weighs about 30 pounds, is fashioned so it revolves and keeps its nose to the wind at all times. The small photo will give you an idea of how it was attached to the forward and upper structure of the auto. When exploiting the picture mentioned, he borrowed the siren off the local fire wagon and made some racket over a radius of 40 miles around Post.

While we haven't been able to give detail of manufacture of Coombs' ship, we're sure he'll favor any Club member with the desired information. Generally, these affairs are made from light woodstrips and canvas and then treated with some sort of waterproof paint. Borrowing the fire department's siren is quite a gag if you can get away with it. Maybe the chief in his town has an extra one in case of an emergency. At any rate, thanks to this Round Tabler for his contribution. We'll be looking for others.

GIRL TAKING PHOTOS IN WINDOW WAS GOOD SALES AID TO NOBLE

The stunt of engaging an attractive girl for the taking of photographs through a store window proved effective for Ralph Noble, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark.; so effective, in fact, that police had to be called from time to time to clear away traffic in front of the store. Photos taken were developed and placed in the theatre lobby and the people who identified themselves were given guest tickets.

Additional effort included the give-away of 1,000 photographs of Jackie Cooper in the children's department of a big store, carrying the line: "Meet Me and My Pal Wallace Beery at the Capitol; and the holding of a stage wedding on the closing night, during which a huge cake donated by a local baker was cut and distributed.

We haven't had the pleasure of recording show-selling activities of Ralph Noble for quite some time and hope that he will resume his place among the regular contributors to this department. Regarding his stage wedding we'd like to hear details of same and if any new angles were injected in the stunt.

MILT KRESS ACTIVE SELLING HIS SHOWS IN MERIDIAN, MISS.

Included among the recent activities of Milton Kress, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Meridian, Miss., was a revue, a give-away of four Playboy Ponies, and a tie-up for publicity at an American Legion wrestling show.

On the opening night of a new picture, he presented "Hits and Bits," a revue of the best numbers of eight past occasions he staged as "Merchants' Vodvil Nights." Each merchant contributed enough money to defray cost of this show, including printing and distribution of heralds. The added attraction ran fifty minutes.

The four playboy ponies were placed on display in the lobby inside a "corral," with straw on the floor and appropriate copy on cards explaining the nature of the give-away.

His food matinee was held on a Saturday morning and more than 1,000 kiddies attended the show, each bringing some article of food in lieu of admission. In all two truck loads were received and later donated to needy people. The local newspapers gave the stunt front page mention for five days in advance.

When he played "Champ," he arranged for an announcement to be made between every number on a wrestling card staged by the American Legion, figuring that the theme of the picture would carry appeal for the average patron at the bouts. This was later borne out at the box office.

There's a cut along with this little account of Kress' doings and we want all of you to take a good eyefull. Has our Meridian representative an idea of atmosphere? We'll say he has! Those galloping play-boy ponies are enclosed in a corral, have straw under their feet an' everything. 'Course, there really should be a stable boy in attendance but we can't expect all the trimmings. Okay Milton! Let's hear more.

Publix-Iowa Changes

Changes affecting the Publix-Iowa division are as follows:

Jack Roth has been appointed city manager in Des Moines, succeeding Willard Moore at the Paramount Theatre.

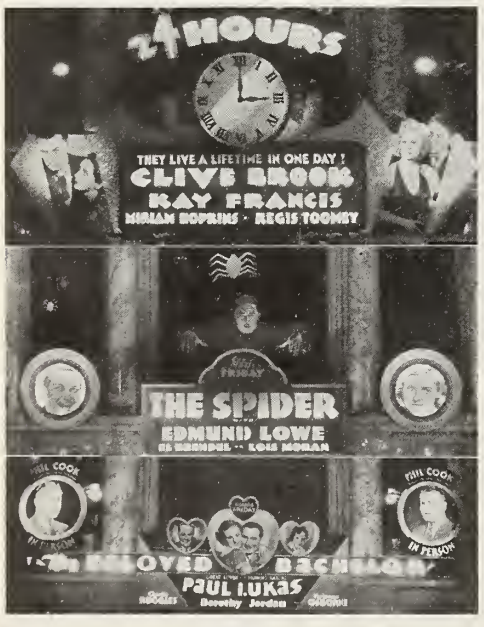
In the Arthur Stolte division, Frank Kennebec has been placed in charge of exploitation and publicity with headquarters at New Zealand, and his place at the LeClaire in Moline has been taken by John C. Black, who was formerly in charge of the Strand at Waterloo.

C. W. Peterson, formerly of the Casino, Marshalltown, is filling Black's position.

HOLD UP GROSSES DURING LENT!

In those communities where Lent generally cuts into your usual business it will require a lot extra effort to keep your grosses somewhere up around normal. If you permit your house to dip into the red you may find it one tough job to pull it out again before the summer warm weather chases your customers to the great open spaces of the beach and country.

In working out your future activities keep your mind focused on Lent and what will help your house to remain profitable. Get through those six weeks O. K. and you'll be able to roll up plenty of reserve for the bank balance during the hot days.



The early Lent this year ought to work out better for your theatre than were it to fall a little later. First, you run into it while you are firing on all cylinders; second, it's over before the spring weather arrives in earnest and gives you a chance for staying up in the large gross class.

Keep the ticket machine clicking but save some of your best efforts for the six weeks of Lent. You'll need lots of activity to carry you through in grand style. Lying down will be disastrous to you and your theatre.

FLOYD BELL USING LARGE INNER LOBBY TO SELL HIS SHOWS

We've often had occasion to call attention to the excellent use made by Floyd Bell of the large inner lobby of the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, and the accompanying photographs will convey a further idea of how this part of the house is made to serve as a publicity medium for coming attractions.

Note the attractive scheme of display fashioned for "24 Hours," with the appropriate catch line, huge clock and cutouts on each end. Then take a glance at the spiders and webs constructed for "The Spider," flanked with large heads of stars. This is followed by a photo of a display made for "Beloved Bachelor," in which several heads were arranged on heart-shaped board.

Bell's work has always been interesting to Club members and we are glad to have an opportunity of presenting examples of his up-to-the-minute showmanship. Naturally, not every manager has the large space available to Floyd but he certainly utilizes it to most excellent advantage and we feel that other members can carry out his ideas on a smaller scale.

We know that Bell must have arranged an elaborate celebration over the holiday season and Club headquarters will do its utmost to secure detailed information to pass along to his fellow showmen.

PARKES MADE DEALS WITH NEWSPAPER AND BAKER FOR GIVEAWAY

Two successful give-aways, one with a newspaper and the other with a leading bakery, were recently put over by A. Brown Parkes, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Scranton, Pa.

He arranged with the newspaper to feature "Shoppographs," in conjunction with "Do Your Xmas Shopping Early, during the entire month of December. The staff photographer went on the streets every day and took a picture of some lady doing her shopping. The picture appeared in the paper the following morning and entitled that lady to two guest tickets and $1 in cash. The newspaper furnished the cash.

His tie-up with the baker resulted in the give-away of a brand new Ford sedan, to be given away on the stage of the theatre on a night agreed upon. Until then the Ford was displayed in the lobby of the theatre with appropriate cards on it. 200,000 heralds, one half explaining details of the give-away and the balance devoted to the current picture at the Capitol, were issued for distribution by bakery in loaves of bread. The entire expense of the deal was absorbed by the bakery.

Both of Parkes' stunts appear to have been corking ones for all concerned. His deal with the newspaper obtained a lot of valuable publicity, and in return the paper secured a good circulation booster. The bakery tie-up not only assured a packed house on the give-away night, but obtained a wide range of publicity on current attractions over a long period, all at no expense to theatre. When it comes to promotion Parkes is right on the heels of his brother showman down in Scranton, Will Cosgrove. More power to both of these Round Table members, and we'll hope to learn further about their work.

ATTRACTIVE MONTHLY CALENDAR ISSUED BY TOOLEY IN RED BLUFF

Along with this description appears a reproduction of a monthly calendar-program issued by W. E. Tooley, manager of the State Theatre, Red Bluff, Calif. So many compliments have been paid this Club member as to general attractiveness of this piece of work that we're passing it along for the benefit of others.

As it was a December issue, it featured a message for the New Year. The border work was printed in green and all cuts and copy in calendar proper were done in red. Note that in each space for dates he jockeyed in two small cuts to illustrate current picture offerings. The reverse side plugged a Xmas give-away of a radio. The reverse side also carried a postal permit for the calendar to be folded and mailed in regulation style.

Now that Red Bluff has seen the Xmas season safely pass and has hopes of dry weather, we'll anticipate further news concerning Tooley's show selling at the State; that is, just as soon as California shovels itself out of the snow. We just couldn't resist that little dig, W. E., for we haven't had enough over this way to make a snowball so far this season.

Worcester, Not Lynn

In the Jan. 16 issue of this publication we erred in stating that Abe Wasserman was the assistant manager of the Olympia Theatre, Lynn, Mass. Abe is not there but at the Olympia in Worcester, where he holds the job of assistant. He was formerly at Lynn. Accept our regrets, Abe, and let us know what you are doing for show-business these days.

Full Steam Ahead

A recent check-up made by the Film Board of Trade in New York City reveals that 1050 out of the listed 1100 theatres in the New York zone are operating full time.

Theatres closed over long periods have been reopened during the past few months and it has been apparent for some time that even houses yielding but a fair return have been at a premium and eagerly taken over by optimistic showmen.

GAGS ARE BUT GAMBLES TODAY, NEWSPAPERS SAFE—JAMEYSON

Now for number four in the series: "Is Exploitation and Advertising Necessary?" This time we offer the views of two men who should certainly know what they are talking about. H. E. Jameyson is at this writing director of advertising and publicity for the Fox West Coast Theatre located in the Midwest. His knowledge of show-selling is perhaps second to none and during the last few months he has become well known on our Club pages. Some of his exceptional newspaper ads have attracted wide comment and now let him speak for himself on this all-important subject. Showmen in all sorts of spots will find his article hits right in the centre of the bull's eye for their own situations. Jeff Lazarus of the West Coast airs his brief views as well. Succeeding articles will cover a wide range of showmen from small as well as large cities, thereby giving the small town slant just as much attention as the key cities. This is important, due to the necessity for getting accurate opinions from every conceivable type of theatre and location.

TOUGH ON THE STOMACH!

In the course of my life I have viewed a number of things that produced in my consciousness a feeling of awe. Among these was a certain dusky gentleman who could dispose of a case of soda pop, a chicken or two, ground glass, nails, safety razor blades and miscellaneous hardware and then top the whole repast off with a watermelon.

Across the United States there are several chains of unique business organizations which operate without the use of advertising. In a world geared up to and completely "sold" on advertising these institutions are quite remarkable exceptions.

But the man who views the gastronomic feat of the colored gentleman to whom I referred above and attempts to duplicate it is quite apt to do considerable damage to his interior decorations, and the business man who attempts to emulate the non-advertising chain store should tread carefully.

Advertising plays a definite part in the modern scheme of things, exceptions to the contrary notwithstanding.

I presume there are isolated theatres across the land that can "get by" without using advertising. To say there are no such theatres is to make a very broad statement. However, I think it is entirely safe to say that an improvement can be made in the business of any theatre by the judicious use of advertising.

Please note the word "judicious."

In my own case, when I depart from newspaper advertising I do so with considerable anxiety. Not that other mediums and methods are not good, but so many of them are doubtful that they come dangerously close to being injudicious.

NOT STUNTS—BUT ADVERTISING!

I refer particularly to trick ballyhoos and numerous sorts of outdoor advertising. When a man spends money on such forms of advertising he must make some careful advance calculations. He is out on a somewhat uncharted path. He has a great element of chance to consider.

In newspaper advertising a man's course is fairly well charted, both as to expense and return. He knows to a penny how much he will be spending. He has a fairly accurate knowledge of the number of people he will reach with his message. In other words, he is not shooting in the dark.

"SHOOT THE WORKS?"

In the old days of prosperity we could "shoot the works" on any kind of a gag or stunt. If it failed to "click" nobody was worried. Big box office statements covered our errors in judgment just like the sod covers a doctor's mistakes.

But today it is different. A little mistake made in the manner of spending our advertising dollar looms up large on our weekly reports.

I am not opposed to "stunts" that are predicated upon a fairly accurate knowledge of the possibilities of attracting interest and patronage. But I am unalterably opposed to the "gag" worked up just for the purpose of "doing something." These loosely conceived, loosely executed schemes are dangerous and costly. Too many men in this business are "stunt conscious." I'm not impressed with any stunt, no matter how flashy or clever it seems, until I see the box office statement. I regret to say that a glimpse of the daily receipts does not always match the glowing reports of the stunt.

DON'T SHOOT AIMLESSLY!

Another thing: a successful hunter doesn't blaze away aimlessly. He bunches his shots. He puts them where he feels they are going to do the most good.

With lowered grosses we have of necessity been forced to reduce advertising costs. Today we do not have as much money to spend. To me it seems foolhardy to scatter our limited funds over the entire range of advertising. I have urged concentration of fire. As a result we have confined practically our entire advertising budget to our theatre lobby, our screen and the newspaper. Today we are using almost as much newspaper space as formerly and when we feel justified in spreading our wings a bit we do it in the pages of our papers. We feel that by following this course we are eliminating the element of chance as much as possible.

NEVER A SURE THING!

Of course, advertising can never be reduced to a "sure thing." There is about it something akin to gambling. We know that sometimes a dollar spent on some stunt comes marching home at the head of a whole procession of other dollars. But we have also learned that these occasions are rather rare. We've had too many disappointments. As a result we send most of our advertising dollars out to sea on the good ship "Newsprint." Sometimes we hit a rock, run into a storm, or go aground, but in the great majority of cases we reach port safely, if not always serenely.

JEFF LAZARUS' SLANT!

Until just recently, Jeff Lazarus was division manager and director of publicity for the Hughes-Franklin Theatres on the Coast. His long connection with theatres and advertising qualifies him to pass these few brief remarks about the question under discussion. We'll be hearing more from Jeff soon.

Would Be a Paradise!

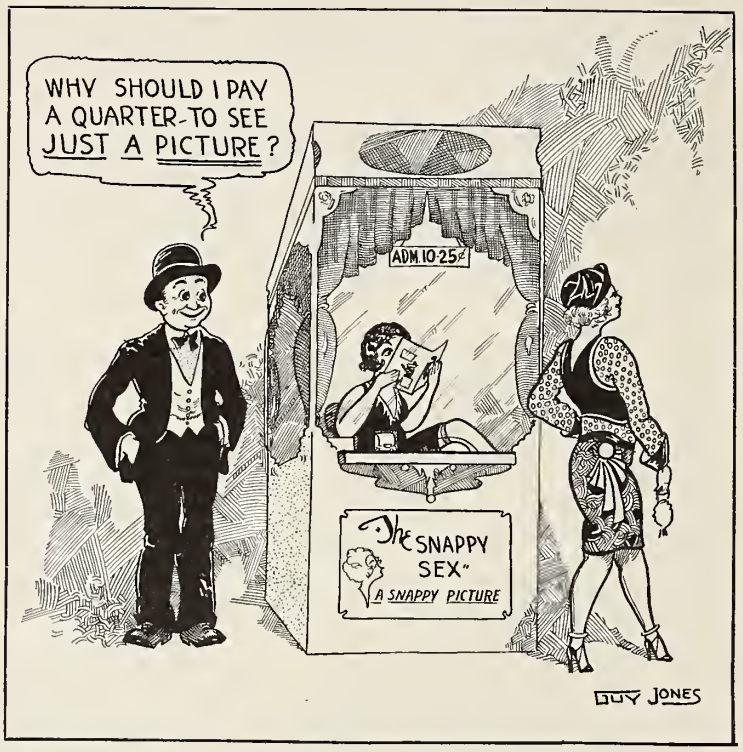
Should there be some place, such a Showman's Paradise, as a theatre playing all hits, nothing but guaranteed box-office successes, such as "The Champ," "Skippy" and "Daddy Long Legs," fifty-two weeks out of the year, then what would happen would be this: after a couple of months people would learn that every time they go to that theatre they find a tremendous success, so they would keep going.

All the Way to China

But if I had such a theatre and such hits, I would take advantage of it by advertising very heavily and would build another theatre alongside the first one to take care of the overflow. By the second year, with the hits continuing, I would need a third theatre to take care of the overflow, and so on for as long as I lived; and before long, the overflow would be extending from here to China and I would have to build that number of theatres to take care of it.

When you consider, however, the number of "Champs" there are each year, you realize that you don't have "all hits," and then you begin to find the necessity for dragging people in to see the pictures—frequently, these days, against their will—and of course you need advertising for that. Then the pictures aren't as good as they should be and you have to add something to your show so that you can face your public after you've charged them sixty-five cents; and then whatever you've added to your show, you have to advertise that, too.

Then in spite of all your efforts you have one week in which every damn thing in the show is terrible and your public is practically off of you for life; and then the first time you have something that's fairly entertaining, you've got to advertise like the very devil to get them back in.



All in all, I think I'll stick to advertising my shows.

NEXT WEEK!

The fifth article in this series will be from Vic Gauntlett, for many years one of the leading ad men of the Northwest. When Vic expresses himself on anything pertaining to show-selling you can wager your last dollar that it will be well worth reading.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

This "wise-cracker" is a familiar character in many towns and cities. Guy Jones compares the relative values of the sex appeal in the picture and the exaggerated flapper, including the cashier who seems to be ballyhooing the current attraction.

MINTON MADE A DEAL FOR TWO TIE-UPS AT NO COST TO THEATRE

Distribution of 5,000 heralds by airplane and 2,000 more in parking lots formed part of the campaign made on "Flying High," by J. V. Minton, manager of the Shea Theatre, Erie, Pa.

It was advertised that certain heralds, when identified with marks posted on the "Flying High" airplane in the lobby, would permit the holder to witness a showing free of charge. Copy on the herald instructed the holder to be sure to take it to the Shea Theatre.

The turtle gag was also used for an effective window display on the above mentioned picture. Letters spelling out the title were placed on the backs of ten turtles in the window of a Pet Shop, along with a large card which read, "Watch These Turtles—and When They Form a Line Spelling the Words Flying High, Come Into the Store and Notify the Manager. You Will Receive a Free Ticket."

Although both of these gags have been mentioned before it is noted that Minton put them over without any cost to the theatre. He tied up with an Air College for use of the airplane and secured the window gratis from the proprietor of the Pet Shop. As far as we know right now this is the first time we have had the pleasure of recording any of his activities in show-business. Now that we've started the ball a-rolling, we hope that he will continue on the active list.

Depkin Gets Second Run

Bernard Depkin, well known theatre man, has acquired the Grand Theatre in Grand Salem, Va., and will open it under a second run policy. It is rumored that the Skouras interests have a look-in on the deal.

MANY SALES ANGLES USED IN LONDON TO SELL "PALMY DAYS"

London has long since learned all the motions of motion picture exploitation, as was evidenced anew at the opening of Eddie Cantor's "Palmy Days" at the Dominion Theatre. For the Goldwyn feature was given an opening as flashy as was the case in New York.

The Dominion is one of London's largest cinemas, and, with true American initiative, it was transformed overnight for the Cantor opening. The front of the house was covered by a gigantic electric sign bearing Eddie's head and proclaiming the picture to the world. And every inch of the lobby was given over to telling displays of the picture. To add a fantastic touch, there were also displays of Carmo's Circus, which is playing at the Dominion.

Chief among the Cantor displays was a bakery in the lobby, conducted by five girls garbed like the bakery girls in the picture. These ran doughnut machines and sold thousands of doughnuts daily, as well as giving away samples at the end of each performance to departing audiences.

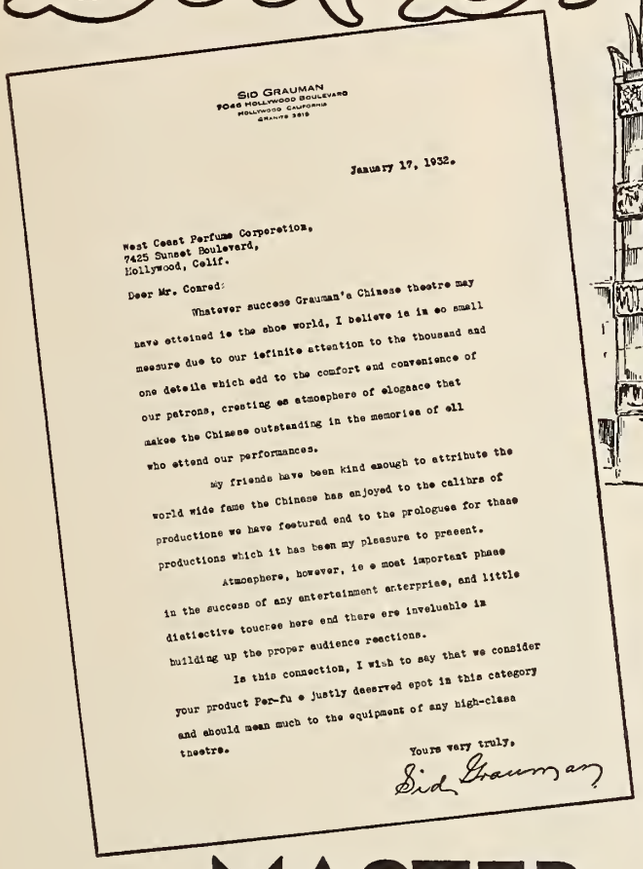
A "shot" of one side of the attractive foyer as it was dressed in circus attire for "Palmy Days." Note the cutout figures as well as the free doughnut counter on the mezzanine.

At the opening the house was packed with an audience ranging in age from nine to ninety, and it gave a great reception to Eddie's insane antics. Among the guests were 150 kilted boys and girls from the Royal Caledonian Schools at Bushey (Herts). Headed by their own drum and bagpipe band, they marched to the theatre from Euston Station carrying banners which read: "We are going to see 'Palmy Days' at the Dominion." At the other end of the age-list were Chelsea Pensioners and inmates from several charitable organizations.

Here's the view of the lobby looking towards the street. The circus idea is carried out to fit the rest of the display. Cantor and his comical cutout have the big spot though

As was the case with the New York opening, further openings in England will be pepped up as the result of national tie-ups. In the London opening, for example, the Waffles Products, Ltd., tied in with the picture and will do likewise in several cities of England. Others tied in with the picture are "Palm Toffee," "Ever-Ready Razors," Underwood Typewriters, His Majesty's Gramaphone Co., two music publishers, National Cash Register and the Marks and Spencers and Woolworth stores.

The job was put over, for the most part, by R. E. Strode, exploitation man, and Robb Lawson, publicity man, of United Artists Corporation, Ltd., in London. They did it so well that several newspaper and magazine writers in the English capital are writing them up.



Sunday Troubles

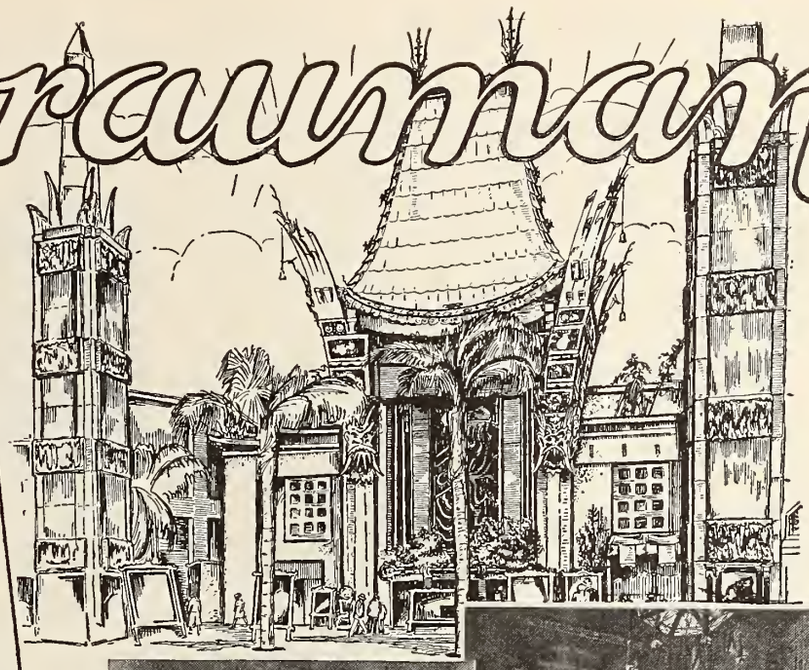
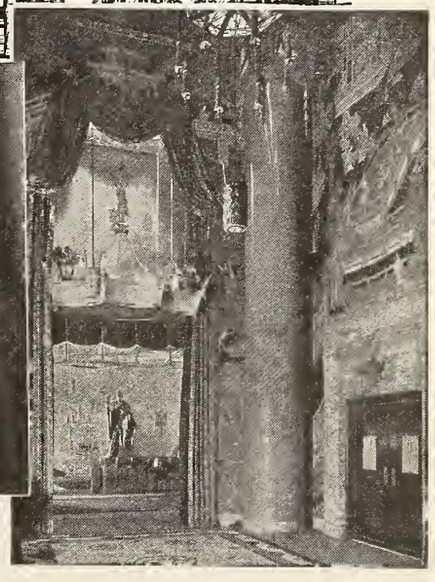
Dear Mr. Conrad:



Whatever success Grauman's Chinese theatre may have attained in the show world, I believe is in so small measure due to our infinite attention to the thousand and one details which add to the comfort and convenience of our patrons, creating an atmosphere of elegance that makes the Chinese outstanding in the memories of all who attend our performances.

My friends have been kind enough to attribute the world wide fame the Chinese has enjoyed to the calibre of productions we have featured and to the prologues for these productions which it has been my pleasure to present.



Atmosphere, however, is a most important phase in the success of any entertainment enterprise, and little distinctive touches here and there are invaluable in building up the proper audience reactions.

In this connection, I wish to say that we consider your product Per-fu a justly deserved spot in this category and should mean much to the equipment of any high-class theatre.

Yours very truly,
Sid Grauman

PER-FU IS A FACT NOT AN EXPERIMENT

"EXPLORERS" HAS MANY SLANTS!

Exploitation Possibilities Exceptional For Novel Adventure Picture!

The New York Campaign on "Explorers of the World" offered a test case of what could be done with a special type of production that contained neither movie stars or a famous story written by a great author. Here was a film containing the expeditions of six famous explorers to various parts of the world and, for the most part, unknown on Broadway. A careful examination of the promotable assets contained in this film revealed countless angles.

Six-In-One!

First of all, there was the main idea of the picture which was different in that it represented a combination of six separate expeditions in one picture—a novel departure which was unique in its way. Then there was the fact that each one of these explorers was a picturesque personality loaded with endless human interest and whose lives were objects of boundless curiosity to a mass of "stay-at-homes," and lastly there was the fact that adventure pictures had already been well established in public favor as a type of entertainment well worth seeing.

A very effective advance barrage of publicity in the form of five full page stories, individually featuring the lives and adventures of the explorers appeared in prominent papers preceding the opening. This was followed by further feature stories in other newspapers dealing with the further experiences of these men. It was all "live news" that was interesting both to the papers and to the people who bought them.

Then a most original "teaser" advertising campaign broke five days before the appearance of the large advertisements. These were most successful in piquing curiosity and securing interest.

A few days prior to the opening a special press luncheon was given at which the explorers were present and motion picture critics were invited. Later on, a special showing was given at the theatre to a large group of officers representing numerous women's organizations ranging from the D.A.R. to the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Organization Tie-Ups!

At another time a special showing was arranged for the officials of national organizations like the Y.M.C.A. and the Boy Scouts. From most of these groups, letters of spontaneous praise were received giving the picture a nation-wide endorsement which could be utilized to the good of the picture in other cities.

There was a most colorful lobby display constructed outside of the theatre which artistically dealt with various phases and aspects of the picture. It was so vividly made up that it was generally surrounded by groups of passers-by. Inside the lobby of the theatre was stationed a gigantic bear that was electrically operated and which had almost lifelike movements. Near this was a display case containing strange curios gleaned from the various expeditions. A cut-out figure of a jaguar was mounted underneath the marque and this looked as though it was about to leap on those passing below. It had the effect of making people look up along with looking sideways at the outside lobby display, thereby attacking their attention from all angles.

Atmospheric Effects!

An effort was made to make every nook and corner, in and around the treatre, atmospherically suggestive of the production itself. Everything was made to tie in with the film and in this way audiences were bundled into a mood and kept in it until the end of the performance.

When you play a "different" picture you must expect to sell it "different" from the usual run of product. With an attraction like "Explorers of the "World" you have something that can be tied in with schools, libraries, educational organizations, etc. In this article, P. K. Thomajan tells how they handle a portion of the big campaign used to start the picture off on its "two-a-day" run in New York. Before long your theatre may be playing this picture and possibly some of the campaign can be revamped for your town or city. Look it over and note what Thomajan accomplished.

P. K. Thomajan

A special souvenir program was created which contained the stories of the lives of these explorers along with tales of their most thrilling experiences. Radio broadcasts were arranged over national stations in which the Explorers discussed their experiences individually or in a group.

This was all part of the effort to make these personalities familiar to all stratas of the public, which were potential audiences for the film.

Special Matinees, Too!

A special matinee was given for the Boy Scouts at reduced prices and another to Macy's (department store) Boys Club. Then an interesting card was prepared for posting on the bulletin boards of the local schools. This was followed up by advertisements and stories in the New York High School and college papers.

Inasmuch as every one of the explorers happened to be lecturers and authors, many of their thought-crystals were distributed through the various newspaper columns. The Rotograveure sections untilized the more sensational scenes for reproduction. And, one of the explorers was booked into the Stern Bros. Little Theatre for a most interesting lecture to a huge kiddie audience—and all the walls of the little theatre carried a mass of scenes from "Explorers of the World."

Window displays were lined up with the bookshops featuring the books authored by the explorers.

A giant Emperor penguin, brought back by Laurence M. Gould from Little America, was placed in a nearby window and attracted perpetual crowds about it.

The Public Will Come!

All these different things conclusively show that a picture does not have to be a Hollywood product in order to be given a successful presentation to the American public—but there must be an aggressive initiative and a picturesque technique of presentation—and it was by doing so, that a picture like "Explorers of the World" came out of obscurity into the bright lights of Broadway and for four weeks enjoyed a most successful run.

It only goes to show that for a really different picture the public is more than willing to GO out of the way to see it.

Baltimore Project

Frank Price, Jr., at one time in charge of the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, is head of a new firm which has under way plans for a new 1,200-seat house at Gwynn Oak Junction. Arthur Price, who operates the Aurora Theatre, and C. L. Kelly are also interested in the company.

To exploit "Rich Man's Folly," Ricardo Montiel, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Mobile, Ala., effected a tie-up with a local newspaper to arouse interest through fans' knowledge of the star's role in other pictures.

Six pictures of Bancroft appeared in advance, one each day, and prospective patrons were asked to look at the picture, search their memory; use the tip printed below the photo and decide in which photoplay the actor played the particular role. Solution of all six photos, accompanied by a 100-word essay on what role was best liked by the writer, and why, made the reader eligible for one of 10 awards.

That this stunt found a great deal of response among readers of the paper was evidenced by the number of replies received. Thanks to Montiel for making it possible for us to pass the information along to other Club members, and we'll be looking for further examples of his show-selling down in Mobile.

HUWIG IN CHARGE OF NOVEL ATMOSPHERIC HOUSE IN BALTIMORE

We've had occasion before this to mention the Valencia Theatre, Baltimore, Md., managed by Jack Huwig and known as "a theatre atop a theatre." The accompanying illustration will give readers some idea of what it looks like. This house was planned by John Eberson, famous for his "atmospheric design," and was one of the first of these houses to be opened in the East. In this instance the ceiling has a pronounced curve, side panels are decorated with the usual ferns, plants, etc., and a Moorish motif prevails. The reproduction will be too small for you to see the Eberson pigeons, but they're there; also, the twinkling stars. This auditorium was built above the Century Theatre.

We're sorry that a small photo, such as we are able to reproduce here, will not do full justice to Huwig's claims as to general attractiveness of the Valencia. But it is impossible to show detail of an Eberson house without resorting to a profusion of color. However, we thank him for going to the trouble of digging up this view and hope that he will send along some dope on what incentive he's using to lure patrons to his aerie.

DR. FRANK BOUCHER CALLED ON PATIENTS IN WINCHESTER, VA.

In line with his recent work as doctor of bad or sad situations relating to motion picture theatres, it is noted that Dr. Frank Boucher has been sitting up night and day with a couple of ailing patients down in Winchester, Va. Due to his skillful diagnosis and prescriptions, we are pleased to record that the convalescent stage was safely reached and passed and that the subjects are now on the verge of strutting out without nurses.

After defeating a move made by an opposition house to garner patronage through a reduction in admission by beating it at its own game, attention was turned to a few business boosters. It was found that two organizations, the Memorial Association and the Retail Grocers' Association, both had plans for the giveaway of articles. The hospital benefit amounted to over $1,000 worth of coveted gifts and the committee was prevailed upon to hold the affair at the theatre. The Grocers' first prize of an expensive radio was augmented by second and third awards of monthly passes to one of the two theatres. A special sale of a well-advertised brand of toilet soap was used for a lead article at the stores represented in the tie-up.

In conjunction with the cut in admission Boucher and his assistants promoted a full page ad in the leading local paper. A special edition was then run off, imprinted on the front page in red, for distribution throughout the town. Other box office boosters, such as a Scout's Club, for the start off of a Buffalo Bill series, a "Dunkers' Club," and special heralds, etc., all helped liven up the theatre situation in Winchester.

One of the theatres, the Colonial, has Warren Slee at the helm, and we're sure that many members will recall his contributions to this department when he was located in another town. When it comes to a tough job, Warren has what it takes to overcome obstacles, and we know that he will continue to render a satisfactory job wherever he may be. We're glad to hear from Frank Boucher and some of his gang again and will be on the lookout for more dope as he makes calls on his patients.

TIE UP WITH WINTER SPORTS!

Just as football and baseball provide good cooperative angles in conjunction with your theatre's activities, so does basketball, hockey and other winter sports.

Managers are urged to sponsor inter-community games and possibly offer a silver cup for a play-off of the best two teams within the drawing area of the theatre's patronage. Score cards and other tie-ups can be worked out as well with local sporting goods shops paying for the printing in return for their ad on the material distributed.

Inviting the local teams to your theatre on a specified night and introducing them from the stage will also help build goodwill and foster a friendly feeling between the theatre and these various local teams.

Where ice skating is popular some advertising gags should be worked out at the lake or rink to attract attention to the theatre or some particular picture.

POSTER ART FOR THE THEATRE

Here is the first offering from Jerry Mills to our helpful poster art series. This one, at first glance, appears radical, but that effect is due to the reduction in size. We can assure you that when made up in its full size (one sheet or more) it is a magnetic poster for this well known screen star. We hope Jerry will follow with others.

BAIR'S KNOT STILL HOLDING AND TRADE IS NOT TOO TOUGH

Once again we are able to report that despite the nationally advertised depression business continues to move along out in East Liverpool, Ohio, where E. E. Bair manages the American Theatre. Times not just as they used to be, to be sure, but not too bad. As E. E. once remarked, "When you get to the end of your rope, tie a knot in it and hold on." And that sounds like pretty good advice.

Of course there have been moves out his way to provide help for the needy and the American has done its share in this respect. When articles recently contributed to two benefit performances arranged by principals and teachers of the various schools and Bair were counted, it was revealed that a total of 2,530 individual offerings were on hand. Among these were 396 girls' dresses, 46 coats, 79 hats and 6 skirts. There were also 14 women's coats among the lot. Almost a like assortment of men's wearing apparel were also included on the long list. Among the items of food were more than 1,000 cans of various articles of food. Quite a collection, eh what?

Maybe by this time the question of Sunday movies for East Liverpool has been straightened out, but when we last heard it had become quite a bone of contention between the good citizens of that town. Following an election when a small majority of voters decided in favor of Sunday shows, the opposition demanded a recount, which, when finally tabulated, showed that the measure won out by a majority of 55 votes. That's running rather close, to our way of thinking, but then they say a miss is as good as a mile. So unless further disturbances have occurred to upset motion picture men in this community, it is taken for granted that theatres are now open on Sundays.

Bair's ads are always interesting and we note that he recently ran one captioned, "A remark at the box office." Then the head read, "Well, Thanks for That!" and copy went on to state that any individual or organization that helped Mr. and Mrs. Public stretch their dimes into dollars were as welcome as sight of land to an ocean liner. And that was why Mr. and Mrs. Public were giving thanks to the American Theatre for offering first run attractions at a price within the reach of everyone; that it was a "shopper's market and that the wise shopper would go to the American, etc."

Activities of this Round Tabler are always interesting to report and we're glad to again pass along news of what Bair is doing in his town. By this time other slants on showmanship have undoubtedly come up for his consideration and we'd like to be let in on what has taken place. In the meantime, we and his fellow showmen wish him the compliments of the season.

CUTOUT SIGN LETTERS GAVE STRIKING EFFECT!

Above photo shows two excellent examples of how the cutout sign letter can be designed to give striking and artistic effect. These signs were used over the marquee of the Ritz Theatre, Columbia, S. C., where City Manager Robert B. Talbert and assistant, Edwin C. Hough, have created a reputation for being live-wire showmen. These two are a working team, not only in getting out attractive fronts but in securing gratis space in the newspapers. Forty inches per picture is their regular achievement.

ADVERTISE FEATURE STARTING TIME!

There is a decided tendency on the part of the patrons of theatres to try and avoid walking in on the middle of a feature. Some get the impression that each day's feature starting time remains the same. They are not expected to understand about difference in footage, extra shorts, special trailers and sometimes a complete reversal of your schedule due to an extraordinarily long feature.

Stressing the starting time of your feature, particularly the last feature at night, will be welcomed in almost every theatre. It encourages patrons to make the last show, where they might have passed it up thinking they were too late. It also gives them a chance to arrive at the theatre sometime just prior to the start or after the finish of the main attraction.

It means handling more paid admissions, because you get them at the breaks and avoid making them stand up in the back of the theatre or in the lobby. This, too, is a tough slant and will be eased up considerably where the rush occurs before the feature goes on.

Feature starting times should be noted conspicuously in your newspaper ads, on your programs and most certainly in front of the theatre or the box office.

PERRIN PROMOTED A DE LUXE GIVE-AWAY THAT BOOSTED TRADE

Approximately two hundred dollars worth of merchandise was promoted for recent give-away nights staged by C. T. Perrin, manager of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

There were three nights in all and in additions to cash awards made on each occasion, one patron had the distinction of adding an electric washing machine to his wife's collection of household utensils.

20,000 tickets were distributed by the merchants to persons making purchases. The tickets were tied-in with any one of the Gift Nights, including the washing machine.

According to information received from a number of Club members, give-aways have proved a means of helping many a house over tough spots in the week and apparently Perrin's experience is not an exception. Promotion of an article such as an electric washing machine is something to excite the cupidity of the average customer and this Round Tabler is to be congratulated for obtaining such a desirable article.

HOWARD WAUGH AND NEWSPAPER TIED-UP FOR AN ESSAY GAG

The best letter on "Should a Girl Marry While Under Eighteen" proved a good attention-getter from the public and secured front page mention every day in advance for Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., when this Round Tabler sold "Under Eighteen."

As the result of the newspaper tie-up letters were received each day and published on the front page. Three awards were offered by the paper and the theatre management. Ten tickets to see the picture were offered for the fourth prize. There were sixteen additional awards of two tickets each to a performance. The judging committee consisted of a film critic, a member of the local Chamber of Commerce and C. A. McElravy, manager of the Auditorium.

Through devious means we are able to pass along information concerning Howard Waugh, sometimes known as "Old Doc Memphis Himself." At any rate, it is gratifying to know that he is still in the business of vending shows and it's almost unnecessary to state that he knows about all there is to know about putting over novel tie-ups, of which the above is a good example. So long for this time, "Old Walrus" (another nom de plume) and don't forget your fellow showmen.

LASSMAN SENDS CLUB SOME SHOW BUSINESS NEWS FROM TROY, N. Y.

News of show business up in Troy, N. Y., is to a large extent dependent upon the good offices of Garry Lassman, manager of the Lincoln Theatre in that city, and it is our duty to report that much of his time of late was taken up with the celebration of Victory Month, a recent Warner drive of considerable proportions. However, he's up for air now and we are at liberty to tell you all something about what went on a month or so ago.

Part of his advance campaign included the running of a special trailer to let patrons know just what attractions were in store for them during the "month." Then the whole city was sniped with special Victory one-sheets, three-sheets and window cards. The month was divided into four "weeks" so that advertising could be centered on certain special attractions.

The first week was called "Surprise Week" and offered surprise attractions in the way of short subjects. The second week was "Over the Top Week," when exceptional pictures were offered. During this week Lassman arranged a special lobby display depicting trench warfare, a photo of which appears on this page. The third week was "Legion Week," during which all Legion officers and Gold Star mothers were invited to be guests of the theatre. Considerable newspaper publicity resulted. The fourth and last week started a contest that ran well into the succeeding month.

This contest was built around the popularity of working girls and 58 girls qualified as entrants. The winner was determined by distribution of ballots to patrons, allowing them to vote for anyone they had in mind. Patrons appeared very interested as to securing ballots and the girls contacted their personal friends for votes.

What was in store for the winner is interesting enough to mention and is evidence of this Club member's promotional ability. As a starter, the leading apparel shop in the city donated a winter coat, frock, shoes, hose, underwear, gloves, hat and purse; in fact, everything to make a little girl shout with glee. Next she was presented with round-trip tickets for herself and chaperone on the Greyhound buses to and from New York City. While in New York she was the guest of the New Yorker Hotel for three days and during that time was entitled to see shows in any Warner theatre. When all these privileges were bestowed, the winner made a personal appearance on the Lincoln's stage.

Not so bad for a poor little working girl, was it boys? But it was a corking contest and helped Lassman put his month over with an extra bang. Troy being largely a factory city, it was smart business to pull off a stunt of this kind. And all the articles mentioned above, including printing of ballots, were promoted without any cost to the theatre.

That small photo you see, with a girl registering "amazement" in a projection booth, was a little publicity stunt put over by Garry on the occasion of getting his new sound equipment. This picture appeared in the roto section of the Sunday paper, along with a generous caption. To further publicize this event, 20,000 special heralds were distributed house to house.

We and all his fellow Club members are glad to know that this Round Tabler is getting along so famously in his comparatively new environment. The last time we heard from him it was evident that he had gotten in with the city department in view of all the parades he was getting away with. Now we note that he has made himself solid with the newspaper boys. So it looks as though everything is going along good.

CASH IN ON NATION-WIDE BRIDGE MANIA!

Fred Meyer Tried the Gag Out In Milwaukee by Tying Up With a Newspaper and It Went Over Big

One of the most colossal publicity splurges accorded any event in recent years took place a few weeks ago when Eli Culbertson and Sidney Lenz, contract bridge battlers deluxe, held their tilt in New York City for the mythical championship of this popular game of cards. Both morning and evening newspapers devoted columns of space to the event, hands were illustrated and analyzed, and running accounts of the rubbers were related by the principals. In turn these stories were syndicated and published in newspapers all over this country.

Wise showmen are cashing in on the wide interest aroused by this tournament and one of the first examples brought to our notice concerns the activities in this respect by Fred S. Meyer, enterprising managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Tear sheets from a leading local paper in his town indicate that a tie-up was made by theatre and newspaper to give fans a chance to demonstrate their ability and to instruct others in the points of the game, in conjunction with showings of a trick bridge hand picture made by Lenz. To begin with, a story set forth the advantages of entering the tourney, stating that attractive awards and guest tickets to the next week's show would figure in the outcome. The hands featured in this short were reproduced in the paper and readers asked the following questions: How should the hands be bid? How should they be played? It was required that answers be filed with the bridge editor of the paper on a stated date.

Featured In Ad!

To further stimulate the idea a portion of all display ads running at that time was devoted to focussing attention on the tourney. The reproduction shown here reads, "Extra! Extra! Sidney Lenz—Highlights on Bridge. The Great Card Wizard Plays a Difficult Hand for a Grand Slam. Try It Yourself. (Before you Forget) Card Tables in Our Lounge."

It will be recalled that two systems were supposedly at stake when Culbertson and Lenz engaged in battle, the official and Culbertson's. Details are not given concerning the opposing hands picture in the newspaper and on the screen but it is taken for granted that they were played according to the favorite system adopted by these two bridge experts. The newspaper followed through to the end with stories of the progress of the tourney, stating that scores of answers had been received, and attempted brief analyses of the hands. A final, long column story listed the names of the winners and gave full descriptions of the plays made during the game.

The larger photo on this page shows a foursome under way in the lounge room of the Alhambra, with the players endeavoring to play the hands seen on the screen before forgotten. A slide called attention that the lounge had been fitted up for convenience of patrons who wished to try out the hands and many of them took advantage of the opportunity.

Try Luck at Trick Lenz Bridge Hands

—By a Wisconsin News Staff Photographer.

AT ALHAMBRA THEATER

A bridge room in the lounge of the Alhambra theater has been fitted up for trying out the Lenz contract bridge hands which are being shown in reels on the screen of the Alhambra theater this week. Contract bridge fans, after viewing the hands on the screen, are invited to play the hands in the lounge before they are forgotten. Above is a foursome of fans, playing one of the trick hands. Left to right, they are Rose Leshin, Vi Calkins, Mariane Adler and Arthur W. Jopke.

A FEW SIDELIGHTS!

There was something almost Barnumesque about the handling of the recent tilt between Culbertson and Lenz. Either both of these luminaries are dyed-in-the-wool showmen or else the whole affair was capably engineered by a master hand at the game. In any event, the stunt was and still is a live topic and one not to be overlooked where the theatre box office is concerned.

Country-wide publicity attending and following this affair revives the idea of staging a tournament between local clubs, school fraternities, etc., in the lounge of the theatre, providing, of course, that such space is available. There are a number of short subjects on the market for use with a move of this kind.

However, what appears as a golden opportunity might turn out to be a boomerang unless careful consideration is given local situations. It certainly wouldn't be smart business to create such a yearning for bridge that the resultant parties would be the means of keeping patrons away from the theatre—and that could happen.

Whatever is done should be attempted solely in conjunction with some activity that involves the theatre; either in connection with the showing of some short subject pertaining to the game, as in Fred Meyer's case, or by the combination of a tieup such as he made in connection with the booking of a short. Attention is then focused on the theatre, not the home, with attendant results at the box office.

It was like Fred Meyer to get aboard the band wagon in vogue and extract whatever he could from that which was taking public fancy at the time. He sensed the wide interest in contract and, with his finger always on the pulse of the community, pushed a little short subject to the extent of making it figure conspicuously in box office receipts.

The Main Point!

True, there's nothing new about theatre card parties, for this stunt has been pulled any number of times by smart showmen who were making an attempt to build up patronage from women on certain days of the week. The main point we are trying to get across is that hundreds of thousands of lines have been used to publicize contract bridge in every state in the union, and that it behooves every member of this organization to get behind the biggest thing that has come along in some time and extract from it all that is possible in the way of a box office stimulant. Don't forget the angle of the text books that have been published by experts in the game. These might in some manner be brought into a tourney as awards to deserving players. There is also the possibility of tying up with distributors for free distribution of coffee, cakes, etc., for the players who take advantage of your invitations to use the theatre lounge as a bridge room.

In conclusion, however, careful consideration might well be given the local bridge situation. If the public is still all "het up" about the game, then a bridge attraction at the theatre becomes a natural; on the other hand, if interest has subsided it might not be well for the theatre to promote anything that would lead to outside competition. This is all up to the discretion of the showman who contemplates action along these lines. A number of managers have proved that such a move, properly applied, can benefit the box-office. We would like to hear from Club members who experiment with the box office potentialities of this stunt.

PERSONALITIES

JOHN P. MASON writes us that his new address, in fact, not so new at that for he's been silent for a long time, is the Bellerose Theatre, Bellerose, L. I., N. Y., a de-luxe house under supervision of C. P. Winkelman, general manager of the Playhouse Operating Co.

WATCH YOUR BOOKINGS CLOSER!

From personal observation and watching bookings as they appear on the many programs received at Club headquarters, we note a seemingly disinterested style of assembling shows that certainly can't be making the patrons of some theatres very happy.

Any good showman knows how important it is to include the proper assortment and selection of surrounding short subjects to round out a program possessing the essentials for real entertainment. Even where double feature policies are in order, this same indifference is noted by the bookings of two features similar in theme or grouping two dramas or two comedies, where one of each would have made a perfect program.

Look over each change of pictures and by careful reference to the Herald's feature and short booking chart, reviews, etc., you can soon determine whether you have a good show. That will give you time to make a change should one be necessary. But don't wait until the show is on your screen to find that it's lacking in something or other. This little reminder is meant as much for the circuit managers as the men who operate their own theatres. Circuit men are always permitted to suggest changes for the improvement of their shows.

JOHN WATT PUT OVER GOOD DEED CAMPAIGN AS A RELIEF MEASURE

Club members who have yet to organize for a relief campaign will no doubt be interested in a plan carried out by John Watt, manager of the Empress Theatre, Penticton, B. C. Although somewhat lengthy it can be reduced to suit different situations.

It was called a "Good Deed Campaign" and the following requirements are necessary to put it over: Campaign membership cards; ribbon badges; envelope stickers; large thermometer cutouts; newspaper publicity; awards to campaign members; a Xmas tree, or some other emblem fitting the occasion, and a large crew of enthusiastic youngsters.

In order to arouse enthusiasm at the start, Watt created a "battle song" and a "town song," both of which were printed in the local newspaper and shown on the screen in advance of campaign. Prizes were offered for the best "battle cry," which was as follows: "Zis Boom-Zis Boom-Zis Boom-Bah; We're Behind the Big Drive, Rah-Rah-Rah; Rip-saw, Rip-saw, Rip-saw-Zang; We're the Empress Good Gang. Chick-a-boo, Chick-a-boo, Chick-a-boo, Chang; Let's Put It Over With a Bang, Bang, Bang."

Each member of the campaign wore a ribbon badge, and carried a bunch of cards for distribution to home-owners, store keepers or anyone who could be considered a likely prospect for a gift of some kind. In return for the gift, each boy or girl offered to do some chore or render some sort of service to the donor.

Three distinct drives were made, the first featured by a bid for canned goods and jars of fruit; the second, new or old clothing, and the third was given over to a collection of toys and general foodstuffs.

The donor was asked to note on the card what article he or she had given the campaign member, who, in turn signed his or her name on the back of the card before handing same back to the theatre management. To encourage competition each child was given credit for the number of cards turned in. Subscriptions were asked from local merchants and residents to cover expense attached to providing awards for the youngsters, who were graded according to number of cards returned. The campaign was begun on Dec. 1st and lasted until Dec. 19, and on Dec. 26 a Xmas tree was erected for the occasion of distributing the awards.

As to publicity, the newspapers carried front page stories giving details of the drive; stickers were distributed to every office, store and organization; churches announced the campaign from pulpits; cutout thermometers, with copy reading, "Let's shoot the mercury up until it bursts the glass," were used to record progress; and all fraternal organizations, clubs, women's clubs, etc., were contacted to aid and see that gifts suffering from age, misuse, etc., were put in shape for the occasion.

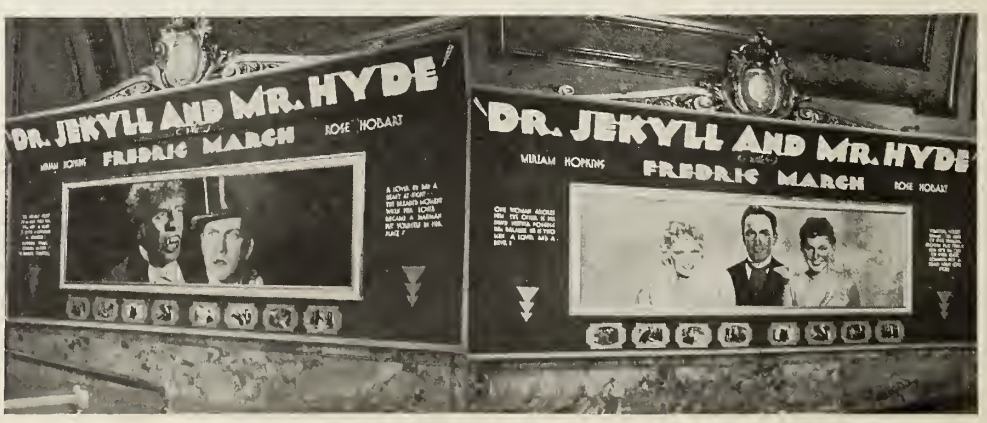
The entire campaign cost the theatre $10, its share in the fund collected for the purchase of awards for the campaign membership, which was limited to 75. All accessories were promoted without cost to the theatre. The drive resulted in three truckloads of articles, all handed over to an organization known as the Central Relief Committee.

No need to be unduly pessimistic when matters appear to be taking a turn for the better but there are some folks who seem to think that this relief business has just started. That being the case, some of our members may be planning another benefit show, or there may be a number who have not yet put the first one over, and in either event Watt's plan of campaign may offer some interesting suggestions. Considering the slight cost attached his theatre certainly must have benefited to a marked degree.

BERKHEIMER MADE A MODEL GRIDIRON FOR RECENT SPORTS FILM

Here's a photo of an advance window display arranged by M. E. Berkheimer, manager of the Fox-Kiva Theatre, Durango, Colo., that attracted as much or more attention than anything attempted along these lines in that town. It was used in connection with "Spirit of Notre Dame" and is a complete gridiron in every respect. Note that the field is marked off from goal to goal, and the arrangement of the miniature players as they tussle for possession of the ball. Posters and stills make up the balance of the display. While the photo does not do full justice to the display it will serve to put across the idea.

The above is a good one to tuck away in the file for use when next football season arrives, for at that time there is sure to be the usual crop of pictures featuring this popular sport. Thanks to Berkheimer for making it possible for us to get a line on his activities. We will be looking for further evidence of his work. In the meantime, lots of luck to this Round Tabler during the coming season and we'll be looking for further information on what he is doing in show business to put his house over the top.



LABY'S EFFECTIVE LOBBY DISPLAY!

In connection with one of the recent so-called "Horror" pictures, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," contrasting lobby displays were most effectively used by George Laby, manager of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass.; so effectively, in fact, that the displays were thought to be a contributing factor to obtaining the highest weekly gross over the period of a year.

The accompanying photo speaks for itself. At the left, note the famous "Doctor" in characteristic poses of himself and other self, treated from the "horror" angle. At the right are featured characters representing the romantic side of the picture. The displays were built larger than usual in order to obtain the panoramic effect here illustrated. We think it quite attractive.

Regarding the large gross piled up during the engagement of this picture, it is only just to give credit to fame of story, principals, etc., and the newspapers helped tremendously with free cuts and stories. However, Laby's striking lobby display must also be given its share of the glory.

We are indeed glad that he sent information on the above along, for there's good reason to believe that the industry is in for several pictures of this type and his idea is one that can be used on others. No need to tell you to keep up the good work, George, for you will. But don't forget to keep your Club posted, for many a Round Tabler has found your ideas to his liking.

GET ABOARD THE BAND WAGON!

WILLIAM CAMPOPIANO manages the Majestic Theatre in West Springfield, Mass., and it's a pleasure for us to record that he, too, has become a member of this organization. Just as soon as he can find time he's going to gather up some data from a pigeon hole in his desk and shoot along an account of that last stunt that went over big in his town. We'll be on the lookout for this, Bill, so don't disappoint your brother showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BEN J. GROBASKI is the partner-manager of the Mazda Theatre, L'Anse, Mich., his brother Dan being the other member of the family engaged in show-business. Ben is apparently the active partner for we have his membership application at hand and want to let him know that we're mighty glad that he has joined the most famous band of showmen in the whole world. Since you are at the helm, Ben, keep us posted on what you are doing to sell shows at your house. We're all interested.

L. A. DORAN has the job of assisting James T. Risk with the management of Loew's Circle Theatre, 60th street and Broadway, New York City. Prior to taking his present position Doran acted as assistant at Loew's 116th street and before this as a chief usher, so it's easy to see that he's moving up the ladder at a fast pace. Here's hoping that he reaches the top and that he'll keep this Club informed as to progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LAWRENCE J. NORDINE is another assistant manager to join this outfit and his boss, Clark Rader, manager of the Indiana Theatre, Bedford, Ind., states that Nordine is a very energetic young man and predicts that he will advance rapidly in this business. Further information discloses that he has been with the Indiana for seven months and that he's 23 years old. His last position was an assistant managership at the Rivoli in Muncie, Ind. Between Rader and new Raund Tabler Nordine, we should be kept well informed on what's going on in their town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES J. EGGERS is the manager of the Capitol Theatre in McKeesport, Pa., and we're taking this opportunity to let his several thousand brother showmen know that he is now a member of this great organization. Now that he's one of us, we'll look forward to finding out what particular brand of show-selling he's using to attract the good citizens of his town. Drop us a line, Charlie, so we can pass the word along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. FAWNS has the job of district relief manager for the Stanley-Fabian Corporation, and his headquarters are at Irvington, N. J. He's another newly-elected member of this Club and we believe that he's in a position to gather a lot on information that will make interesting reading for his fellow showmen. Let us in on some of those live-wire stunts being used to boost trade over in your territory, Fawns, and we'll see that all the other boys are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. R. ECKERSLEY operates the Wigwam Theatre out in Nez Perce, Idaho, and he is now in line for introduction to his host of fellow Club members. His house seats 200 and the name Wigwam fits like the paper on a wall, according to the name of the town. We're very glad to have Eckersley with us and it will not be our fault if his fellow showmen are not further informed concerning activities of this recently-elected Round Tabler.

L. A. "LUKIE" STEIN is the general manager of the Ritz and Palace Theatres in Valdosta, Ga., two houses owned by Stein Bros. He built the Palace in '26 and has operated the houses ever since. Before this he operated the Douglas Theatre in Macon, Ga., and the Jackson Theatre in Brunswick, Ga. At present he operates the Ritz as a deluxe house and the Palace on combination policy. Altogether he has 1,700 seats to keep filled and we're going to look forward to hearing all about how he puts his shows over. We'll depend upon you to tell us, Lukie, so let's go!

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOWARD E. WHITE is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Seattle, Wash., a Fox-West Coast house. We are also in receipt of his membership application and at this writing he, too, becomes a full fledged Round Tabler. Drop your Club a line at the first opportunity, Howard, and tell us about that last stunt used to boost trade at your theatre. Your fellow showmen will be interested.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. H. SIMPSON not only manages but owns the Princess Theatre 'way down South in Millen, Ga., and a most cordial welcome is also extended this new member. He operates a three-hundred seater and according to information at hand his house belongs to the XXXX circuit—which means no circuit at all. We're going to look forward to hearing how Simpson attracts patrons to his house and just as soon as we hear from him again his fellow showmen will be a slant on what's taking place in show-business down in Millen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES A. LEWIS is the manager of the Princess Theatre, LeRoy, Ill., and for all we know he may be a long lost brother of "Chick" himself; however, if not directly in the family, he's at least a brother Round Tabler at this writing for we have his membership application at hand. Welcome to the Table, Charles, and let us hope that you'll do your full share to keep this department moving along at its customary pace. Let's hear from you soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES E. PAYNE wears the title of managing director of the Opera House in New Brunswick, N. J., and right off the reel we can see that he has a knack of crashing newspapers for valuable space. Charlie recently inaugurated a vaude-picture policy at his house and this move was good for a two column story in a local paper. The current film was "Local Boy Makes Good" and this new Round Tabler tied up the title with the fact that he had also made good by giving New Brunswick a new brand of entertainment. Okay, Charles, and let's hear more about what you're doing in show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER C. CARROLL is the assistant city manager of Fort Smith Theatres, Inc., in Fort Smith, Ark., and we're mighty glad to introduce this new member to his many fellow showmen in this organization. Walter should be in a position to contribute lots of good live show tips to this department and if he'll do this at the first opportunity, we'll see that all other Round Tablers are let in on what is taking place in show-business out his way.

BOB ARMSTRONG is a busy man out in Seattle, Wash., where he handles publicity for the Jensen & Von Herberg theatres. This showman has also become a member of this organization and to show good faith sent along word concerning recent activities of Manager Coyle at the Liberty Theatre. We are indeed glad to have Armstrong with us and hope that his association with this Club will prove beneficial to him and all his fellow craftsmen. As a matter of fact, we feel sure that he'll be a great help toward keeping the ball rolling along and will look forward to future communications.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. V. BELLS hails from Klamath Falls, Oregon, where he stands at the helm of the Pelican Theatre and he, too, has climbed aboard the Round Table band wagon for membership in the fastest growing organization of its kind. He's another one of those live-wire showmen in the great Northwest and it is to be hoped that he will also do his utmost to keep these pages filled with interesting slants on the business of selling shows. Accept a cordial welcome from Club headquarters, Bells, and let us hear from you just as often as you can find time.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. R. WORKMAN operates the Coliseum Theatre in Marseilles, Ill., and judging from data at hand he's an independent exhibitor. His house seats 600 and is equipped to present all shows in the most modern manner, so we'll be looking forward to receiving information about what this new Club member is doing in show business. The other fellows will be waiting to hear from you, Workman. Shoot along some ideas.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending January 27

Paul Ash continues to purvey his distinctive brand of original entertainment at the Warfield and apparently has an inexhaustible bag of tricks from which to draw. Warfield patrons contrast him with the Ash of seven or eight years ago, when he was at the old Granada here and find the change to his advantage. Formerly, he occupied the spotlight, but now seems to delight in extolling the merits of those on the bill with him. He has almost a hypnotic gift in persuading audiences that some of the talent presented is of the sure-fire star type and gets applause from many not addicted to the clapping habit.

This week's offering is "Ooo-La-La," which splashes a Montmartre atmosphere all over the stage and proves a veritable festival of comedy, dance steps, catchy tunes, acrobatics and scenic effects.

Members of the orchestra, in gay costumes, troop into their places in the stage set through a curtain entrance and Paul Ash finally dashes on in the garb of a Parisian Apache, completing the cafe picture.

Armans and Perez, in the attire of sailors, offer some fine hand-to-hand work and tumbling, doing difficult stunts with such dispatch that they appear easy. A springboard stunt, with double and triple somersaults, gets generous applause.

Oscar Young and Bernard Katz, of the orchestra, are featured in a two-piano duet, their number being "Old Man River." Buddy Duray, a recent "Discovery Night" find, sings "What a Thrill to Hear It From You."

Florence Dunand, young, graceful and beautiful, in a costume made up largely of beads, dances in semi-classical and acrobatic styles. Ward and Van, old vaudeville favorites, appear as street musicians and demonstrate that they can still play more off key than any other humans and survive. Before they leave a real exhibition of musicianship is given, however, with harp and violin featured.

Sally Sweet, who was with Paul Ash in Chicago, warbles in her own sweet style and insures a good hand for herself by going down to the theatre floor and singing to some of the staid gentlemen in the front row.

The show, packed with good entertainment, comes to a close with a novelty number by the orchestra. It is above the average by several notches, with several of the numbers of exceptional merit.

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending January 20

Earl, Jack and Betty opened with some clever and fancy roller-skating which is about the best seen here in many a moon.

Fields and Bell did comic antics, handsprings, flap-flops, along with funny chatter and other nonsense.

The Roxy Gang, composed of John Griffin, Adelaide DeLoca, C. Wright, D. Samoiloff and Allen Perado at the piano, presented several well-liked classical and popular song hits.

Artie Lewis and Peggy Ames delivered brand new gags, surefire patter, and pleasing turns that kept the patrons laughing.

The 17-year-old giant, Henry Mullins, was brought out for more laughs.

JULIA DAWN

This charming young lady, known throughout the world as the "Golden Voiced Organist," is now featured at the Publix-Aztec theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

She has played in many deluxe houses throughout the United States and recently returned to this country from a two-year engagement in the deluxe theatres of Australia. This is Miss Dawn's second engagement in San Antonio and she is going back to an audience which will welcome her return.

Sees Normal Use Of Music in '32

Now restored to its normal place, a balanced use will be made of music in pictures during 1932, in the opinion of Max Steiner, head of the music department at the RKO Radio studios. It is destined to come into its rightfully important place on the screen, is Steiner's belief, basing his thought on an analysis of the current trend in public taste.

Noting that music and the theatre have been associated for over two thousand years, Steiner sees there an alliance that cannot easily be thrown over.

"The screen in its first vocal days, overplayed this alliance," he points out. The pendulum swung back the other way, according to Steiner, and just now is music reaching a normal balance, expected to be reflected in the films of 1932.

Jackie Cooper to Tour

Jackie Cooper, youthful MGM star, will make a personal appearance tour of Loew houses, arriving in the East early in February.

STAGE SHOWS

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending January 28

The title of this week's stage-show is "Home." It features the very popular Russ Columbo. He opens the show by singing special lyrics to the popular song, "Home," accompanied by the organ twins, Merle and Elsie, directly after the audience had sung it for the close of the organ solo. The idea of "homes," staged in different locales, was carried throughout the show. The main part of the show opened with a snappy dance routine by the Dave Gould Boys and Girls (8 of each). Columbo next introduced the 3 Georgian Sisters, who beautifully harmonized "Blue of the Night" and "Some of these Days." They used special arrangements and put their offering over in a first class manner, gaining for themselves a very good reception. The Three Little Words proved to be young colored boys. They are "dancing fools" and the applause given them at the finish of their act was very good. George Burns and Gracie Allen take top honors this week. Their much imitated and most inimitable routine of "gags," dancing and so on, stopped the show. Miss Allen does the "dumb" bit, while Burns does "straight" for her. Without a doubt, this is the best act of its kind, thoroughly entertaining and a sure show-stopper in any theatre.

A beautiful miniature "musical comedy" setting is used for the scene of Columbo's part of the bill. Columbo sings "When We're Alone," while seated with a young woman in an elevator, which seemingly rises. When they reach the roof, lights brighten the stage, which is set as a penthouse. Surrounded by the dance ensemble, Columbo sings, in that pleasing way of his, "Who's Your Little Whozis," "Just a Prisoner of Love" and "Home," for the finale. This was an entertaining show, well staged and presented, and with a cast carefully chosen and thoroughly capable.

Show caught Friday evening. Business good.

Baltimore Century

Week ending January 21

The curtains parted on full stage revealing the Hollywood Collegians banked against a black backdrop. Nine came down front into the song "We Are the College Boys," then returned to seats while all gave a college yell, then four saxophones came down front, followed by three trombones. A lad sang "I Surrender Dear," and a danseuse followed in an acrobatic dance as the Collegians sang behind the curtain. Another girl in coed collegiate costume sang "Ladies and Gentlemen, That's Love," then went into tap steps. Three others did a comedy song, and six presented a travesty of chorines mixing steps. Followed a violin solo to good applause and then came Vera McGinnis, young Baltimore radio entertainer, singing "That's Nothing To Do For My Baby," "Radio Papa," and "You Gotta Bend Down Sister," and a tap dance. A banjoist does a burlesque. In a "trip around the world," they all show how "St. Louis Blues" would be played in various countries.

Operates Smallest Console

Louis Weir, designer and builder of the smallest organ console in the world, has been engaged to operate the theatre's large organ, at the Loew State in Boston, using the diminutive console.

ORGAN SOLOS

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) offers another innovation this week. First it was the placing of the organ console on rollers and putting it on the stage, now he has hooked up the P. A. system so that not only his voice via "mike" is heard through the "big horns" behind screen, but also the tones of the organ, as he plays. This gives his playing a volume heretofore not possible with this instrument. His program this week, consisted of the singing of "Oh Marie," two choruses of "Blue Ridge Moon," one sung by himself and the other by the audience, three or four choruses of that good comedy song, "Crosby, Columbo and Vallee," and a final chorus of "To be Worthy of You."

Hammond's singing is novel, being done in "whispering conversation" style, which always gets a great hand, his ability at the organ is excellent and his smart and subtle chatter never fails to get laughs.

ART THOMPSON (Newark, Ohio Midland). This is a review of the new organist's holiday solo, entitled "Happy New Year." It was introduced as an original singing novelty and was composed of special parodies, lyrics and singable popular tunes. Special lyrics, to the tunes "Smiles" and "Painting the Clouds," told of a singing heart and a smiling face being necessary for us to have a happy year. The first number for the audience was a good song with a happy thought, entitled, "We're Gonna Have a Happy New Year." Thompson first sang special lyrics to the song, himself, through the "mike," to very good applause, and then had the audience join in a chorus. Other singing numbers were: "River, Stay 'Way from My Door," "Harvest Moon," "Sweet and Lovely," and "Faded Summer Love." Though he has been here but a short time, Art Thompson is rapidly becoming very popular.

ARLO HULTS (New York RKO 86th), who is being transferred to another house because of enlarged bills at this house, presented for his final solo a cleverly written novelty entitled "Statistics Show." Smart chatter and singable songs, well presented by this popular young man, featured this entertaining presentation. The opening number was a special about love, written to the tune, "99 Out of a 100." Regular choruses of "Sugar" and "River, Stay 'Way," were then sung by the audience. A "challenge" chorus of "Lies" was sung alternately by the boys and girls and a laugh-provoking chorus to the tune, "Take a Walk," followed. Just before the last number, "'Till We Meet Again," Hults told the audience of his transfer. Their soft responding to the closing number, and their fine applause after it, showed their reluctance to say goodbye to him.

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) presented another of his popular "Sing With Dougherty" community stunts. He opened the solo with an oral introduction of the program, spoken through a "mike.' Incidentally this organist has been using a "mike" for only a few weeks; it's a novel change and it's a great help in "broadcasting" Dougherty's soft, southern drawl. The first number, 'Lies," was played in concert style (as it was a new number, Dougherty used this means to introduce it), then the second chorus was sung by the audience. A chorus of "Asleep in the Deep," for the bass singers only, was surprisingly well sung and created a load of laughs. Egon next introduced the house's singing usher, Larry Riso, who received a great hand for his fine singing of "I'm Sorry Dear," and "All of Me." Solo closed with the singing of "You Try Somebody Else," as the audience lustily applauded.

JOE STOVES (New York Jamaica Valencia) presented a timely and entertaining organ novelty called "Leap Year," which was chockful of comedy and laughs. Special lyrics telling the girls how to get a man were written to popular tunes. The solo opened with one of these self-explanatory lyrics written to the tune, "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea." A special to "East Side" and a regular chorus of "Concentratin' on You" followed. Another special to "Sweet Mystery of Life" was sung by the audience, which continued lustily singing the remainder of the program. These numbers were "Try Somebody Else," another special to "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," a regular chorus of "Call Me Darling," "Time to Fall in Love," and a special closing chorus of "River, Stay 'Way From My Door." Each number was cleverly worked into the solo and Stoves was given an appreciative hand.

FRANK SIMPSON (Torrington Warner) recently presented an extremely entertaining organ novelty entitled "Depression." The continuity of the stunt kidded hard times and throughout gave them plenty of laughs, which helped to put them all in good humor. The solo, composed of the following songs, was enthusiastically sung and enjoyed by the audience: "Try Somebody Else," "Lucille," "Blue of the Night," and a final chorus of "Happy Days." This young man, through his conscientiousness and pleasing presonality, has gained a big popularity in this city.

VERNON GEYER (San Antonio Palace), seated at the console, played "Call Me Darling," "Sweet and Lovely," "I Apologize" and "Good Night, Sweetheart." The folk out front started off a little slow in getting on to the rhythm songs, but the half-filled house wound up with a nice response on the last two numbers. This young organist recently formed a "Micky Mouse Club" and the youngsters pack the Palace Saturday mornings and sing and play to their little hearts' desire.

OVERTURES

NICK MARINARO (New York Astoria Triboro) presented as his overture this week a medley of popular songs given in a snappy, showmanly manner that was very entertaining.

"The Cuban Love Song," nicely crooned through a megaphone by one of the members of the orchestra, proved the outstanding feature.

At the finale, good applause was given this popular director and his orchestra.

HEINZ ROEMHELD (Milwaukee Warner) and his Warner Symphony orchestra present a tonal travesty embodying the selection "Ach Du Lieber Augustine," composed of a number of German folk songs. The selection is presented by the orchestra as it would be played by Gershwin, De Bussy, Linding, Mozart, MacDowell, Rachmaninoff and Liszt. The overture is unique and entertaining in its novelty and was well received.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit, Michigan), as guest conductor, offers selections from "The Chocolate Soldier," assisted by Electa Leonard, soloist. The piece opens with a special arrangement of the hit number from the show, "My Hero." Then follow "The Bulgarians," a march; "Forgive, Forgive," the waltz number, and "That Would be Lovely," the dance tune. Miss Leonard sings "My Hero," and the overture is brought to a crashing close with "The Letter Song." Lighting effects and the master directing of Benavie make the presentation one of delight for the younger element as well as for those who remember the original show.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) directed the orchestra in an overture with "When Day Is Done," as the theme. This started with Klasmer in a spot and the orchestra playing a lively air which gradually slowed into the strains of the theme song. Then Jack Schaeffer, trumpeter, did the tune on a muted cornet.

LOU FORBES (New Orleans Publix Saenger), whose broken ribs are now mended, is directing the orchestra once more in an overture which goes big with the public. It opens with melodies of Kreisler, arranged for orchestra. These fail to click, largely because Mr. Forbes differs with Mr. Kreisler in the matter of tempo. However, "Too Late" brings Forbes back in real style, a clever orchestration, some nice singing of a chorus by Gordon Kirst, and cooperation from the entire orchestra, making it almost a show stop. The closing is "You Rascal, You," with the hot trumpeting Louis Prima singing a parody on the celebrated fall which laid up Forbes for several weeks and then blowing the roof off the theatre.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) and the Wisconsin theatre orchestra offer "Gypsy Airs" with Jack Martin at the organ. The selection includes "Little Gypsy Sweetheart" and other melodies, several of which are sung by Dorothy Jubelirer and Stanley Morner, assisted by a xylophone.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Danny Winkler, general manager of DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, made a trip to Chicago for the Gus Arnheim opening at the Winter Garden last week, and I hope we have many more important openings here so Danny will visit us more often. Danny is without a doubt the handsomest and one of the smartest men in the music business. . . . Other New York publishers who came west for the opening were Joe Santly and Jack Robbins. . . . In reviewing Gus Arnheim's orchestra I can describe it in a few words—no more—no less—"it's the berries! . . .

Don and Ron, organists from the East, are now playing at the Oriental theatre and from all reports will be there for a long stay. . . . Hal Pearl, personality organist at the Sheridan theatre, really is a great personality. . . . Jane Froman is going East to be a guest artist on the Fleischmann program with Rudy Vallee. . . . Jan Garber is opening in St. Paul.

The following bands are scheduled to play the Lucky Strike hour from the Western territory: Herbie Kay, Danny Russo, Don Pedro, Art Kassell, Irving Aronson and Bernie Cummins. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Don Bernard of the NBC studios in Chicago are the proud parents of a baby boy, and from early indications he will follow in the footsteps of his eminent father. . . . The Weiener Minstrel program is due to go NBC chain within the next few weeks. . . .

Clarence Wheeler is the new conductor of the Maytag orchestra. . . . Irving Aaronson is now playing at the Forest Club, New Orleans. . . . Paul Whiteman played the Palace theatre, Chicago, last week and was a sensation, Mildred Bailey and Jack Fulton stopping the shows at every performance. . . . Walter Donovan has a hit in the "Penthouse Serenade." . . . Maurie Sherman is a prime favorite with pleasure seekers on the North Side. . . .

Irene Taylor, who is featured with Charlie Agnew's band at the Edgewater Beach hotel, has had numerous attractive offers from New York agents for commercial work due to the good work she is doing on the air. Irene is a comer, with a great voice, a marvelous personality and an abundance of good looks.

Walker Weds Frank, Lillian While Rudy Holds the Ring

One of the most colorful events of the season took place Friday, January 29, when Louis Bernstein, president of Shapiro, Bernstein & Company, gave his daughter, Lillian, in marriage to Frank Kelton, in charge of exploitation for the company.

Miss Bernstein was a student of the Robert Louis Stevenson and Benjamin Dean schools and is well known in dramatic circles as "Lillian Benton." Kelton, who recently received his commission as lieutenant in the United States Army Reserve, has a host of friends throughout the country, particularly in the music business.

"Air Theatre" Three Years Old

The RKO "Theatre of the Air" was to have celebrated its third anniversary, Friday night, January 29, with a program over an NBC network at 10:30. Numerous guest artists were scheduled to attend.

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Fisher

Week ending January 15

Just who is responsible for the use of a mammoth drape set for the skit featuring Alice Joyce and Tom Moore at the Fisher, is not known, but if the desire was to dwarf the characters and give the audience an idea of how Hollywood does things in a BIG way, the effect was perfect. But, as a result, both Miss Joyce and Mr. Moore suffered.

The entire stage was utilized for the skit—a satire on modern marriage, with Mr. Wood acting as the gentleman about to elope with another man's wife—and muffled the voices of the cast to such an extent that clear hearing of the lines was next to impossible past the halfway mark in the auditorium.

Miss Joyce, as always, is charming, Mr. Moore's performance, while nicely handled, lacks conviction when one remembers that he is the wronged husband. Their reception was hearty.

Murand and Girton opened the show with a bicycle act in which the young woman was the whole show. The several back flips which the chap turned did not justify his presence.

May Usher, familiar to Detroit audiences, sang her usual line of songs, with the Ritz brothers capering through the bill, and winding up with some hokum that still gets a few laughs. The bill is not up to the usual standards of this house, save for the Joyce-Moore combine.

Portland Orpheum

Week ending January 21

Jack McLallen and Sarah were the headline act of another clever vaudeville bill. They have refurbished their act with some new jokes which registered every minute with the increased audience. McLallen's serious, innocent manner of offering the comedy made it doubly effective. He has able partners in "Sarah" and an Italian dialect accordionist, who matches him in solemn humor.

The Iacolucci quartet, consisting of two clever boys and two gifted girls, coaxed lively music equally well from both violins and accordions. This act was given a setting and costuming that emphasized its quality.

Irene Vermillion, clever dancer and contortionist, entered into her act with the wildest abandon, finishing with a high backward dive off the grand piano. The act included three additional damsels, who were not hard to look at, and were also fair singers.

Charles Carrer opened the bill with a skillful juggling act.

Matt Howard and the RKO Westerners were again in the pit after a week's vacation.

Week ending January 20

In addition to the motion picture program offered at the RKO theatre here this week, a highly entertaining vaudeville bill is being presented with Billy Gleason ably featured as master of ceremonies. He is being considered as a finishing touch to an excellent bill here.

The six Lidos are amazing acrobatic dancers. The feminine steppers' whirlwind performance, the dashing color of the act and its sprightly newness combine to make it a hit in a season of many dance offerings. And, to add to this, the ensemble is so very easy on the eyes.

Kitty Doner gets the big type, but has strong competition for headline honors. This engaging impersonator of dashing young men is better than ever in an act into which she has put much originality.

Coscia and Verdi are about the most amusing musical artists we have seen in the Far West. Both are accomplished players who cannot take themselves seriously. Their music is offered as "glorified and modified" and it is both.

An orchestra program and the picture, "Girl of the Rio" with Dolores Del Rio, round out the bill.

Milwaukee Warner

Week ending January 14

Ted Lewis and his band of sixteen is the big noise on the Warner stage this week. He steps into the spotlight right from the start with his high hat and engaging personality to croon and offer on his clarinet "Kiss Me Again," "Mighty Like a Rose" and "Sugar."

Eleanor Brooks steps a hot number, following which Lewis offers "Dream a Little Dream of Me," which is augmented by a chorus of eight attired in tuxedo and high hat to resemble Ted.

The Dixie Four harmonize nicely through several selections including "How Come You Do Me Like You Do." The quartet is also clever at fast stepping and sets a furious pace to the tune of Ted Lewis' band.

Ted next puts his band through their paces in connection with a minstrel band offering, while Charles Noble Whittier, colored tap dancer, dusts the boards in an efficient manner.

Referred to as Ted Lewis, Jr., a minute chocolate drop dances and sings his way right into the hearts of the audience. The little lad is called back for several encores and wisecracks with Ted Lewis. His vocal offering is "If I Could Be With You."

The chorus' next number is Hawaiian in atmosphere, with snappy stepping by Miss Brooks. It is followed by Lewis' rendition of "St. Louis Blues."

The finale brings the entire troupe upon the stage dancing and singing to "Roll on Mississippi."

Dunn Continues on Stage

James Dunn, continuing his stage engagements, opens at the Fox in Philadelphia on Friday, January 29. At the conclusion of his engagement he will return to the Coast to make "Little Teacher," with Marion Nixon, at the Fox studios.

Names Booked by Warners

Recent stage bookings at Warner houses include: Clark & McCullough, Mastbaum, Philadelphia; Ted Lewis, Stanley, Pittsburgh and Mastbaum; Sue Carol and Nick Stuart, Stanley, Pittsburgh.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE-EN ROUTE

My dear "J. C.":

I am sure you will be interested in hearing something about the newest achievement of RCA Photophone, Inc., and the RCA Victor Company, which has just been introduced and which already is creating no end of comment. After four years of intensive development, the engineers of those two companies, which, by the way have just been consolidated, succeeded in developing the first 16 mm. sound-on-film motion picture projector. It is just about the last word in sound reproduction and was designed particularly for the educational and industrial fields. It could be used in any small auditorium and would be just the thing for trade shows in small communities. The apparatus, which consists of a projector weighing but forty-three pounds and a loud speaker weighing only twenty-two pounds, is all A.C. operated and easily transportable. You could carry it in the rumble-seat of "April Shower" without the slightest inconvenience. We have demonstrated this equipment to large groups of men and women who are interested in motion pictures and everybody is quite enthused over its possibilities. You will run across lots of people who will be interested in hearing about this machine. If you will drop me a line and inform me where I can reach you during the next few weeks, I will mail you complete information about this truly amazing development. It is literally a "theatre in a handbag" and I am of the opinion that there are hundreds of schools, churches and halls in the towns you visit where it would be just the thing. So when I send you all the information, you tell 'em, "J. C."

Sincerely,
G. K. RUDULPH

JENKINS' COLYUM

Hollywood, Cal.

DEAR HERALD:

We want to give you bachelor boys some fatherly advice. Don't come to Hollywood during Leap Year; you won't have a Chinaman's chance. Self preservation is the first law of nature, and acting on that we have had a big sign painted to go on our car which reads, "Sorry girls, but we're married."

Our fellow comrade in crime, E. E. Sprague of Goodland, Kan., has located out here and he's a bachelor and a swell looking guy with a Rolls-Royce and a lot of dough and he won't stand any more show during Leap Year than a crap shooter in a bunch of ivory sharks. It's too bad, and he's a nice fellow, too.

These girls out here are all pepped up
To grab some guy who's got the dough,
They grab ahold like a bulldog pup.
They won't shake loose, they won't let go.
They stick and hang the best they can
And thank the Lord they've got a man.

Business has begun to pick up in Los Angeles. Autoists killed sixteen the first four days of 1932, and if business continues at that rate, by the end of the year they will have depopulated the city by a gross total of fourteen hundred and sixty and that ought to make a pretty good showing. The nut houses are not doing one-tenth the business in automobile drivers they ought to do.

Some of the stars we have interviewed and some we haven't, mostly haven't.

Louise Fazenda: Louise makes lovely waffles and raises Plymouth Rock chickens. She also plays in comedies and delights in making butterscotch fudge and popcorn balls for the kids. The kids are all strong for her. So are we.

Richard Dix: Dick is a strong advocate of a heavy government tax on bachelors to relieve the depression. Reno has been clamoring for this also.

Thelma Todd: When a baby, Thelma took all the sweepstakes at the baby shows and she has been improving gradually ever since.

Clark Gable: Oh, girls! oh, girls! You ought to see him. We met him when he was making a scene with Marion Davies and Raymond Hatton in "Polly of the Circus." Everybody thinks he's great and Clark can't very well dispute it. He's a regular fellow and the Ohioans want to run him for President.

Wallace Beery: Wallace sat at another table in the cafe, but we didn't get to meet him. Too bad for both of us. He looks just like you think he does, and has adopted three children and a brand new airplane. Isn't that fine of him?

Zasu Pitts: Her parents were very brilliant people, but when Zasu was a baby she fell out of her high-chair on her head which didn't hurt her a bit, for she has been getting funnier and funnier ever since. In fact, she has become so funny that it is dangerous for us to go and see her play any more.

Tay Garnett, director: Patsy Ruth Miller claims that Tay is the best director in the business, and Patsy ought to know, for she has made a lot of fine pictures with very able directors. When a wife will brag on her husband it is proof conclusive of their domestic felicity.

Laurel and Hardy: Oliver eats chocolate bon bons and feeds Stan on dill pickles. They photograph best in a real view. They sometimes play in comedies.

Will Rogers: We didn't see him; he's over in China. That's why Japan took Manchuria.

Polly Moran: Polly said to us, "Well, Colonel, the fault was all hern. All I said to her was, says I to her, says I, 'Marie, dear, do you know that if you wasn't so fat you'd look exactly like your grandmother on your grandfather's side?' And this made her sore and she said to me, says she, 'Well, Polly, honey, if your grandmother and grandfather had of known what you would look like they'd have—well, there's no use in going any further, for what could be expected of an Irishman, anyhow.' That's just what she said to me, and then the fight was on."

Raymond Hatton: We met Raymond when he was making a scene in "Polly of the Circus." If he ever makes a funnier picture than he and Wallace Beery did in "Behind the Front" they will have to use spirits of ammonia (or frumenti, preferably frumenti) to bring us to. Raymond is an all-right guy.

Marie Dressler: Marie said, "You just watch me land at the top of the next '15 Box Office Champions' and then let Polly Moran call me fat if she dares. Huh! the very idea.'" (Note: Be careful, Polly, there's another row brewing.)

Al Christie, Christie Comedies: Al's favorite sport is hunting rabbits. He has an Airedale that is half Bullfoundland and half Skyoodle and Al says he can smell a rabbit farther than any one can smell a ginricky. Al says that Christie comedies are the life of the program and we agree with him.

Al Jolson: He is said to have made a picture called "The Singing Fool," or something like that.

Harold Lloyd: Burchard, Nebraska, is very proud of him.

Nancy Carroll: She made a lot of fine pictures and "Follow Thru."

Clara Bow: Showed excellent judgment by getting married.

Leo, the MGM lion: Don't be alarmed, folks. He's stuffed and perfectly harmless. That roar you hear comes from the press agents.

Pete Smith: He's the man responsible for the MGM "Sports Shorts," in spite of his unusual name. "Sports Shorts" are delightful two-reelers. They are worth considering.

Sid Grauman: Known in Hollywood as a theatreman. Has a habit of long-standing of pleasing the public at the Chinese and Egyptian theatres.

Wesley Fisher: Wes operates the Home theatre out on Jefferson avenue. He came from Nebraska to Los Angeles and ought to have known better.

To be continued if it stops raining.

J. C. Jenkins,
The HERALD Man

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

WE ALL MUST DO OUR BIT TO LET our wants be known, and your valued journal is the only and best medium to let the whole industry know that we want good pictures.

Did you ever hear the story about the little fish swimming out into the deep water among the big whales? Well, you know this poor little fish surely must have been forced out—just like we little exhibitors—forced to come out among the big whales, the producers, and say something; even if it should be said from one of the smallest exhibitors.

There has been lots said and printed in the different papers and journals throughout the whole industry of this picture business, but just what good it has accomplished not one of us has been able to see. So what is the use to continue to try do something by talking and using printed matter when it has not done any good after these many years passed?

Now, don't you think it is time to do what we have got to do and quit squawking about it? And this is what we have got to do—get the producers to make us pictures that will draw the people out to see them. Every exhibitor knows what I mean when I say, Get the people to come to see the pictures at our theatre. We have had so many pictures in the last batch that have almost disgusted the general picture-going people that they are looking for other amusements, and we little exhibitors are showing to almost empty seats now each night.

I will tell you what I know is doing this, and also tell you what my people tell me is the cause that they do not come to see my pictures any more. They say there is nothing in the picture to interest them. They say the picture opens with talking, talking, talking, and it ends talking, talking, talking—no changes, just a continuous talking from start to finish.

Now, brother exhibitors, don't you think it is time to stop talking about wanting good pictures? Don't you think it is time now that we have them? Everybody knows what a good picture is. You cannot fool them any longer by putting out a big bait in front of your theatre. If the picture is good and you are lucky enough to get one or two in your show the first night they will advertise it; and the second and third nights you will get a crowd.

It's mouth to mouth advertising, when the pictures are good, that counts.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

A Norseman Protests

AT PRESENT IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO play and show films from U. S. A. in Norway and several other countries in Europe, because the public doesn't like the American language. It is very difficult to understand it. If they wouldn't speak so rapidly, but distinctly, we then could understand them and like them. There is too much dancing, too much of dancing girls. They're only dancing and talking. The action is not worth two cents. In German and Swedish films there is very little of that. Therefore the public likes them.

I am sure Europe would like American films again if they would stop these things. I hope America soon will try better to suit their films to us Europeans.—E. Hammerkvist, Brevik, Norway.

Constructive

SO GRATIFYING WAS THE PRE-RE-lease review by Leo Meehan on "Dance Team" that we decided to use this review as a medium of selling this picture to the motion picture-going public of Washington, D. C. We had the review set in two-column measure and had it reprinted as a run-of-paper ad for four of the leading papers, namely, Star, Times, News and Herald.

We also had the review blown up and put it out in front of our house as an advance ad, and already we have had much favorable comment on the picture, and naturally expect to do a land office business.

May I mention at this time that every one connected with this theatre is an ardent reader of Motion Picture Herald, and finds valuable material in the same.

Here's hoping that your constructive ideas may continue forever, and extending our best wishes.—Louis A. Brown, Director of Advertising and Publicity, Fox Theatre, Washington D. C.

Speaking of Jaysee—

WE WOULD NOT MISS READING J. C. Jenkins' page for anything. We enjoy his page as much as anything in the magazine.—Elmer E. Gailey, Gay and Crystal Theatres, Wayne, Neb.

Out of the Red

WE CLOSED THE MERRY LAND THEA-tre at Addison, Mich., last November, because we had made nothing for a year, on account of having silent theatres. We opened the last of May this year with sound-on-film, but lost money steadily until two months ago, when we reduced our admission price for all regular shows to 10 cents and 15 cents. These last two months we have been out of the red and business is improving. Good luck to you.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatres, Addison, Mich.

Fox Buys Three New Stories

Three recent story purchases by Fox include "Down to Earth," for Will Rogers; "Little Teacher," for James Dunne and Marion Nixon; "After the Rain," for Sally Eilers and Spencer Tracy.

McDonough Named President Of RCA Victor by Directors

J. R. McDonough was elected president of the RCA Victor Company at a meeting of the board of directors last week. He succeeds E. E. Shumaker, whose resignation became effective December 31 last.

McDonough, now 37, entered the employ of RCA in 1924, acting in various capacities since then. He has been assistant to the president of RCA, assuming the duties of executive vice-president of RCA Victor in 1931.

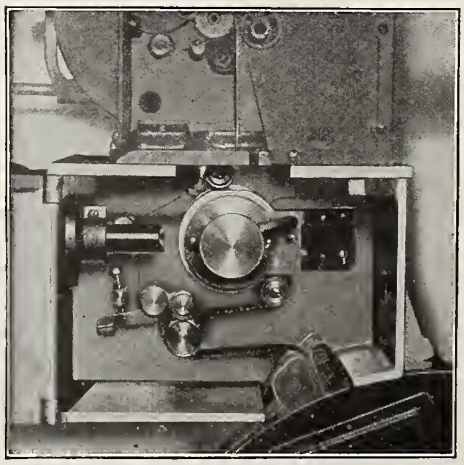
Photophone Faders

Some inquiries have reached my office regarding the number of types of fader employed in connection with RCA Photophone equipment. There are two types, namely: a manually operated potentiometer, and a relay with remote switch controls.

The first named is used with the old type of equipment. The second supersedes the old type on the new models of this equipment.—F. H. R.

Harboard on N. Y. Life Board

General James H. Harboard, chairman of the board of RCA, has been elected a director of the New York Life Insurance Company. Colonel Samuel Reber, RCA general foreign representative, has returned to New York after several weeks in Europe.



RCA Photophone Moves Office

The offices of RCA Photophone, Inc., have been removed to Camden, N. J. The address is now Front and Cooper Streets, Camden, instead of 411 Fifth avenue, New York.

Miss MacDonald Plans Tour

Jeanette MacDonald will undertake a world tour immediately upon the completion of "Love Me Tonight," Paramount film in which she is working opposite Maurice Chevalier. The tour is scheduled to begin at Honolulu in the spring.

HERE'S YOUR "HAPPY ENDING"

Your final big moment comes when, after trying this and that to bring business, your audience responds to Syncrofilm! When they actually hear actors speak like human beings and orchestras play like musicians, they make up their mind to come again—often.

Believe it or not, that has happened in hundreds and hundreds of houses. We've got the letters to prove it. And although we offer money back to any dissatisfied Syncrofilm owner, we've never had a call.

Syncrofilm gives no trouble. It's built like a $200 watch. So you get bigger patronage and profits along with contentment in the booth.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 109

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 115.—(A) Will an a.c. arc deliver 50 per cent as much light to the condenser as well as a d.c. arc of equal amperage? (B) If a.c. is used at the arc, should an attempt be made to utilize light from both craters, or only from one? Explain fully. (C) Name at least two points of difference as between a.c. and d.c. projection light. (D) Are the violet lines in the arc stream said to be brighter than the crater floor itself? (E) Does the flow of current through the gas stream cause it to have luminosity, regardless of its temperature?

Bluebook School Question No. 109 was: "(A) Describe a method of testing and sorting needles. (B) How may small diameter needles be quickly sorted out? (C) Tell us exactly what attention YOU give your needles. (D) Supposing the needles to vary in length and diameter, or in either —what will be the effect if they be used? (E) What will be the various effects of dust upon records?"

Some of the answers as to the testing and sorting of needles were just a bit amusing, showing, it seems to me, that those so answering had never given the matter any study at all, or even read that portion of their Bluebook. One man said, "To test my needles I run half a dozen of them a bit, using the same portion of the same record for them all. I listen carefully and if they all sound the same, I figure they are all right. I do this when there is no audience, listening through the monitor horn."

The following answered with approximate correctness upon all points (an asterisk indicating the best answers):

Lester Borst*, Roy J. Arntson*, S. Evans and C. Rau*, Herman Billings*, G. E. Doe*, D. L. Warren*, George Thompson*, S. T. Jones, Bill Doe*, T. VanVaulkenburg, Henry B. Coates*, John C. Davidson*, F. G. Garrison, Charles Tamper, William Broadbent, Henry Sicmann, Tom Hazleton*, Andy Bailey, Mike McGuire*, Dave Goldberg, Roy J. Arntson, H. B. Billings, Frank Davis and Tom Rathburn, H. D. Tyler, John Ahrenson, Dave Andrews, Tom Murphy, P. L. Davis, John Wentworth*, Seymour Carroll, P. T. Garling*, John G. Farmann, Dave Lode, Andrew Breaston, Pat O'Brien*, D. Samuels, Andrew Davis, K. L. Knight, Jack Billings, Thomas McGruder, A. Gibson, P. L. Toeping, Chick Peters, Gorman Helder, Larry Tipton*, Frank Burker, Richard Micheals*, Alonzo Zerach, Richard Singleton, M. D. Dove, Dave Bitdoll, Dan L. Graves, Nic Granby*, T. L. May*, P. H. Bondom, Sam and Andrew Wells, James Traxler, Tom Whitnath, F. D. Roller, Frank Ferguson, C. T. Davis, Dave Anderson, Art Daniels*, John Williams, Dan L. Simmons, H. D. Schofield, R. L. Little, James Ledbetter*, S. Kay, R. Jackson, Dave Lambert and Tom Davis, John Cermak, H. G. Tonlin, Dan Loubs and T. G. Graves.

While always some of the answers listed as correct differ considerably in wording from the one selected for publication, still when carefully analyzed they are found to mean much the same thing. I have selected the answer of G. E. Doe as best suited for publication this week. He says:

"(A) My course with regard to testing needles would depend mostly upon what manufacturer they came from. Reliable, high grade manufacturers now test their product by means of a light beam and projected shadow in such a way that needles varying from standard dimensions are automatically rejected. Less careful makers do not do this, hence in their product many needles may be found which vary in diameter or length, or both, from the standard. I test them as follows (with the remark that I believe the apparatus I have is an improvement upon that suggested by the Bluebook). I had a bar of steel a half-inch thick by one foot long planed perfectly flat on one side, leaving a ridge an eighth of an inch high and an eighth of an inch thick at one side. The bar itself is one and one-half inches wide.

"On the face of this bar, using a hard tempered sharp-pointed tool, I made scratch marks one sixteenth of an inch apart, beginning one half-inch from the back ridge, and continuing until there were eight lines.

"This tool is heavy enough so that it will not bend under any ordinary pressure. Also, its back strip is rigid and perfectly straight. The lines are all exactly parallel with it. I then have only to lay needles with their butts against the back strip to instantly detect any which vary from standard length.

"I also have a bar of steel one foot long by half an inch square, one side of which is planed to a perfectly flat surface. After inspection, for variations in length, I lay this bar on top of the needles, apply a little pressure, tilt the board, and all small-diameter needles slide out. Caution: In event all but two or three fall out, then you may conclude those few are all over-size, reject them and retest for diameter. This is practical, but must be used with common sense and discretion. We test all our needles that are not the product of some high grade manufacturer, in this manner. We determine whether such test is necessary or not by testing the product of a manufacturer a few times when first we use his needles. If it is found his product is unvarying, we then use it without test.

"(B) Answered in (A).

"(C) We make tests as above when it seems necessary, and in addition to that test, the point of each needle is tested to make sure it has not been used. We have a receptacle in which every unused needle is dropped upon removal. This may easily be done merely by touching the needle point to a finger nail. If it is sharp it will stick, if dull it will slide.

"(D) The effect will be to cause a difference in sound. A thin, long needle produces soft relatively low tones. Thick, short needles produce loud and harsh tones.

"(E) Dust will (1) cause record grooves to wear rapidly and (2) set up ground noise and in every way affect the reproduced sound to its detriment."

Soon we shall have come to the end of this series, whereupon we shall start at the beginning again, with some very important and perhaps difficult sound questions occasionally interspersed. It is hoped that all the old-timers will "stick." There are very many things in projection, other than sound, which we need to go over again once in a while, and I am sure you old-timers will find yourselves benefited if you follow through.

I want to commend men like Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, Herman Billings, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe and others who have sent answers regularly for a long while, and almost invariably acceptable ones, too. But even more than that, I desire to express appreciation of those many who have followed through for a very considerable time, sending answers almost every week with hardly ever an acceptable one.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

HAIL COLUMBIA!

THE week's realignments in Columbia Pictures Corporation, by which Mr. Harry Cohn becomes president, with Mr. Joe Brandt retiring to a post on the board of trustees and Mr. Jack Cohn vice president in charge of distribution, brings sharply to attention one of the more significant and interesting developments of the industry in recent years.

The rise and career of Columbia might well be taken by students of the industry as a markedly perfect type form of corporate development within the institution of the motion picture. It began as the personal enterprise of the three enterprising young executives under the rather personified name of C. B. C. Pictures. This enterprise, in a period when several old and once substantial enterprises were undergoing processes of disintegration under the pressure of changing conditions, accumulated strength and grew up from a state's right concern to a substantial national production and distribution concern.

It is interesting, too, to observe that Columbia, like the hardier trees of the orchard, has grown up from its own roots and has built on earned rather than acquired capital. It is a coincidence that this evolutionary week in Columbia comes in the midst of the Laemmle-Universal Jubilee, for it was in the busy, pioneering, ambitious Universal that the founders of Columbia served their novitiate and acquired that authority of showmanship for which there is no substitute. All the film world knows, too, that charmingly humorous story of the constructive intrigue by which Mr. Jack Cohn and the late George Loane Tucker conspired, without authority or the knowledge of the company, that first great Universal feature drama, "Traffic in Souls." It was a beginning which got somewhere, and is still going.

JAPAN AND PICTURES

WITH belligerent, busy little Japan looming large on the map of world affairs these days, there is a special interest in considering some spectacular facts about its motion picture industry. Creditable statistics report that Japan produced more than 700 feature length photodramas in 1930 and a comparable number in 1931. This product has come from some twenty concerns, with four-fifths of it from four dominant organizations. Japan has some 1300 theatres of which only about 200 play any considerable percentage of foreign productions. A thousand houses are exclusively devoted to the native pictures. The Japanese take their pictures in large doses. A twenty-two-reel program is standard in the all-native theatres. The American double bill would be just a curtain raiser in Tokyo. The Japanese feature drama is really what Hollywood used to call "a quickie," being produced in haste at an average cost of about $5,000.

Incidentally, all pictures in Japan have been "talkies" for some thirty years. It began when imported productions with titles in alien languages offered the only screen fare. The Japanese exhibitors installed, on stage beside the screen, an expert monologist, the "benshi," who explained, interpreted, mimicked. These voices of the screen became popular and developed followings even as the announcers and crooners of the American radio today. In consequence the cinema art of Japan cares little indeed for the costly, complex sound mechanism.

This intense, indigenous film development in Japan is an important indication of an inevitable evolution. Differences in terms of thought and expression, greater than mere linguistic differences, are probably responsible for the relatively more early and ardent development of an insular film art in Japan.

ADVENTURE IN TECHNIQUE

ROMANCE of reality lives again on the screen in "The Magic Carpet" of Movietone, the one-reel travel-adventure-pictorial series which Mr. Truman Talley is producing for Fox. From Zanzibar to Manhattan come factual recordings of the sound camera so treated in the editorial processes that the significant and important natural sounds are preserved while the mere noise, with which so much of topical screen record is cursed, is selectively subdued or eliminated in behalf of an interpretive and sympathetic musical score. The technique is important and might well enjoy the thoughtful consideration of the makers of drama.

Once again, as has been endlessly true through all screen evolution, the newsreel is the working pioneer of technique, the explorer of the scope of the tools of the art.

Most meritoriously "The Magic Carpet," with its abundance of sound facilites, avoids banal explanatory remarks from off stage oracles, and ventures no wisecracks anent the labors of Creation. The camera is permitted to record humor, excitement, thrill and beauty, presented to the audience on their merits without proclamations of the obvious. It may be observed that the patrons who are admitted to have the intelligence to follow a sophisticated dramatic plot will also know that the thundering Victoria is a waterfall without information from the wings.

BUYERS COMING BACK

THERE'S business cheer from the heart of America, reporting right from the class which buys motion picture admissions, in a statement from the Seventh Federal Reserve District, covering Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa and Wisconsin, relating that department store sales for December were 66 per cent above November. That is, to be sure, partly seasonal, but it is important to observe that the December figures, while under those for the month in 1930, are above those for any other December since 1922.

HARRY COHN BUYS BRANDT INTEREST AND BECOMES COLUMBIA PRESIDENT

Jack Cohn Named Vice-President; No Changes in Policies Indicated; Wanger Also Is Made a Vice President

The purchase of Joe Brandt's interest in Columbia Pictures Corporation by Harry Cohn was followed this week by his retirement as president and the simultaneous election of Harry Cohn to the presidency and of Jack Cohn to the vice-presidency.

Selection of Walter Wanger as a vice-president was announced late Wednesday.

In an official announcement from Columbia's headquarters in New York, the new president indicated that there will be no change in policies and management of the corporation which the three partners have so successfully operated. Harry Cohn further indicated that "we hope to announce very soon a lineup of augmented executive personnel," including the "acquisition of one or two of the foremost figures" in the industry. Jack Cohn will continue to be a dominant factor in the administration of Columbia's affairs, with his personal attention given to distribution. President Harry will, as heretofore, spend the major portion of his time at the Hollywood studios.

The basic employee personnel, both in distribution and production, will remain as is, Harry Cohn discloses in the announcement, which follows:

"To set at rest all conjecture concerning the status of the present officials of our organization I wish to state that following the resignation of Mr. Brandt as president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, I have been elected to the presidency and that Jack Cohn has assumed the duties and title of vice-president.

"It is with regret that we announce the acceptance of Mr. Brandt's resignation, who, in association with Jack Cohn and myself, has directed the destinies of Columbia for many years. While this association has been most pleasant at all times, Mr. Brandt felt himself in need of a long deferred rest from his arduous duties. While he welcomes the opportunity afforded by his retirement for a vacation, he shares with us the regret occasioned by the present termination of several years of congenial team work in the interests of our company.

"On behalf of the company, I wish to emphasize the fact that the policies and management will be carried out as heretofore. Our entire thought, as in the past, will be to serve to the fullest extent possible the interests of the thousands of exhibitors who have learned to depend upon Columbia to protect their box-offices.

"In keeping with the natural expansion of the production and distribution activities of our organization, I hope to have an interesting announcement to make in the near future concerning the acquisition of one or two of the foremost figures in the motion picture industry. We are not standing still. We are forging ahead, as always. With this thought in mind, we hope to announce very soon a line-up of augmented executive personnel which will increase the already expressed confidence of the industry, as well as the public, in our ability to maintain and strengthen the dominant position Columbia has achieved.

"The basic employee personnel, both in the production and distributing branches, will remain as it has been in the past and I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to express our appreciation to all employees, East and West, and throughout the world, of the loyalty and services they have contributed in the past and to assure them that I know we can depend upon them for this same support in the future."

Mr. Cohn's statement was followed on Wednesday by this announcement from Columbia:

"Harry Cohn's first action as the newly-made president of Columbia Pictures is to announce the selection of Walter Wanger as vice-president of the company. The appointment takes effect immediately. The induction of Mr. Wanger, who was general manager of the production department of Paramount for more than six years, is in line with Mr. Cohn's announced policy of bringing new and young blood into Columbia.

"Mr. Wanger's theatrical experience dates from his association with Granville Barker in 1914, through some years as a legitimate producer in America and England and his period as Paramount's general manager of production.

"Mr. Cohn stated that he was happy to acquire the cooperation of Mr. Wanger in the efforts of the present Columbia management to maintain its reputation as the leading independent film producing organization."

Harry Cohn Will Spend Most of His Time at Studios While Jack Cohn Continues in Distribution; Brandt Stays as Trustee

Executives at Columbia would not discuss the nature of Wanger's specific duties.

Brandt will remain as one of the trustees, retiring officially on March 1. Following the vacation mentioned in Columbia's official announcement, Brandt has not decided upon future plans.

Columbia Pictures now has outstanding 17,731 shares of $3 cumulative convertible preferred stock and 164,098 shares of no par common. On June 30, 1931, the company listed total assets of $6,350,116.

It might be said that Columbia Pictures was inspired by the success and popularity of fan magazines, for it was this sort of

INDEPENDENTS IN EAST DISCUSS UNIT SIMILAR TO ONE ON COAST

Amalgamation Into One National Organization Will Be Next Step If New York Plan Materializes; See Wider Field

Independent producers and distributors in the East will be asked to band together in a cooperative body similar to the organization founded in Hollywood three weeks ago by practically all important independent concerns. If the New York plan materializes, efforts of its sponsors will be directed toward the amalgamation of both Eastern and Hollywood associations into one national organization.

Basically, the New York plan involves the establishment of a solid front of independents in their relationship with the motion picture industry, although its authors say that the movement has not passed the early stages of discussion. They have high hopes, however.

Would Decide Credit Ratings

In an effort to make the way clear for economically-sound franchise deals with state right exchanges, it is planned to determine the credit ratings of exchanges, which information will be available to producer members.

Various independents in recent weeks have pointed out that a wider field for independent effort is at hand, and inspired by this rapid reconstruction of an independent market, salvaged from a wreck made when sound changed the economic methods of operation, practically all of Hollywood's independent leaders banded together early in January in a cooperative and protective association through which it is hoped to strengthen their position in the industry. Known as the Independent Producers Association, the new unit immediately set to work to arrange new deals with studio labor, to promote stronger relations between producers and studios, study production costs with a view to lowering them, and take into consideration practically all phases of operation in which the independent is interested. M. H. Hoffman heads the Coast unit, sponsors of which also include Phil Goldstone, Al Mannon, Nat Levine, Morris Schlank, Burton King, Larry Darmour, C. C. Burr and Ralph Like.

In the meantime, the association in Hollywood last week made known that an immediate reduction in production costs is the first important task to be undertaken.

In a proposed code of ethics, there would be included a clause to do away with all trade acceptances, resulting in a state right exchange paying C. O. D. for prints.

Independents in the East are of divided opinion as regards the advisability of a New York association. "The plan would not fit into our scheme of things at all," stated W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, who said that his company "is really nationalized in that we have definite arrangements for distribution with 33 exchanges throughout the country."

There are only a few independent concerns headquartering in the East, the majority having offices on the Coast where production is centered.

Louis Weiss, president of Weiss Brothers, in commenting on the proposed Eastern combination, said: "It does not mean a thing. It might help, and possibly will not do any harm, but there is not a single evil in independent operation which cannot be cured by proper financing arrangement.

"The main point is that they all need money, and plenty of it, and it's about time they cut out the kidding and go and get it." Weiss suggested that a few independents should pool resources and open up the unprofitable or closed territories, establishing their own exchanges in situations which Weiss described as being "tight."

Weiss stated that the future of independents at the moment looks brighter than at any time in the past seven years. "However, we must use considerable energy in those territories where the going is bad, particularly in the South, at Denver and Minneapolis and elsewhere," he said, blaming the condition of the foreign market for making each distributor entirely dependent on American sales.

The proposed association in New York is favored by John R. Freuler, president of Big Four Film Corporation. Freuler places a maximum of faith in the future equality of the independents comparable to the national companies as factors in the industry. He pins his hope, specifically, on the newly formed IMPPA, which came into being recently on the West Coast.

"It now becomes reasonable," Freuler said, "that hopes should be renewed and tentative plans drafted for a sister affiliation here in the East among independent producer-distributors, some of whom are already involved in the IMPPA, like ourselves, through the association of their production heads. In our case Burton King's entrance automatically annexes us.

"Personally, I feel that any organization conducted on good business principles, with a live and let live policy, which I know animates this association, must be a powerful influence for mutual good.

Urges Constructive Plan

"Briefly, my feelings are that any association of producer-distributors should be objective—there should be a definite policy outlined and the platform should remain, at all times, and despite powerful influences, distinctly constructive.

"As a tentative formula I would suggest the following functions for such an Eastern association, which would of necessity have numerous ramifications and increasing responsibilities:

"(1) To fight compulsory censorship and to seek in its stead sane regulation by such helpful and rational bodies as the National Board of Review and other groups which have no ulterior motives, no ruthless tactics and which do not use their scissors as a medium for their own survival.

"(2) a—To bar multiplicity of expense in bettering product.

"b—To protect against piracy.

"c—To settle minor disputes without the delays which tend to interrupt the proper functioning of production, are expensive and ultimately break down a solid independent front.

"d—To allocate territories cooperatively.

"It is my belief, however," Freuler continued, "that the unions should be reassured of the association's desire and aim to work wholeheartedly with them. It would be regrettable should any antagonism be allowed to form as they have performed some fine and constructive work in the past and will undoubtedly continue as a stabilizing influence.

"It is patent that an association of this kind, welding the best interests of reputable independents, would be conducive to an added prestige and the time now seems ripe for their cumulative interest to become an assured reality."

FOREIGN MADE FILMS TO REOPEN HOUSES DARK FOR LACK OF FILMS

Distributors of Productions from Overseas Increase Imports 20 Per Cent; 150 Pictures Will Be Available, 120 Last Year

Anticipating the reopening of a number of theatres, closed for lack of product this season, distributors of foreign pictures in America will increase their imports approximately 20 per cent this year, it is learned. The additional foreign product available is intended for theatres of 200 to 600 seats which, it is believed, may be operated profitably in many instances with a foreign picture policy.

Operators of small theatres in many metropolitan sections already are experimenting with this plan in houses which had been dark for several months, and several circuits are now reported to be toying with the idea. The Butterfield Circuit, which has approximately 38 dark houses in Ohio and Michigan, is reported about to reopen 10 to 15 theatres for the showing of German pictures exclusively. The Wilmer & Vincent Circuit has reopened two theatres in Pennsylvania for the purpose of experimenting with foreign picture programs, which, if they prove successful in these houses, may be extended to others. In all, approximately 50 theatres have been or are about to be reopened with foreign pictures.

150 Pictures Available

Expecting a slightly increased demand from these additional outlets, American distributors of foreign product will have available this year approximately 150 pictures, as compared with about 120 last year. German pictures will comprise more than half of this number.

The 150 foreign pictures which will be distributed in America will be selected from a foreign offering of more than 200 productions. Numerically they will embrace the following dialogue divisions: German, 80; English, 30; French, 15; Russian, 10; Italian, 4; Swedish, 2; Czecho-Slovakian, 2; Spanish, 2; Yiddish, 2; miscellaneous, 3.

The German picture distribution will be centered largely in three organizations—Tobis Forenfilms, Ufa, and Capitol Film Exchange. British International Pictures will handle virtually all English-made imports; Pierre Arnaud, the French, and Amkino, the Russian.

Ufa Reducing Imports

While most other large distributors of foreign pictures in America will increase their imports this year, Ufa will reduce its imports almost 50 per cent. Ufa's quota this year will be 12 to 15 pictures, as compared with 24 imported in the past twelve months. Capitol Film Exchange, which had 12 German pictures last year, will offer a minimum of 26 this year. Tobis also will have a minimum of 26 German pictures, the same number offered last year. B I P will increase its 17 of last year's block to 26 this year. Corresponding increases in imports also will be made by several smaller importers during the year.

Except for English dialogue pictures, either British-made or the English versions of other foreign producers, little benefit to foreign distributors is expected to accrue during the year as a result of the American product shortage. This belief is general among distributors of foreign dialogue pictures despite the plans for inaugurating foreign programs in theatres about to be reopened. Herbert Grau, Ufa representative, describes foreign program policies in American theatres as being still in an "experimental stage." Too few American exhibitors, he believes, have the required knowledge of foreign pictures to exploit and merchandise them with any great degree of success. In his opinion, it will require another two years to establish a stable market for foreign pictures which could be sustained by exhibitors experienced in foreign picture showmanship.

Poor Imports Blamed

Grau believes that the American market for foreign pictures was handicapped from the start by imports of foreign product of a poor grade. Pictures of lower than average quality, he says, were imported by indiscriminate shoppers in such numbers that the foreign-born American patronage soon found them distasteful, and the American patronage lost its first early interest in foreign product. Ufa's two outstanding pictures, so far as American audiences are concerned, have been "Variety" and "The Blue Angel," both Emil Jannings' pictures. Two new Ufa pictures which are attracting interest among American distributors are "Congress Dancers" and "Bombs of Monte Carlo." Deals for these with American distributors have been discussed, but nothing definite on either has resulted as yet. English versions of both have been produced.

Tobis, likewise, has two new productions in which American distributors are showing interest. One, "Mona Lisa," has been purchased for American distribution by RKO Radio; the other, "M," may be disposed of here to another major distributor. Both pictures are described as good examples of a new German production technique which has for its aim the reduction of dialogue to a minimum, with emphasis on action and picture values which are readily intelligible even to foreign audiences. Columbia is reported to be interested in distribution of another Tobis importation, "Mussolini Speaks."

Limited Outlets Restrict Grosses

American grosses on the average foreign dialogue picture are seldom impressive, due to the limited outlets, most of which are theatres of small seating capacity. The majority of grosses come somewhere between $10,000 and $20,000. The "surprise" grosses invariably are the result of American patronage, rather than of foreign-born patronage, and it was the popularity of "Zwei Herzen in ¾ Takt" with American audiences which sent its gross in this country to the comparatively sensational figure of $80,000.

"The Dreyfus Case," probably will establish an all-time American gross record when its run is completed. Already, it is estimated to have grossed more than $200,000 in this country. It has the advantages of English dialogue and a story founded on historical fact, which are expected to insure its longevity in the American market, as it falls into neither a "cycle" classification, nor one of time limits. Its gross will be from one-half to one-third of that of the average American-made picture, it is predicted. This picture was produced by Sud-Film at the B I P studios in England.

Butterfield and Wilmer & Vincent Circuits Experimenting with Foreign Product for Dark Theatres; Several Show Promise

"Michael and Mary" Another

The Gainsborough-Gaumont production, "Michael and Mary," which will be distributed in America by Universal, is also expected to record good grosses in this country.

In spite of these performances by exceptional foreign productions, little hope of American product is held by foreign producers. The American market is significant in the scheme of foreign distribution, but it is never expected to be an outlet on which to depend for vital revenues. The average foreign picture must rely upon its New York run for profit. Earnings everywhere outside New York just about cover costs of importation, selling and distribution. What is considered a good profit for the distributor of an average foreign picture here is frequently no more than $5,000.

Foreign pictures, unless when distributed by the producer, are bought on a royalty and percentage basis. The royalty, equivalent to a guarantee, is payable in advance, but is deductable from the 50-50 split of the gross which is commonly asked.

Dialogue and Prints Problems

Dialogue and availability of prints are two of the most important problems facing an American distributor of foreign pictures. One method of dialogue treatment that is increasing in favor here involves the super-imposing of translated titles onto the film just above the bottom frame, but the expense of this method prevents it from being a solution to the problem. An increasing demand for foreign pictures among American audiences, however, is forcing a wider use of this method. A growing number of theatres having as high as 60 per cent American patronage are now playing foreign dialogue pictures either regularly or occasionally.

The problem of prints is also an ever present one to importers of foreign pictures, due largely to higher costs of making prints abroad. For the initial print imported for screenings the cost approximates 6½ cents

EXEMPTION UNDER $1 MAY BE CONSIDERED

Would Relieve Motion Picture Theatres But Would Affect "Legitimate"; Acting Chairman Calls Tax Vital

By FRANCIS L. BURT

With U. S. Department of Treasury officials asked to make a new estimate of the revenue to be derived from the various taxes recommended by Secretary Mellon, on the basis of present conditions—the original estimates having been made in October and November—and Representative Crisp of Georgia, acting chairman of the House ways and means committee in the illness of Chairman Collier, warning that special taxes of some sort will have to be imposed, fear is expressed in official circles in Washington this week that some reduction of the present $3 exemption from admission tax may have to be adopted through necessity.

An exemption of $1 now appears to be most favored by the committee. Such an exemption, it is pointed out, would relieve motion picture theatres, outdoor parks, the smaller baseball teams and many of the circuses from taxes which representatives of those activities recently told the committee would kill their business.

Would Affect "Legitimates"

A $1 exemption would undoubtedly affect socalled legitimate theatres, whose representatives also made a strong plea before the committee, but, it has been suggested, apparently no tax can be imposed without hurting somebody and it is felt that most of those who can afford to attend legitimate theatres can also afford the tax.

Allied States representatives, testifying before the committee, indicated their position that motion picture houses in most instances would be all right under a 50-cent exemption, but that other amusements listed would be hard hit. The cheaper amusements are the recreation of the masses, it is said, and this consideration would point to the desirability of an exemption of at least $1.

Members of the ways and means committee last week were represented as planning to obtain all the necessary revenue from income and inheritance tax increases and taxes on the consumption of gas and electricity, telephones and imported oil and oil products.

Predicts Many Special Taxes

This week they are represented as pessimistic over the possibilities of the last four items. Strong protests have been received from many sources. One large company asserted that a tax of one-half cent a kilowatt on generated electricity would double their electric charge. Representatives of the oil importers declared that the imposition of a tax would stop almost entirely the inflow of foreign oil, that, by the way, being the purpose of the independent producers who suggested the tax.

"Every suggestion the Treasury has made for taxes has been opposed in the three weeks we have held hearings," Representative Crisp declared. "Unless the financial stability of the Government is made secure, economic chaos will follow. Every citizen in the United States will be affected adversely unless we balance the budget."

Many special taxes, the Congressman declared, will have to be levied because increases in income, inheritance and estate taxes will not yield sufficient revenue to balance the budget. The administration's tax plan, he said, would fall short by more than $250,000,000 of bringing the amount the Treasury estimated, making it necessary for the committee to devise new ways of raising revenue, even if it adopts all the Mellon recommendations, including the admission tax exemption of 10 cents.

It is said that so seriously has business been injured since the Treasury estimates were prepared three months ago that it is likely the tax bill will include a larger number of items than first anticipated and there are indications that the committee will be forced to accept many of the President's recommendations.

The income account of Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation shows a net profit after taxes of $434,066 for the 12 weeks ended November 20, 1931. This compares with a net of $1,211,808 for the corresponding 12 weeks in 1930, according to a financial bulletin compiled by Dow, Jones & Company, Inc.

Gross profit for the period in 1931 reached $1,745,515, while the 1930 similar period, says the Dow-Jones report, showed $2,936,592.

Following is the income account of the company for the 12 weeks, with a comparison for the same period in 1930, 1929 and 1928, compiled by the Dow-Jones Company:

Goldberg, Lesser to Confer

Joe Goldberg, former Columbia general sales manager, arrived in New York from the Coast this week to discuss with Sol Lesser a plan to inaugurate new production activities. Lesser is due in New York later. Negotiations involving acquisition of an existing distributing unit also will be begun by Goldberg and Lesser about February 15, it was reported.

Fox-Skouras Deal for Entire Wesco Group Is Closed

Official confirmation of the deal by which Skouras Bros. will operate approximately 550 Fox Wesco theatres, effective February 15, was made this week by Fox Film Corporation. Closing of the Skouras deal leaves Fox Theatres operating only five theatres. They are the Roxy, New York; and the Fox theatres at Brooklyn, Detroit, St. Louis and Washington. The Fox Theatre at Philadelphia is included in the Skouras arrangement, while the Fox, at Atlanta, is being operated by Loew's.

The Skouras deal provides for an operating agreement for a period of years and does not involve the sale or leasing of the properties, the Fox announcement states. Included in the Wesco group of approximately 550 are the Fox West Coast Theatres, and its many subsidiaries operating out of Los Angeles, the Midwest and Midland Divisions, operating out of Kansas City, and the Fox Midwesco Theatres with headquarters in Milwaukee. Skouras, it is reported, will operate the Wesco group on a profit sharing basis with a salary guarantee.

Harry Arthur, general manager of Fox West Coast, was reported remaining in that post as a Skouras partner. His contract with Fox has four more years to run. Oscar Oldknow, executive vice-president of Fox West Coast, is also reported as remaining with the new Skouras operating organization in the same capacity. Details of these arrangements were expected to be completed during the Coast visits of Edward R. Tinker, Fox president; Richard Rowland, Fox vice-president, and Spyros and George Skouras. The Fox executives are already in Los Angeles, while the Skouras brothers were to leave New York this week for the Coast. Oldknow has been given a new four-year contract by Fox West Coast Theatres.

Reports that E. L. Alperson and Eddie Peskay, formerly with Warners, were to operate the Fox Midland Circuit for the Skouras organization were denied this week by Elmer Rhoden, Fox Midwest Midland division manager, who remains in that post. Alperson and Peskay, however, may later be given management operation of some other division of the Wesco group under Skouras, it was said. Indications were that Alperson might be placed in general charge of the Skouras New York offices to personally supervise film buying. Jack Sullivan, buyer for Fox West Coast Theatres, would remain in that position, although answerable to Alperson. L. J. Ludwig, who resigned from Publix "by friendly arrangement" to join the new Skouras organization, will also have an important post with the brothers.

Meanwhile, plans were announced in New York by which Skouras house managers are to be placed on a profit sharing basis. Each manager has received expectancy gross figures for the first 14 weeks and, provided the gross intake for the period is above the expectancy figure, house managers will receive 10 per cent of the overage. For managers whose theatres have been operating at a loss, a plan has been worked out whereby they will share in 10 per cent of decreased losses over the 14-week period.

$1,881,927 Credited To Warner Earned Surplus in Quarter

Warner Brothers, Inc., and subsidiaries in the quarter ended Nov. 28, 1931, achieved a crediting of a total of $1,881,927 to earned surplus account, this including a profit of $1,629,152 on redemption of $3,600,000 face value 6 per cent convertible debentures and profit of $252,775 on redemption of subsidiaries' funded debt. Of the $3,600,000 of debentures (series due 1939) retired, $1,287,500 is in anticipation of the annual purchase fund requirement due Aug. 1, 1932.

A net loss of $1,848,868 was reported, after amortization, depreciation, interest, federal taxes, minority interest, and so forth. For the quarter in 1930 that ended November 30, there was a net profit of $1,576,421.

Consolidated income account for the quarter ended November 28, 1931, follows: Operating profit, $7,830,447; amortization of film costs, $5,701,343; amortization and depreciation of all properties, $2,392,241; interest and discount, $1,679,040; provision for investments in affiliated companies, $83,301; federal taxes, $6,105; loss, $2,031,583; other income, $187,841; loss, $1,843,742; minority interest, $5,126; net loss, $1,848,868; preferred dividends, $99,240; deficit, $1,948,108.

Earned surplus account follows: Earned surplus August 29, 1931, $223,747; add: profit on redemption of $3,600,000 face value 6% convertible debentures, $1,629,152; profit on redemption of subsidiaries funded debt, $252,775; total $2,105,674; deduct: Net loss for quarter ended November 28, 1931, $1,848,868; loss on capital assets, $61,764; preferred dividends, $99,240; leaving a balance of earned surplus on November 28, 1931, of $95,802.

Arbitration Resumed in the Warner-Western Electric Case

Hearings were resumed on Tuesday at 195 Broadway, New York, by the arbitration board, composed of Nathan I. Miller, Frank Hogan and Judge Hiscock, in the dispute over royalties between Western Electric and Warner Brothers.

It is not definitely known whether or not this session will be the final one, or the length of time the board will sit. It was previously thought, however, that final testimony in the four-year-old dispute would be introduced at session now in progress.

Thousands of Exhibitors Demand Reduction of Film Prices to Those of Silent Days or Thereabouts; Negotiations Fail

By W. H. MOORING, London

A "state of war" has been reached in the British field, after a long process of attempted conciliation on the rentals question, in which Sam Eckman, Jr., of MGM, as president of the Kine Renters Society, and R. V. Crow, president of the Cine Exhibitors Association, have busied themselves for the past six months.

The present breakdown follows dramatically upon a period in the negotiations which held rich promise of success. But the situation is really grave, and it is doubtful whether the CEA will be able to do less than resist the KRS proposals. The rank and file of exhibitors are mustering strength, and demand that their association shall take a rigid stand against the maintenance of film rentals on established bases.

Thousands Urge Reduction

Thousands of exhibitors, all through the country, are agitating for a reduction of rentals to the silent level or thereabouts. There is serious argument by the exhibitors that rentals can be dropped to 15 to 25 per cent, as compared with the 33 per cent demands being made today. They are unwilling to consider the view that the loss of money to America consequent upon the fall in the pound sterling shall be met out of exhibitors' contributions, and they argue still more effectively that with a higher entertainment tax to meet, and the general effects of lower public spending power, rentals must come down.

Appeals are likely to the Board of Trade, through whom the exhibitors hope to obtain pressure on foreign interests operating on this side. Representations are likely to be made concerning the methods employed by certain American companies in order to obtain first picking in all the best films through extended pre-releases. There is also keen agitation for rental terms for independent exhibitors in line with rates paid by the circuits.

Can't Be Done, Say Distributors

The KRS case rests upon present economic difficulties. Renters say that a standard rate of rentals could not be instituted now, and that any general drop in the earning power of the imported film product would inevitably put many producers completely out of business and would thus reflect to the disadvantage of the exhibitor, whose future film supply would be impoverished.

Whether conferences between the CEA and KRS will be resumed very quickly is not certain at the moment; presumably when hot tempers subside, the parties will have to get together again.

But in the meantime it is plain that the Exhibitors Association, with a growing left wing movement, can no longer hold its membership in leash, with a policy of meek submission, or even mock militancy. It has got to fight or the independent exhibitors, who after all rule the CEA, will break away and form a fighting force on their own. Sam Eckman is not to be envied; his job must now start at a point of re-creating confidence among exhibitors, who are now regarding his recent appeal for goodwill and cooperation between renters and exhibitors as so much preaching.

Meanwhile his year of office as CEA president is drawing to its close, and unless he takes on at his society's invitation for a further year, he will soon be succeeded by Arthur Dent, British executive of British International Pictures.

Canadian Trust Action Seen As Near Conclusion

The first indication of approaching conclusion of the trial of the three individuals and 15 companies and organizations on charges under the Canadian Combines Act and the Criminal Code came Saturday, January 30, when preparations were made for the release from government custody of papers and records belonging to the Toronto companies. These were carted back to the film offices by the truckload on February 1 and an air of normalcy was resumed in the numerous business premises. The documents and books were seized in raids by the provincial authorities three months ago.

Those actually on trial before Justice Garrow are 14 film distributing and theatre circuit companies with headquarters in Toronto; one association, the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, and three individuals only: N. L. Nathanson, former managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation; Samuel Bloom and Irving Samuel Fine, the last two being the directing heads of the Bloom and Fine Theatres, a subsidiary theatre group in Toronto of Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The latter company is one of the 14 firms on trial.

Scores of other firms and individuals were mentioned in the indictment but they are not facing any charges. In effect, they are mentioned as being among those with whom the accused had done business over a period of five years. Incidentally, those named in this manner include some of the big men of the industry in the United States while others are prominent in the trade in Canada as well as numerous firms such as affiliated chains or holding companies.

COMMERCIAL VALUE IN COOPERATION WITH CLUBWOMEN: MRS. McGOLDRICK

Editor of "School and Screen," "Junior Show" and "Your Public" in Motion Picture Herald Addresses A M P A

Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of "School and Screen," "Junior Show" and "Your Public," departments of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was a guest of honor at the weekly luncheon of the AMPA at Sardi's, in New York, on Thursday. Mrs. McGoldrick threw a new light on the activities of the organized groups all over the country in behalf of motion pictures, and outlined the commercial value of cooperation offered by clubwomen, Parent-Teacher associations, alumnae groups, church organizations and community Better Film Councils. Among other things, Mrs. McGoldrick said:

"For a good many years the woman 'uplifter' has been considered by the business men of the motion picture industry as something of a pest. She wanted the pictures to her liking but seemed to have no practical knowledge of the box office by which motion picture making is regulated. Producers, trying to meet the demand of organized club groups, spent large sums of money on high-grade productions. Paramount, for instance, made 'With Byrd at the South Pole,' and Warner Brothers, 'Disraeli'; United Artists threw their hat into the ring with the masterly presentation of 'Abraham Lincoln.' Fox produced 'Song o' My Heart,' featuring John McCormack. It is not necessary to tell the gentlemen experts in exploitation what happened in these instances. The public failed to support the type of picture it had demanded.

A Change Has Come

"But gradually a change has come to those leaders in the community who are directly influential upon audience reaction. There has been a dawning of a new understanding; a new light upon a problem that affected the producers even more strongly than it affected the public. With new awareness, clubwomen who pride themselves on being also good business women, began to see the other side of the question. Within the past few years those of us in close touch with this situation have watched the rising tide of helpfulness. In city after city, in the large and small towns from one coast to another, organized groups have elected motion picture chairmen to work with the producer and the exhibitor and not against them. It is a new program of constructive building—of getting down to the very bottom of the matter where fertilization at the root is more important than the clipping of withered leaves from the upper branches.

"Today I am rather proud to be the interpreter of the public groups to you, who are the professional interpreters of motion picture entertainment. For ten years it has been my pivilege to be chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae. I began this work in the name of a great national organization hoping to bring an influence to bear upon the production of better pictures.

"At the end of this ten-year period, looking back, I know that our present job is not to improve motion picture production but to improve the taste of the general public that creates the demand. In these ten years I learned the possibilities of advertising good pictures. We organized reviewing committees to see every picture released by the industry and all those coming into this country from abroad. Out of this service we were able to print a monthly list of endorsed pictures to which we wished to give the utmost publicity. It was always our policy to say nothing publicly about the bad pictures. We have never denounced or publicly objected to anything, although we have not hesitated to express our observations to the company making the objectionable film. But this has been done quietly and, we hope, courteously. The result was a building up of good will. The companies felt they could trust us; that if we saw a picture in preview and liked it, that picture would receive valuable publicity. If we disliked it nothing would be said.

A New Support for Films

"Since January, 1931, a year ago, I have been endeavoring in the pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD to make all that is of value in this range of experiences and observations, and the whole sum of activities of related and interested organizations, available to the motion picture industry in general and the motion picture exhibitor in particular. The daily mail indicates that some thousands of exhibitors are finding it interesting and of value."

Mrs. McGoldrick then outlined the plan which she developed as an amateur in exploitation, the net total in results bringing in thirteen radio stations broadcasting her weekly review of better pictures as a free service; 163 newspapers reprinting the broadcast in whole or in part; 1200 women's clubs using the service as a guide for their work in their own communities. Eight foreign newspapers print the broadcast in column form, three of these in foreign languages. This, she pointed out, was only the beginning of the ramification of publicity open to the national organizations. In the state of Ohio alone, she said, there were 552 motion picture chairmen in the various club groups. In city after city their influence has been definitely felt, and in the development of the Junior Show, the family Friday night programs and in the concerted action for support of exceptional pictures, the results have been definitely registered at the box office.

Mrs. McGoldrick now believes that the tide is running so strongly toward constructive helpfulness by the organized groups everywhere that publicity men can no longer afford to ignore the possibilities which this form of exploitation offers to the companies, and that advertising men, making their right contacts with group leaders, will bring a new and invaluable support to the aid of their best pictures.

Hiram Brown 'Hopes' Kent Will Join RKO

President Hiram Brown of RKO departed from Hollywood on Tuesday for New York following lengthy conferences with home office and studio officials with regards production and policies. He will return to the Coast in three or four weeks.

Brown said on departing: "I am not going back to New York to resign. With regard to stories that I will resign in favor of Sidney R. Kent. I can deny them without qualification. I was the first to invite Kent to join RKO and I hope he will join us." He said he is pleased with the results of "Lost Squadron" and "Girl Crazy."

Reorganization of studio personnel was not effected by Brown while on the Coast. "We did nothing in the way of changes," he said. "We only came to decisions with respect to this year's program and discussed plans for next year's."

Brown definitely set the official production responsibility of the combined Radio and RKO Pathe studios upon the shoulders of David O. Selznick, executive vice-president in charge of production, prior to returning East.

He said: "To set at rest all further unfounded rumors as to the management of RKO-Radio Pictures studio, I wish to state that the entire picture production activities on the Radio Pictures lot and on the Pathe lot are under the complete and sole direction of David O. Selznick."

Brown, Lee Marcus, Ned Depinet, Selznick, Charles Rosenzweig, Arthur Lehman and Paul Mazur, representing banking interests, participated. Depinet is due at the home office next Monday and Rosenzweig the following week. J. S. Connelly, general manager of Pathe News, also took part in the conferences.

The RKO Pathe trade-mark, the rooster, has been dropped, and all future production will be consolidated under the Radio name, Schnitzer said after his arrival in New York. Radio will deliver 26 of the 36 features scheduled for this season, cutting 10 from the list, while all 27 of the RKO Pathe program, including six westerns, starring Tom Keene, will be released. RKO Pathe shorts will be produced and released according to the schedule formulated before the merger with RKO Radio.

The combined companies will produce between 30 and 40 features next season, with the probability being that the larger figure will be decided upon, Schnitzer indicated on his arrival. There is also a possibility that overhead will be cut somewhat to reduce the average cost of features.

Among the productions just completed and awaiting release at the studio are "Girl Crazy," "The Lost Squadron," "Lady With a Past," "Panama Flo," "Prestige," "Carnival Boat," "Saddle Buster."

ALLIED IS NO LONGER FOR 5-5-5 CONTRACT

To Release Arliss Film Immediately

Warner Brothers announced Wednesday that, "as a result of the urgent request of every leader in the motion picture industry," it had decided to forego roadshowing George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God" in the larger locations and will roadshow the picture only as a two-a-day in New York at the Warner theatre, February 10th and at the Los Angeles Western, February 9th. It was announced also that a most aggressive advertising and exploitation campaign would accompany the showing of the picture in each situation. The picture is to be released nationally for showing at regular admission prices, February 20th.

"In deciding not to roadshow 'The Man Who Played God'," says the statement, "the Warners were influenced by members of the Hays organization and the leading motion picture producers, who argued that because the Arliss picture is one for the masses as well as for the classes, to which the entire industry can point with pride as a notable film achievement; and because of the great good and healthy influence it will exert not only upon all present motion picture fans, but also the beneficial effect it will have toward winning more friends for the movies, the picture should be afforded immediate general release.

"Had the Warners followed their original plans to roadshow the picture, it would have been some time in 1933 before the production would have attained a general release. Another factor that prompted the industry's leaders to assure the Warners of wholehearted support for 'The Man Who Played God' was the fact that they felt this George Arliss triumph, which is a picture for all to which entire families can be taken, will go a long way towards silencing the harping criticisms of would-be reformers who have blinded themselves to the great good done by motion pictures and spend their time picking out isolated objections with which to assail the entire film industry."

Court Absolves Warners of Cinema Patents Infringement

A decision absolving Warner Brothers-Vitaphone of charges of infringements of laboratory patents, which was brought by Cinema Patents Corporation more than a year ago, was handed down this week by Justice Campbell in the U. S. district court at Wilmington, Delaware.,

Neither Samuel Darby, Jr., attorney for Warners, nor H. A. Huebner, attorney for Consolidated Film Industries, could be reached for statements up to the time of going to press. H. J. Yates, president of Consolidated, refused to comment on the Warner victory until he had seen a copy of the decision, which was not to have been available until the latter part of the week. Yates indicated, however, that Cinema Patents would appeal the decision.

Association Doubts Its Feasibility Due to Changed Conditions, Says President Steffes; He Praises Sidney Kent

Allied States Association has lost interest in the proposed 5-5-5 contract and no longer is concerned in its adoption, President W. A. Steffes told Motion Picture Daily in an interview in New York this week. Steffes ascribed Allied's loss of interest in the proposed uniform contract to "changed conditions in the industry since the 5-5-5 contract was proposed and drafted nearly two years ago."

Various factors in the industry are disturbed over failure of distributors to put the 5-5-5 agreement into effect, Steffes said. Allied, he added, entered the deliberations in good faith, saw them through to their conclusion, and then found distributors "walking out" on the agreement. "Now," he said, "because of changed conditions in the industry, Allied is not certain that it wants the contract or that it is feasible."

To Be Offered as Alternative

Gabriel Hess, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, said this week that the 5-5-5 contract would be offered exhibitors as an alternative contract with the opening of the new selling season this spring. Exhibitors, he said, will be offered their choice of either the uniform contract or an individual company contract by every distributor.

Steffes, who was in New York for conferences with Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied States, and H. M. Richey, business manager, concerning the Allied convention March 8 to 10, at Detroit, left New York for his Minneapolis home on Thursday.

Tribute to Sidney R. Kent was paid by Steffes.

"Allied has the highest regard and esteem for Kent, whose fair dealing and righteousness have endeared him to independents the country over," said Steffes.

Cites "Square Shooting"

"We who have worked with Kent during the 14 years he has been in the industry are appreciative of his fine understanding and square shooting. His work in trying to bring order out of chaos in the contract deliberations stamp Kent as one of the industry's greatest leaders. Allied is proud to consider him a friend and hopes that its close association with him will be continued."

Steffes also told interviewers this week that Allied would press an unrelenting fight against extended protection and desired a legal definition of what constituted "reasonable" protection. Representatives of the MPPDA described protection and zoning conferences as "dead issues."

"Fifth Commandment" Is New Title of "The Man I Killed"

"The Fifth Commandment" was announced on Wednesday as the new title of Ernst Lubitsch's "The Man I Killed," the Paramount picture with Lionel Barrymore, Nancy Carroll and Phillips Holmes in the leading roles, recently given its premiere at the Criterion Theatre.

The change was made because of the erroneous impressions caused by the former title in the minds of the public as to the character of the film play.

General Electric Orders Off

The General Electric Company, which is part owner of RCA and supplies much theatre equipment, reports orders having a total value of $49,321,480 for the three months ended December 21 last, compared with $74,168,480 in the final quarter of 1930. During all of 1930 orders totaled $252,021,496, compared with $341,820,312 in 1930.

ENTIRE INDUSTRY TO PARTICIPATE IN MPTOA "ROUND TABLE" SESSION

Better Business Understandings and Readjustments for Greater Profits Sought at Convention in Washington Mar. 14-16

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America promises to make its forthcoming annual convention at Washington "fit constructively into a business period where the bigger and better purposes of all concerned may be brought closer to realization."

The convention, scheduled for March 14, 15, 16, "takes place at a time when the most service can be rendered the entire motion picture industry in the matter of better understandings and practical stabilization," said M. J. O'Toole, national secretary, in outlining the purposes, policies and platform around which convetnion business will revolve.

"Congress is in a history-making session, and theatre owners and others all over the nation will be able to personally meet with their home senators and congressmen on the scene of their activities as the world's most important law-making body," O'Toole said.

Seek Better Business Understanding

"Representatives of every division of the motion picture industry will discuss its varied business and other situations at the convention in a manner which will give a wealth of information to all present. The definite purpose of this move is to bring about better business understandings and more mutual lines of procedure within the industry. Thus we will be able to effect readjustments which will mean more satisfactory phases of theatre operation and greater profit."

Opening on Monday, March 14, at the Mayflower hotel, the convention will reach its climax at the annual banquet on March 15. According to MPTOA headquarters, theatre owners from all parts of the United States already have signified their intention to be present, "and it is certain that this will be the largest and most impressive convention in the history of the national organization."

At the business sessions, discussions probably will bring before the floor widespread debate on service charges, percentage playing, double featuring and other important phases of exhibitor operation.

A Hearing for All

Continuing, O'Toole said: "In this convention we will be fully cognizant of the present state of the country and the almost revolutionary changes which have taken place in business generally. We will try to so adapt our work as to advance and build, allowing the past to serve only as a guide in making the future better for all. Fault finding will be a negligible quantity. Facts will be presented by speakers on all of our outstanding exhibitor problems, and positions taken by the convention for the guidance of the industry which will be based on sane, sensible, honest and fair American business methods.

"Any person with a constructive and helpful idea will be given a hearing. A complete discussion of all exhibitor problems will take place during the business sessions of the Convention.

"All theatre owners and others interested are invited to attend the business sessions.

Congressional Group at Banquet

"The convention banquet will be a brilliant affair. Theatre owners from all parts of the United States have arranged to invite their senators and congressmen as their guests. Prominent motion picture leaders will be present and many of these will participate in the entertainment elements. This program gives promise of being the most colorful and enjoyable of Washington's 1932 round of festivities."

President M. A. Lightman heads the general convention committee and has as his associates other national, state and regional officers and leaders.

A. Julian Brylawski, president of the MPTO of the District of Columbia, has charge of the Washington arrangements and has as his associates Sidney Lust, Harry Crandall, H. Croll, W. Cleveland and other exhibitors at the capital.

O'Toole estimates an attendance of 600 delegates from the various affiliated state units, with the possibility that this total by March 15 will far exceed any previous roster of convention delegates.

Move to Renominate Lightman

Although President M. A. Lightman at the moment is engaged in lining up additional state units for membership in the national body, a movement to renominate him for the presidency appears to have gathered considerable momentum in the East. Lightman launched the drive for new state affiliations when he arrived in New York from his home in Memphis about three weeks ago, at which time he also went on record as being vigorously opposed to the present method of paying service charges to the electrics, which brought condemnation from ERPI and the decision of both Western Electric's subsidiary and RCA Photophone to refuse additional outright cuts in servicing fees. Lightman promised to bring the matter before the convention if he did not succeed in obtaining concessions for small houses.

Delegates will vote on a change in the corporate structure of the MPTOA, by which it is planned to give independent members greater representation and a stronger voice in association matters. This movement is in line with Lightman's plan to gather additional independents into the fold.

In keeping with the organization's plan to make the forthcoming convention reflect all the needs of the industry, the program now nearing completion "comprehends every possible subject associated with the betterment of the business," according to an official statement from headquarters in New York, in which the following subjects are listed as among those to be discussed:

"Public relations, cooperation of exhibitor and community;" "Building morale in the theatre staff;" "Overseating, Over-investment;" "Balancing programs;" "Bankers' viewpoint of the motion picture industry;" "Theatre design and construction;" "Sound equipment, care and attention;" "Exploitation and advertising;" "Music tax and copyright laws;" "Score charge, service charge, etc.;" "Protection and zoning;" "Personality—Human touch in theatre management;" "Elementary law" (essential to exhibitors); "Theatre insurance;" "Circuit operation vs. independent operation" and "Over-selling and over-buying films and film shortage;" "Standard Exhibition Contract;" "The Brookhart Bill and block bookings."

President Lightman has associated with him in the work of preparing the program, Chairman Fred Wehrenberg of the board of directors, Director M. E. Comerford, Walter Vincent, Secretary O'Toole and others.

Hearings Start On Copyright Measure

Strong protest against the present copyright law and advocacy of legislation now pending, designed to give authors and composers a stronger hold upon their rights, were registered with the House patents committee on February 2, by representatives of the Authors' League of America.

The Authors' League has sponsored amendments to the Hebert copyright bill and has sought its passage for several years. The Hebert bill is reputed to contain provisions of even greater significance to the motion picture industry than those contained in the Vestal bill.

Among those appearing before the committee were Fannie Hurst, Will Irwin, chairman of the copyright committee of the Authors' League; Inez Hayes Irwin, first woman president of the Authors' League; Rupert Hughes, Arthur Guiterman, Thyra Sampter Winslow, and others well known as screen writers.

Amendment to the existing copyright statutes was asked so as to give authors ownership of the copyright to their work, instead of making it the property of publishers who, it was asserted, frequently make large sums by selling the dramatic, motion picture or radio rights while the author receives nothing but the original sale price of the story. The bill before the committee provides for divisible copyright, under which an author could sell separately the story, the screen rights and the radio rights, while a composer could control use of his composition in a picture.

Congressman Sirovich of New York, chairman of the committee, assured the author-witnesses that some legislation of this nature would be passed this session.

NO OVERSEATING THERE

Only 250 Theatres in Battle-ridden China for Its 450 Millions; Annual Net $300,000

To many in the picture business, the Sino-Japanese battling has no more interest than that evidenced by the average citizen in scanning newspaper headlines; to those whose film product does find distribution in the limited Chinese field, the Oriental tilt means little more than just another disturbance in a country which for 25 years has been in practically constant turmoil from civil wars, political squabbles, bandit attacks, foreign conflicts and whatnot.

In China, where no exhibitor has ever been known to complain of overseating—there being 450,000,000 inhabitants for 250 theatres—the progress of film presentation has traveled at snail's pace over a full quarter-century. Many in the American industry have felt that the returns do not warrant the effort. Censorship is costly, distribution and transportation of prints are economically out of all proportion and duty imposts are unbelievably high. The "headaches" are many, with the net result that the average feature bearing an American trademark brings its distributor usually about $1,000. Other foreign companies get less. The total net exceeds no more than $300,000 yearly on 300 features marketed by all American companies participating in Chinese film activities. In the main, pictures are disposed of outright to various theatre groups which purchase rights for the entire country and then bargain with colleagues in other territories. Distributors collect on a royalty basis and $15,000 returned to United Artists on a Griffith picture many years ago represents what is believed to be a record for all time.

Few, if any, theatres have been established in the hinterlands where natives appear to be more concerned with the worries of starvation than with the pleasures of entertainment. Theatres are in treaty ports, of which there are 50 spotted closely along the country's wide sea line.

Each port has a native quarter and an international settlement where practically all films in English and a few in other languages foreign to Chinese are shown. Eighty-five to 90 per cent of the audience in each international settlement is foreign to China, and in all treaty ports it is estimated that no more than 150 theatres are situated within the confines of the international territory. One hundred houses are in native quarters and play Chinese pictures, mostly antiquated. In all of China there are less than 60 theatres wired for sound, all in the international districts.

Business within these international settlements is rarely interrupted by internal disturbances, which are usually confined to native districts.

The Odeon theatre, which was burned last week at Shanghai, was situated in the native quarter. A minority interest in the house is held by the British-American Tobacco Company, and its destruction followed a street fight beween Chinese and Japanese troops. The Chinese placed snipers in the theatre and after several unsuccessful attempts to rout the enemy, the Japanese finally gained their objective, and destroyed the theatre with highly inflammable oils, according to word from the front.

Hongkong, Tientsin, Shanghai and Peking are the country's four largest cities, and around each there has been built an independent government, more or less. The bulk of theatrical activities are operated in these towns.

So far as can be learned, no word has been received at home offices in New York with regards net results to date of the Japanese invasion and its relation to motion picture affairs. The Hays organization's foreign department stated that Paramount operates in China from its principal Oriental office at Kobe, Japan; that United Artists and RKO do business through agents, while Universal has a small office at Shanghai. MGM also has a branch there.

Lightman To Speak Before Ohio MPTO

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, in its annual convention in Columbus on February 10-11, will be addressed by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, on the proposed 10 per cent federal amusement tax.

Other subjects to be brought before the meeting include the protection of circuit theatres over independents, percentage contracts, the new Ohio tax law, passed January, 1932, which will be explained by a member of the state tax commission; and the possibility of a reduction in weekly service charges by Erpi and RCA Photophone.

The annual banquet will be held on the evening of February 10 at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel. Governor White of Ohio and a chief sales executive of one of the major companies are expected to be present.

Silver Shifts Personnel on Tour of Western Territory

Moe Silver, assistant to Joseph Bernhard, head of Warner Theatres, returned this week from a tour of his western territory, during which he saw all managers, pointing the importance of exercising initiative, and made numerous personnel changes.

George Henger has replaced Robert D. Hutchinson as zone manager, Oklahoma City district. Jack Keegan was placed in charge of the Milwaukee territory; Max Slott returned to Chicago as district manager. William A. Barron takes charge of the film and booking departments of Cleveland. Sidney Dannenberg is in charge of the Lake, Cleveland; Dick Wright takes the Strand, Akron; James Carrier, the Uptown, Cleveland; Ralph Pekor, Lincoln, Massillon, Ohio. Walter Morris was named city manager in Sandusky, Ohio.

Producers and Unions Agree to Discuss Salaries

Storm clouds hovering about Hollywood studios following differences between producers and studio labor unions have cleared temporarily pending the outcome of a conference at Hollywood next week. Strike threats of carpenters, painters, stage hands and scenic artists have dissolved pending the discussion at which producers, delegations from the individual locals and representatives of the IATSE will attend in an attempt to end dissension and amicably settle wage agreements. William Elliott, president of the IATSE, left New York hurriedly earlier this week to attend the peace conferences.

Cameramen will wage a vigorous battle against a reported 60 per cent wage reduction. Scenic artists have called a truce pending the arrival of Joseph Clarke, head of the painters' union.

Threats of a strike fired at studios by scenic artists who demand $18 per day and recognition of their union were made numerously in recent days, with studios taking no action.

Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, left New York Tuesday for the Coast, where he will participate in the conference which will be resumed early next week.

Club Offers Prize In Poster Contest

The Motion Picture Club, New York, has placed a gold medal in competition among the students of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, to be awarded annually to the student conceiving and executing the most effective poster, to encourage the advancement of the motion picture poster art.

The first annual competition is based on the production of a poster for the forthcoming annual club ball, in which more than 1,000 students are participating. The winning poster will be selected by a committee of club members and well known artists. The best efforts will be displayed, and judged, at the club.

It is planned to widen the competition in 1933 by permitting students of the kindred school in Paris to enter the contest.

Monogram Sales Meet Set For New Orleans, February 22-24

Monogram Pictures will hold its second annual sales convention at New Orleans, February 22, 23, 24 at the Hotel Jung, with Leo Seicshnaydre of New Orleans in charge of advance arrangements.

The 1932-33 program will probably be formulated at that time. Monogram is said to have exceeded its sales quota during 1931 by more than $750,000. W. Ray Johnston, president of the company, will personally supervise the proceedings at the convention. It is expected some 75 franchise holders will be present.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

A competitive battle between two coffee concerns at Duluth, Minnesota, nets the Strand in that town $100 additional every week. Each Saturday, Manager Herbert Gahagan admits children to a matinee without charge, provided they bring an empty coffee can of a certain brand with them. The coffee concern later redeems these cans at ten cents apiece, and in addition also places cooperative advertising and provides window displays for all grocers handling their coffee.

Several other Northwest houses are building grosses through similar tieups, which appear to be applicable to most competitive food situations. Before arranging a deal, managers usually find out which brand has the widest distribution in their town.

Metro, which for many years has distributed Cosmopolitan Pictures in which William Randolph Hearst is interested, was accorded an unusual "break" in the Hearst papers the other day when Arthur Brisbane, editorial writer, now vacationing in the West, visited MGM's studio at Culver City.

In reporting what he saw of production work, Brisbane described Metro as "most successful among producers of moving pictures." Foreign versions as made in Hollywood, Brisbane predicted, will "in future mean hundreds of millions in profits for an American industry."

Pomeroy, himself, has created miniature and trick effects for more than 300 pictures during his six years as head of Paramount's trick department.

Paramount Publix, in a message to company operators, announces it is "ready for leadership."

Among the countless number of expressions of good will received recently by Sidney R. Kent is an unusual communication from the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, in which Dave Barrist informs Kent of the following resolution passed by the Philadelphia exhibitor group:

WHEREAS, Sidney R. Kent during his association with Paramount pursued a consistent policy of fairness to the independent theatre owners of this territory, proving at all times sympathetic to their problems, and giving just consideration to their grievances, and,

WHEREAS, the said Sidney R. Kent, by his business conduct towards the exhibitors has well merited the unusual measure of good will which he today enjoys,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc., hereby record their appreciation of Mr. Kent's fair trade practices towards the exhibitors of this territory and it is hoped by this organization he will continue his association with the motion picture industry."

INROADS made in rental returns by conditions abroad may influence leading companies to give attention again to a plan suggested some few years ago by which the physical aspects of distribution would be handled for all companies on a cooperative basis in each key town, with costs split up on a pro rata basis. This method, according to an important motion picture banker, would aid considerably in making distribution self-contained in the United States and not at all dependent on returns from abroad, which fluctuate with disturbed economic conditions particularly in Europe.

The plan, originally suggested by the American Railway Express, would consolidate key city exchanges in one building. Sales effort and other phases of operation would maintain their individuality, but a single crew to handle physical operation would be set up. One vault, a single staff of poster clerks, inspectors, cutters, bookers, shippers and clerks would supplant the present staffs maintained by seven or more national distributors.

Basically, this is the same plan by which independent state right exchanges operate, each handling the product of several different production companies.

JERSEY ALLIED SEEKS BULK SUPPLY DEALS

Aim of Samuelson and Committee Is to Effect Savings on Equipment Parts, Paper, and All General Supplies

Attempts will be made by Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey to effect commercial deals on a wholesale scale with the objective of making savings to members in the purchase of equipment parts, paper, janitor supplies and other materials of a like nature used in the operation of a motion picture theatre.

Under the leadership of President Sidney E. Samuelson, a committee has been working for several days in formulating details for the bulk purchases. According to Samuelson, "we have under way several important commercial deals which will net each and every one a considerable saving, and will be used throughout the state."

In a message to members dispatched this week, President Samuelson said: "Probably some of you, by fortunate circumstances, are receiving what you think might be a special inside price. Let me assure you that our committee has had access to information indicating what the largest chain operators pay for supplies. Remember that the dealer who gives you a special concession in consideration of your silence, will do the same thing for the man down the street, and is probably not giving you the best price."

Samuelson advises members of his association that "the best time to start is today when we have a buyers' market rather than a sellers' market."

Simultaneuosly, Jersey Allied theatres received copies of a questionnaire on which they are asked to list prices paid for the following items:

Newspaper advertising, photos, posters, advertising paper, special printing, window cards, programs, heralds, throwaways, lobby displays, lobby boxes, booth supplies, oil, carbons, tubes, exciter bulbs, machine parts, Sentry Safety Control rental, Dixie cups, mops, brass polish, Burt cups, soap powder, gum remover, push brooms, straw brooms, paper towels, etc., electric lamps, trailer service, fire insurance, public liability insurance, safe and burglary insurance, inside and outside holdup insurance, coal, fuel oil, electric rates, premiums and giveaways.

Fund to Run Film Boards Will Be Used Up by April 1

Appropriations for the maintenance of Film Boards of Trade will have been exhausted by April 1, prior to which time sales managers will meet to decide on renewing the appropriation for another year. No date for the meeting of sales managers has as yet been set.

The question of the value of Film Boards in relation to their cost was first raised about a year ago, at which time an alternate field service plan was presented to the MPPDA by R. G. Dun, but this was not approved. Shortly afterward the Hays office and sales managers effected a consolidation of certain Film Board territories which resulted in the elimination of nine Film Boards. Appropriations to maintain the remainder for another year were approved.

The part played nationally by the Film Boards during the past year in building up sentiment against taxation of the industry is expected to weigh heavily in favor of retention of the Boards when their future again is decided. Most distributors also concede that the Boards are still essential in numerous phases of field service and as an important link between distributor and exhibitor nationally.

Monopoly Is Proposed By Government of Spain

Monopolization of Spain's motion picture industry as part of the country's program for nationalization of industries, is to be proposed in a measure being prepared for introduction into Parliament, according to current cable despatches from Madrid, which said that threats of American distributors to retire from the Spanish field have been heard at Madrid. Under the plan, a governmental body would administer production and distribution of films and control the profits. At present, 60 per cent of rentals remain in Spain, it is estimated.

Officials of the MPPDA said Wednesday that they had had no direct word on Spain's reported plan to create a film monopoly.

Dr. MacKenzie Renamed Head Of Pacific Section of SMPE

Dr. Donald MacKenzie of Erpi, chairman of the Pacific Coast section, Society of Motion Picture Engineers, has been re-elected following a letter ballot. The society is an international technical group, the section containing about 100 members.

$163,571 Loss in 1931 Reported to Roxy Stockholders

An operating loss of $163,571 during 1931 was reported to 200 Roxy Theatre Corporation stockholders at a meeting in the Hotel Taft, New York, on Monday. They were also informed by Felix A. Jenkins, presiding, that under the contract with S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, it would be necessary to change the name of the house, because of his departure to a post in Radio City.

It was announced that his salary of $150,000 annually, since his leaving, had been supplanted by a contract with Fox Theatres whereby he received 3 per cent of the gross receipts, but not to exceed $3,000 in any one week. Fox owns a controlling common stock interest in the theatre.

Elected to the board of directors were: Colonel Frederick Pope, William C. Chanler and Colonel Francis L. Robbins, Jr. Nine elected board members representing the common stock were: A. C. EDUCATIONAL LAUNCHING PLANS TO DISTRIBUTE NON-THEATRICALS

First Comprehensive Attempt of National Distributor to Provide Machinery to Serve Non-Theatrical Branches

In the belief that the industrial and educational film fields some day will equal in importance the theatrical phase of motion pictures, the Educational Picture interests, of which E. W. Hammons is president, have engaged in the first serious attempt of a national distributor to set in motion the machinery of a distribution setup to serve the non-theatrical branches.

Although a new subsidiary company, Educational Talking Pictures Company, Ltd., has been formed, Educational executives insist that the plan, described as having tremendous possibilities, is purely in the formulative stage and that the work undertaken to date is only of a pioneering nature. It is further stated that Educational will proceed cautiously in working out the new plan so as not to interfere with the company's present theatrical activities. "We are not going to sacrifice our theatrical business; the plan will be set up so as to work both phases together," said an Educational official.

Several Deals Closed

A deal with Electrical Research Products to handle its non-theatrical short subjects already has been closed, also with Frank R. Church, of California, and the Travel Association of Great Britain and Ireland, with others understood to be in negotiation, including an arrangement to handle a feature release for Dodge Motor Car. Erpi's previous attempt to distribute shorts, made during research in connection with non-theatrical possibilities for its sound equipment, proved unsuccessful and it sought release through Educational.

Physical handling at present is made through New York and Chicago. The company's nation-wide exchange system will be brought into use as the plan develops, and it is expected that an elaborate library of educational subjects will be on hand at each local branch, in charge of a special non-theatrical manager. Industrial films, too, will be distributed in this manner, although in many cases not until after manufacturers have obtained full coverage in their own individual field, among personnel and dealers.

Costs Still to Be Worked Out

Costs have yet to be worked out, Educational executives pointing out that present pioneering activities include the establishment of operating costs and whether schools and educational institutions will buy the subjects outright with a view to creating a school film library, or whether they prefer to pay individual rentals for showing on call.

Replies to questionnaires to 6,000 public schools throughout the country show that 60 per cent are using motion pictures regularly for educational purposes, according to the Federal Office of Education at Washington, although no mention is made of the number of silent or sound equipments. Previous checkups by the electrics indicate that a few thousand non-theatrical installations have been made, although devices installed in places of learning total but a few hundred. However, with the future of sound manufacturers depending almost entirely upon non-theatrical business, each of the larger concerns has undertaken a widespread sales campaign on behalf of its portable equipment.

The questionnaire, distributed by the Department of Commerce, of which the Federal Education Office is a division, disclosed the fact that 44,186 presentations of films at schools had been staged in a year, of which 73 per cent were used in teaching.

Although 98.9 per cent of teachers reported the films were helpful, about six said they did not have time to study films long enough to get maximum value from them.

Nearly 18,000 of the showings were in elementary schools, 12,000 in junior high schools and 14,200 in high schools.

Forty per cent illustrated lessons in social sciences, 26 per cent in natural sciences, 25 per cent in physical education, manual and industrial arts, home economics, English and commercial education, and about 2,500 presentations were not directly related to school subjects.

At Educational's home office in New York, indications point toward a well-planned progressive move to establish the company's non-theatrical division as one of the most important distributing factors in the new field. Plans for rehabilitation of this field have been in work the past two years in numerous quarters, following a practically complete cessation of activities which began four years ago when sound started.

Almost All 35mm.

The new company's activities at present are confined almost exclusively to 35mm. Its officials would not predict the extent to which 16mm. will supplant standard width.

According to one executive interested in the development, Educational's first task is to determine how best to handle the new field and to find channels of distribution for schoolroom films, industrial reels and subjects pertaining to other forms of non-theatricals.

RCA Photophone's new $450 16mm. portable device, as previously announced, is ready for marketing, and Erpi is preparing a similar device which will play sound on disc rather than film. Photophone's is sound-on-film. Each organization also has portable 35mm. machines for non-theatrical use and General Theatres Equipment, an affiliate of Fox Film Corporation, likewise plans to make a bid for the new business.

Although the new Educational unit will not produce classroom films, or subjects for industrial concerns, the company will place prospects "in touch" with a production organization. Executives refused to discuss possible participation of the parent company in non-theatrical production activities.

Erpi subjects now in the hands of Educational total 44, including one four-reel film; two in three reels; 12 two-reelers, and 29 singles, divided as follows: 10 pertaining to teacher training; 15 on natural science; seven on music appreciation; one each on physics, mathematics, civics and Protestant education; two on Catholic education and on vocational guidance and four listed under physical education.

Rentals of the aforenamed subjects range from $10 to $20 each, with the average subject costing $10 or $15. All are on 35mm. width, but 15 are also available on 16mm. stock with sound-on-disc, which are sold outright only at $35 a reel with two sets of discs. Rental for 35mm. subjects includes use for one or two days, additional days at $5 a day per subject, with exhibitors paying transportation both ways to and from Chicago or New York.

Thirteen subjects, all on 35mm. stock, are available through the deal with the British and Irish travel association, which selected the material from the British Movietone films illustrating events in the British Isles.

Allied's Convention To Run Three Days

H. M. Richey, business manager of the Allied States Association, has issued a bulletin from his Detroit office announcing extension of the dates of the Detroit convention, originally announced for March 8 and 9, to include March 10, with the national board meeting on the 8th and the regular business session starting on the 9th.

The bulletin raises objection to the expressions of Charles Pettijohn of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and M. A. Lightman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the hearing in Washington on the amusement tax bill before the ways and means committee of Congress. And proceeds to say:

"At the convention, plans to present the case of the Allied Theatre Owners against the affiliated theatres and producers will be prepared and exhibitors of the country will be asked to bring to the convention information upon which to base such a project."

Wrigley's Illinois Estate Is $20,000,000; Cubs to Son

The Illinois estate of the late William Wrigley, Jr., valued at $20,215,000 has been left largely to his family, the probated will disclosed in Chicago last week. His widow, daughter and son were principal beneficiaries, Philip K. Wrigley receiving his father's controlling interest in the Chicago Cubs baseball team.

No mention was made of the vast western interests, including Santa Catalina Island. Wrigley was recently named a director of Paramount Publix Corporation.

FOREIGN FILMS USED TO OPEN DARK HOUSES

a foot, which cost includes duties, freight, insurance, and so forth. If the film is accepted for distribution, a second print must be imported at the same cost for duping purposes. Duping costs approximate 2¼ cents a foot when done here. The average cost of importing a picture is about $2,500, before selling begins.

Seldom Over 12 Prints

Most importers have prints made abroad, despite the higher cost, if they decide only a few prints will be required. If more than four prints are believed necessary, it is usually found advisable to have them made in America where a definite saving may be realized, it was pointed out. Seldom are there more than 12 prints of an imported picture available for distribution here, and not infrequently there is only a single print of a foreign picture in this country. The average is about four.

Capitol Film Exchange, which came into prominence in the foreign picture market the past year, attempts to maintain 12 prints of each picture imported. Capitol now sells direct to 30 American key cities, and has about 200 succeeding runs on its books. Its purchasing powers now permit it to bid on any German-made picture except Ufa's, which maintains its own foreign department.

Five Ufa Prints

Ufa maintains in America about five prints of each importation, but its facilities for obtaining additional prints when needed are excellent, because of its immediate connections with home offices. Ufa is now distributing to 18 keys and about 75 succeeding-run theatres in America. Plans for further perfecting its American distribution organization are now being formulated in New York under the direction of Fritz Thornhauer, an executive of the home office foreign department. They will be concluded with the arrival in New York within the next week of Wilhelm Meydam, Ufa general manager of distribution.

The American product shortage, it is believed, will benefit English-made pictures more immediately than any others made abroad. A foreign dialogue picture must be exceptional to obtain better than average bookings in America. Pictures of the necessary caliber are too far apart to establish themselves permanently in houses of purely American patronage, but English-made pictures of only average quality are readily adaptable to numerous American audience programs, particularly in double featuring centers.

B I P Plans 25 Exchanges

These observations are made by representatives of British International Pictures, which this year will double its imports and, in addition, will perfect its own distribution organization here with the establishment of 26 exchanges throughout the country. Opening of these exchanges already is under way. In addition, there is no dialogue problem of any seriousness to be faced by the importer of English pictures. No adaptations are necessary, and the only changes required are effected by editing out excess footage to speed up the action to conform to the tastes of American audiences.

A succession of good British pictures this year, it commonly is believed, will offset successfully whatever American audience prejudice has accumulated against British pictures in the past 15 years. In apparent recognition of the opportunity presented it in the American market this year, B I P is increasing the production authority and activities of Jacqueline Logan, former American film star, who has been associated with the English production organization for some time. Miss Logan writes, directs and acts, but her particular function this year, it is believed, will be in an important advisory capacity on productions destined for the American market. Miss Logan is now in New York with a print of "Strictly Business," the latest picture directed by her.

B I P is distributor of the four-reel novelty picture, "Trapped in a Submarine," which was produced a year ago under the direction of the British Admiralty. Produced with an entire British naval cast, it was intended to depict the sinking last year of the ill-fated British submarine, the Poseidon. By purest chance, the first prints of "Trapped in a Submarine" arrived in New York on the day of the sinking of the M-2. It immediately was booked for Broadway runs by Warner Bros., and for subsequent-runs by RKO and numerous independent exhibitors throughout the country. Its grosses are expected to be appreciable.

publication that give Jack Cohn his idea for Screen Snapshots, the film fan magazine. He was at the time editor and producer of Universal Weekly. Deciding that there was a field for such a screen fan magazine, Jack Cohn approached his associate, Joe Brandt, then assistant treasurer of Universal. Brandt immediately saw the possibilities of Jack Cohn's idea and the two went into partnership inducing Harry Cohn, who was also connected with Universal in a producing capacity, to join them.

First Screen Snapshot in 1920

In April, 1920, the first Screen Snapshot, as well as a Hallroom Boy comedy, were made and the C. B. C. Sales Company came into existence. A year later Joe Brandt, in cooperation with George H. Davis, produced the first "super-special," "Heart of the North," for the new concern, marking its entrance into the feature field.

In 1922, C. B. C. had six "Box Office Winners" on the market. In 1923 six "Columbia" productions were added to the "Perfection" and "Waldorf" productions being produced by the company. The "Columbias" proved so successful that in 1924 C. B. C. became Columbia Pictures, Inc.

In the meantime, original headquarters of C. B. C. at 1600 Broadway—one of the earlier homes of Universal Pictures—became much too small for the rapidly expanding activities of the three partners in C. B. C., and so they removed their offices directly across the street to 729 Seventh avenue, one of New York's film centers.

National Trend in 1926

Commencing in 1926, the company began to lay the foundation for a national distributing organization. By the end of that year, Columbia was also making inroads in the foreign markets and had its nationalization plans completed. It was not, however, until July, 1929, that the company actually became a 100 per cent national distributor with exchanges in 33 key cities and a regulation national distribution modus operandi. The corporation's activities from that point on are a matter of widespread knowledge throughout the industry.

Columbia Pictures Corporation is one of the few national organizations which has never engaged in exhibition. Of all national companies now operating, Educational-Tiffany and Columbia are the only two which have consistently remained independent of theatre affiliations.

Coast Force Active

Members of Columbia's scenario department and special writers at the Coast plant are whipping into shape five of the company's major productions of its 1931-32 program, as well as two outdoor dramas. Shooting will start within the next two weeks.

The line-up includes: "Three Just Men," "Artists' Model," "Halfway Girl," "Zelda Marsh," and one untitled. The outdoor pictures are "Born to Trouble" and "Gun Justice."

"Three Just Men" is being adapted by Lee Chadwick and is the second Edgar Wallace production to be presented by Columbia this season. An untitled story is being written by Eunice Chapin, author of "Pick Up," while Adele Comandini has been assigned to "Artists' Model," the Cosmopolitan Magazine story, "Rented Bodies," by Rupert Hughes. Sarah Y. Mason is adapting "Halfway Girl," based on "Via Manhattan," by Hawthorne Hurst. Barney Sarecky is preparing "Zelda Marsh," by Charles G. Norris. Lambert Hillyer is writing an original, "Born to Trouble," for Buck Jones, and "Gun Justice," by William Colt MacDonald, is being written for Tim McCoy.

Three Films Just Completed

Three Columbia productions were completed this week and are now in the cutting room.

One of these is "High Speed," Buck Jones "special," in which the star has traded his horse, "Silver," for a gasoline buggy. Loretta Sayers is playing opposite Buck. "The Big Timer," also being prepared for release, is the first full-length Columbia production to be directed by Eddie Buzzell. Ben Lyon and Constance Cummings have the lead. "The Fighting Fool" was directed by Lambert Hillyer. Supporting Tim McCoy is Marceline Day.

Columbia this week appointed William C. Brimmer, branch manager of its Omaha office. He succeeds Lee Durham, resigned. Brimmer for the past three years has been in charge of First National offices in Omaha.

Hokum Still Best, Says Fox Ad Chief

Howard E. Jameyson, director of advertising and publicity for Fox Midwest-Midland Theatres, believes "custard pie" hokum is still the real stuff.

Jameyson, who directs advertising for 112 houses, made the statement in an address before the Unitarian Church Forum in Topeka, Kan., on "The Obligation of the Theatre Operators and Motion Picture Producers to the Public." That obligation, he said, is to provide entertainment that satisfied the greatest number of persons.

"When horse operas outdraw Pulitzer prize plays at the box office, you can see the problem which confronts the motion picture industry," he explained. Pictures with light, gay themes are most popular, said Jameyson. "The average man goes to the theatre to exercise his imagination and not his intellect," he indicated his study had proved. Therefore, the emotions must be catered to if the largest public is to be entertained and the film industry is to prosper.

Kunsky Trendle Broadcasting Corporation Shifts Officers

The Kunsky Trendle Broadcasting Corporation, operating stations WXYZ, Detroit, and WOOD-WASH, Grand Rapids, owned by the Kunsky and Trendle theatre circuit, has shifted officers. George W. Trendle is now president and general manager, and John H. Kunsky has taken over the duties of vice-president and treasurer. Howard O. Pierce remains as general studio manager and company secretary.

Kunsky was the first man in Michigan to present motion pictures commercially, having built and operated the first theatre in Detroit in 1905.

Fiction Shows Sharp Drop In Books Brought Out in '31

Fiction showed a marked decline in new books in 1931, says Publishers' Weekly in its annual summary number. Biography, also a potential field for motion picture material, likewise showed a falling off in new books, though less pronounced than that in fiction.

The most marked increase for the ten year period, in the number of books brought out by American publishers, was in the field of fiction, however.

James Cruze to Produce 18

James Cruze Productions plans 12 features and eight westerns for the state rights market. Cruze will direct several, while he and Sam Zierler will supervise all films. Production is set to begin April 1.

Comedian in Warner Houses

Joe Penner, Vitaphone comedian, has been booked for a series of personal appearances at Warner houses. He goes from the Mosque in Newark to the Mastbaum, Philadelphia.

Radio Writer to France

Louis Stevens, author and Radio contract writer, will sail February 26 for France, where he will complete his third novel.

ESTABROOK ANSWERS CRITICS OF WRITERS

Says Ignorance of Hollywood Brought "Mudslinging" Charges That Authors Can't Write As They Think Best

Various "mudslinging" writers through ignorance are talking out of turn about the conditions under which writers are working in Hollywood, says Howard Estabrook, RKO scenarist.

"I will not call these people liars," said Estabrook, "because they are not sufficiently well informed to know what they are talking about.

"The claim that in Hollywood no author is permitted to write what he or she thinks would make a good picture is so much waste of time. These are seven things which these critics evidently do not know:

Studio Takes the "Gamble"

"1. Thousands of dollars have been paid in good faith by picture producers to remunerate socalled noted authors for writing exactly what they wished to write.

"2. Results of this work have been produced with poor returns in many instances.

"3. Certain results have been so inferior that production was admittedly impossible. I resist the temptation to mention names. (It is difficult to resist. What an opportunity!)

"4. Advance retainers are being paid right now to certain authors who are free to submit anything they choose, the studio taking the gamble.

"5. Authors from other fields, on regular salary at studios, often have been disloyal to their employers. I again decline to mention names, but I have heard dramatists and novelists say that they had not the slightest intention of delivering their best efforts in exchange for the admittedly generous pay they were receiving. There is no particular name for this in screen circles. In ordinary life, such a man is a crook!

Why the "Old Liners" Criticize

"6. Writing for the screen is infinitely more difficult than writing for stage or publication, because it combines the elements of playwriting and the technique of motion pictures with the scope of the novel. Writers from the older fields who have made good with screen writing readily admit this. But no old line writer outside the gates will admit any such thing; it would be treason to the tribe. Mudslinging is easier. Hollywood is unpopular with old line writers because it has upset the stage and causes book publishers to scrutinize novels with an eye toward screen rights as a principal value.

"7. A basic misconception lies in the supposition that every writer who has had a book published or a play produced is necessarily a potential screen writer. This is not so, except in the average number of instances that such writers prove adaptable to the new medium. There have been marvelous writers in Russia. Most of their work isn't worth a dime on the American screen. It is not their medium."

Advise Pre-Lent Theatre Economy

The strictest economy must prevail in operation during the Lenten period, which starts February 10, Publix executives have advised managers throughout the circuit.

The message says in part: "Our theatres, it is true, are operating as close to rock-bottom as possible. Yet the drop in grosses which may come with the beginning of Lent demands that the most stringent economy be exercised throughout that period.

"In our zeal to cut down on expenditures, we should not lessen our selling efforts. On the contrary, we should intensify all No Cost activity to a greater degree than usual. By strong, intensive selling, we can continue to do considerable business. . . . Pre-Easter style shows may be of considerable value in stimulating business during this period."

Court Hears Witwer-Lloyd Plagiarism Suit on Coast

The suit for plagiarism against Harold Lloyd Corporation, brought by Mrs. Sadie S. Witwer, widow of the late short-story writer, H. C. Witwer, asking $2,300,000 profits of the Lloyd film, "The Freshman," was heard this week in San Francisco federal circuit court.

The plaintiff alleges a Witwer story, "The Emancipation of Rodney," was plagiarized in the production of Lloyd's film in 1925. It is charged a copy of the story was submitted to Lloyd, and that the film narrative followed the story closely. Defendants obtained modification under the statute of limitations, after Mrs. Witwer received judgment at Los Angeles, and Lloyd appealed from the original decree. The Witwer interests appealed from the modification. The case was taken under advisement.

Nolan Named Fox Supervisor

John Nolan, Fox home office representative, has been appointed supervisor of the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Salt Lake City offices of the company by James R. Grainger, vice president in charge of distribution.

To Map Warner Campaign

Sanford Abrahams, of the staff of S. Charles Einfeld, Warner director of advertising and publicity, has been sent to Columbus, Ohio, to supervise campaigns for five coming Warner-First National releases.

Buy Control of Dworsky Firm

John Manheimer and Louis Starr have purchased a controlling interest in the Dworsky Film Process Company, and have opened an office in New York. Dworsky retains a one-third interest in the firm.

VOLUME OF CHECKER USE IS MAINTAINED

Screen Advertisers, Equipment Makers and Exhibitors Increase Employment of Check-up Service on Admissions

Despite the fact that sales plans of at least five major companies contemplate a reduction of percentage selling in rural sections next season, there will be no curtailment in the aggregate use of checking services throughout the industry. This will be due in large part to the utilization of checking services by screen advertisers, equipment manufacturers and by exhibitors themselves, all of which agencies are increasingly more important users of checkers. A corresponding increase in the number of percentage engagements which will be played in metropolitan areas and in advance-run houses will also aid in offsetting decreases in checking through elimination of percentage playing in numbers of rural areas.

All major distributors who employ percentage selling to any extent are now users of the Ross Federal Service, the checking organization which now covers 80 per cent of percentage engagements in rural areas and the bulk of metropolitan percentage engagements as well. Distributors now regularly employing this service are: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner-First National, Paramount, Universal, Columbia, Fox, United Artists and RKO-Radio. United Artists, the last major company to employ the service, completed the list of major distributors who use percentage playing to any extent when it signed for this checking service only a few weeks ago.

Foreign Distributors Use Service

In addition to these major distributors, the larger distributors of foreign pictures are also important users of the Ross Service. Virtually no foreign productions are sold here on anything but a percentage policy. Among the consistent users of the industry's foremost checking service, in consequence, are such distributors as Tobis Forenfilms, Associated Cinemas, Capitol Film Exchange, Ufa, and others.

Lately inaugurated sales policies of important equipment manufacturers have also led to the employment of checkers by these organizations. Erpi, it was said at the company's New York offices, is a frequent user of the Ross Service in situations where installations of equipment have been made on the basis of a percentage of the theatre's intake. Hundreds of accounts have been sold on this basis and large numbers of them are checked periodically.

Screen advertisers also have come to be significant users of checking services. The Advertisers' Motion Picture Company, and advertising accounts such as Stanco, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company; Texaco, and others, regularly employ checkers to report on the running time of their advertising reels in theatres, the attendance at the times of its exhibition, and audience reaction to the advertising.

Exhibitors Employ Checkers

Of late, exhibitors, themselves, have become important users of the Ross Service for the weeding out of dishonest employees from large and small theatre organizations, wherever diversion of moneys is suspected. The findings of checkers assigned to such services are an interesting, if slightly discolored, chapter in the industry's history.

The indicated impracticability of percentage playing in numerous rural situations, which will probably lead to its curtailment next season, is in no wise attributed by sales managers of the important distribution organizations to any weakness in the checking system. As reported in a recent issue, the dissatisfaction of sales executives with results obtained from checking rural percentage engagements arises only out of the small net return obtained from such engagements. It is felt, in consequence, that percentage playing, not checking, itself, frequently fails when applied to rural situations. Distributors are of the opinion that the equivalent of the small averages obtained from country theatres may be collected in straight rentals with fewer complications than are attendant upon percentage engagements in such situations. The cost of checking, although apparently at a minimum, does enter into considerations of abandonment of percentage contracts in country theatres where even nominal checking costs will consume much of the small percentages derived.

Not Assigned to Home Towns

Contrary to general belief, Ross checkers are never assigned to their home town theatres, where these may be located in cities of under 100,000 population. A common criticism of checking service is that residents of small towns are employed to check local theatres, and that the information obtained concerning the exhibitor's earnings and credit standing is, or may be, misused by a local checker. Walter Greene, New York representative of Ross Federal Service, says, that it is the company's policy to avoid just such assignments of checkers and that whenever they occur inadvertently replacements are made as soon as they are brought to the attention of the Ross organization. No reasonable objection to a checker voiced by any exhibitor is ever ignored, Greene said.

Every effort is made to minimize employment of susceptible individuals as checkers and to prevent the occurrence of irregular practices in the working organization. To this end, extensive investigation of all applicants is conducted prior to employment, as a result of which an unusually high type of individual for work of this nature is obtained. About 80 per cent of the country checkers are otherwise employed, fulfilling their checking assignments during spare time. A large percentage are professional men, retired merchants and former executives. Many are property owners. The availability of this type of individual has greatly minimized the chances of dishonesty on the part of the checking force in the face of the comparatively modest remuneration paid them. Country checkers receive $4 to $6 per day, out of which they pay their own carfare within city limits and buy their own meals. Checkers in metropolitan areas receive $7.50 per day. All Ross checkers are bonded, as they are frequently entrusted with the distributor's collections, which may be delivered to them either in the form of a certified check or cash.

Field Supervisors Retained

The field supervisors are retained to make regular inspection of checkers at work and frequently double check on these men secretly, conducting their own clocking of patrons. At the end of a day's performances, supervisors will reveal their identity to the checkers and the reports of the two will be compared. The staff of secret investigators verifies the daily reports of either checkers or supervisors, or both; conducting their investigations separately and without revealing their identities to checkers or supervisors.

The Ross checker takes the opening and closing ticket numbers at each interval of admission price change, and the closing ticket numbers when the box office closes at night. In addition, he checks occasionally with ticket takers to see that tickets are running in rotation and that no rolls are substituted. The checker also clocks adult and children admissions separately.

Instances of collusion discovered between checkers and theatre employees for the purpose of theft from both exhibitor and distributor have not been numerous. Naturally, in a field force of 3,000, such examples are not unknown, but neither are they common. The checking requirements of the industry today are almost wholly covered by the Ross Service, although this organization is not yet two years old.

Hollywood's Birthday

The 24th birthday of the industry in Los Angeles was celebrated on Thursday.

Historic files at the Paramount studios, one of the oldest companies in the industry, reveal that on February 4, 1908, work began on a short feature, "Across the Divide."

Veterans at Paramount recall that Thomas Persons and Francis Boggs were producers and that the first scenes were filmed in and around Sing Loo's Chinese Laundry, then at the corner of Seventh and Olive Streets.

The "studio" of the two pioneer producers consisted of a 100-foot city lot.

William H. Patten Dies

William H. Patten, 62, pioneer industry figure in New England, died last week at the City Hospital, Boston, where he had been ill for two weeks. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. May Heffron Patten and a sister, Mrs. Charles Perkins, Claremont, N. H.

Today Miss America—Tomorrow What?

The Story of What Has Become of Prize Beauties Most Pageant Winners Want Millionaires — Few Find Happiness Through Riches

TODAY Miss America—tomorrow what? What is the subsequent fate of beauty contest winners, suddenly lifted from obscurity into the international spotlight? When the pageant is over, and the crown has been awarded and the vaudeville contracts signed what happens? Does the queen live happily ever after, or does she not? A view of the careers of some of the winners in the great national beauty contests will help give the answer.

One of the first winners of the title of Queen of Beauty at Atlantic City was Catherine Campbell, an Ohio girl. In 1922 when she won the crown, she was 16 years of age. Catherine Campbell was a home girl, devoted to her parents. She has never married. After an 8 month theatrical tour she went to Ohio State College, and then kept house for her father after her mother's death. In 1928 she toured Europe for the Ohio Chamber of Commerce as a result of winning a beauty contest conducted by that body

Tragedy Rules Life

Real tragedy ruled the life of the 1923 Atlantic City queen, Charlotte Nash, of St. Louis. She wanted a millionaire and got him in the person of Frederick Nirdlinger. He was sixty, she, twenty-three. He featured Miss Nash in his theatres, and educated her in a fashionable finishing school. In 1924 they were married. Their wedded life was unhappy. In 1926 they were divorced in Paris, but later remarried. Their relations became steadily more unbearable.

Finally, after a violent quarrel, Mrs. Nirdlinger shot and killed her husband. She was acquitted in Paris on the plea of self defense. This tragic beauty with her two small children is at present back in St. Louis. At first she was reported to have been willed $730,000. The Nirdlinger estate is now said to be insolvent.

Ruth Malcolmson, the Philadelphia beauty crowned at Atlantic City in 1924, traveled no path of roses following her victory. After refusing Broadway offers she sought commercial work in her native city. At length a photographer, Mr. M. Armstrong Roberts, gave her a position as a model. She soon proved a beauty could also have brains, and a suggestion from her led to an innovation in railroad advertising. She was promoted to head a research expedition to Europe in 1926. Two years later she became engaged to Lieutenant Carl Schaubel, a wealthy polo player.

Reads Like Romance

Fay Lanphier's life reads like a romance. A California stenographer, she came to Atlantic City in 1925 and won the title of Miss America. There were charges that she had been backed by a film company. She played in "The American Venus."

Three years later she married a millionaire Chicagoan, Sidney Spiegel. They could not make a go of it. In 1929 she was awarded a divorce with a $100,000 settlement. This money she invested in a beauty parlor.

Miss Lanphier was back where she started, working as a stenographer, when she was courted by Winfield J. Daniels, a mechanical engineer, who had been her childhood sweetheart. They were married last June.

She Married a Millionaire

A millionaire was prominent in the life of Norma Smallwood of Tulsa, Oklahoma, the 1926 winner. She married one in Thomas Gilcrease, oil baron, many years her senior, in 1928. The intervening two years had been hectic, featured by a suit against theatrical agents for breach of contract and her refusal to enter the 1927 contest unless her price of $1200 a week was met by the officials.

Lois Delander, the queen in 1927 when only 16, had a profitable but undramatic career. She went back to high school in Joliet, Illinois, after fulfilling a lucrative stage contract.

Miss Margaret Ekdahl, of Tampa, Florida, won at Miami in 1930 and attracted attention by scorning Rudy Vallee, becoming engaged to his rival crooner, Will Osborne, and joining Earl Carroll's Vanities.

Joan Bennett Is Beauty Queen

Joan Bennett, whose charms rival those of any of the Misses America or Universe, was interviewed while playing her part in the Fox picture, "She Wanted A Millionaire," which depicts the drama and intrigue behind the scenes of beauty contests, and their aftermath. She was asked how she would react to her situation, if she might be the winner of such a contest.

"The glory and money from such a victory," she replied, "don't begin to even up for the price they cost. Everyone is hungry to exploit the winner while her fame lasts. Few of the girls who have married millionaires after winning beauty contests have been happy. Money, fame and social position are all very well but they are no substitute for the love, children and home life that every woman really wants. The front page headlines soon fade away. So do the mythical laurels. We theatrical folk know that too well. But the woman who builds a good home and a good family with the man she loves has made something that lasts."

Novelty Will Wear Off, Says Harbord About Television

Major General James F. Harbord of RCA declares in an article in The Standard Star of New Rochelle, N. Y., that television is "an actuality ready to spring on the world when the right time comes—and come it will even though folks will not think such a lot of it after the novelty wears off." Home talking films are also close at hand, Harbord believes.

The films for home talking picture machines will be rented, like books from a rental library, and a film man will leave a can of film with the milk on the doorstep, in the opinion of the general. A few business details, yet to be perfected, prevent the sale of home picture machines, according to Harbord.

Hollis Baird, chief engineer of the Short-wave and Television Corporation, Boston, has announced what are claimed to be two outstanding achievements in cathode ray television development. One is an improved method of coating the end of the tube, giving more brilliance to the picture, and a new method of modulation which increases the contrast and details of the reproduced image.

Baird indicated that the engineers working under his direction have made major progress during the last six months in bringing cathode ray television to a point where the future progress promises to be rapid.

Morris Agency Repurchases 50% Interest Publix Held

The William Morris agency has repurchased the 50 per cent interest which has been held by Publix and, effective February 1, has been operating as an independent agency. An amicable settlement was concluded.

William Morris, head of the agency, commenting on the dissolution of the partnership arrangement, pointed out that any divergence of operation, such as was represented by the agreement is impractical. The cordial relations which have marked the dealings of Morris and the Publix officials have in no wise been disturbed by the repurchase of control, said Morris.

GIVING FREE SHOWS TO WIN JUVENILES

25 Theatres in 16 Towns of British Columbia Undertake Project on Realizing Sound Has Alienated Many Children

Exhibitors of no less than 16 cities and towns of British Columbia are busy lining up patrons of 1942—10 years hence.

Co-operative organization work is now in hand which probably will do much in assuring substantial patronage a decade ahead—perhaps not individually, but certainly for the motion picture business generally.

It is a child problem.

Finding that juvenile patronage, comprising a real percentage of customers, had been somewhat undermined since the screen went dialogue, the British Columbia showmen gave some thought to future welfare work—their own welfare.

25 Theatres Give Free Shows

The immediate result was that approximately 25 theatres in the 16 centers are giving free shows each week for children of tender age exclusively. Seven of these theatres are suburban houses of Vancouver. This was done when the exhibitors suddenly realized that many small boys and girls were growing up in almost total ignorance of the picture show, particularly the good old five-cent kind with galloping heroes and rescued heroines. The tots were drifting from the theatre.

For the current six months, the British Columbia owners and managers are staging the series of free performances and they have 25 releases lined up for the weekly treats. The theatre men are enjoying the co-operation of the Regional Council of Canadian Clubs, of which Col. J. S. Tait, C. B. E., Vancouver, is chairman, in putting on the shows. The clubs make special arrangements for the care of the children, but the only persons who get paid are the projection machine operators. Travelogue, scenic, educational and action pictures are being presented and many children are becoming acquainted with the screen. Their motion picture taste is being developed and the missionary work now being done in the trade undoubtedly will bring good returns in the long run and in various respects.

"Genuinely Interested"

In this connection, the report made by a representative official regarding the movement is highly significant. One sentence reads:

"I have been informed that the children were genuinely interested in the pictures and apparently every one is pleased about the whole matter."

It is rather difficult to imagine the necessity for any one to report that children were discovered in the act of showing interest in moving pictures, but it is just possible that observers were on hand to ascertain whether the children would become enthusiastic or not.

The suburban houses in Vancouver in which the free shows are being given weekly are: Broadway, Grandview, Windsor, Victoria Drive, Fraser, Regent-Burnaby and Kerrisdale.

The other cities and towns where weekly performances are being given for the children are:

Victoria, Nanaimo, Port Alberni, Cumberland, Courtanay, New Westminster, Chilliwack, Kamloops, Vernon, Kelowna, Penticton, Nelson, Trail, Rossland and Revelstoke, 15 in all in addition to Vancouver.

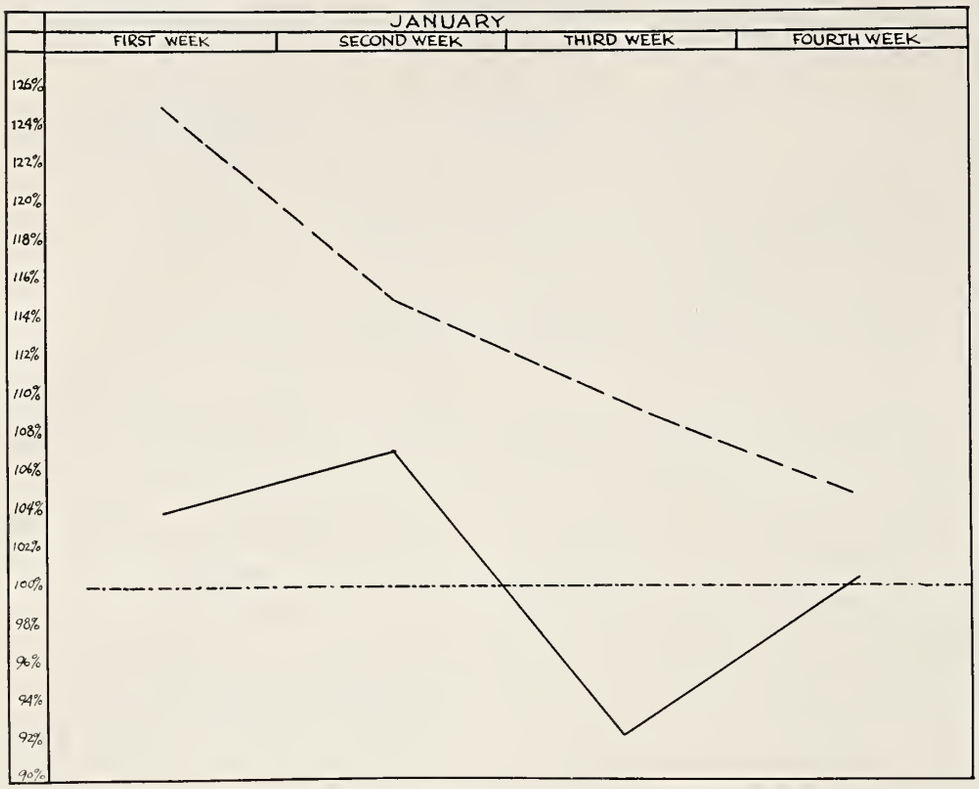
Both social workers and trade leaders in Canada are taking in the so-called film-revival for young children. The plan looks very much like the start of a new era in picture presentation, with an eye on the future.

Grainger Contract Okay, Says Michel

W. C. Michel, executive vice-president Fox Film Corporation, made the following statement on Wednesday:

"In view of the many misleading statements that have been widely published with reference to the validity of its contracts, the Fox Film Corporation wishes to say that the contract between it and James R. Grainger, vice-president and general sales manager in charge of distribution, has been authorized by the board of directors and Mr. Grainger has full authority to negotiate all contracts having to do with the distribution and sale of Fox pictures in the United States and Canada.

"We assume that these misleading statements have been inspired by the fact that a comparatively few employment contracts extending over a period of years have been disapproved by the board, although the great majority of such contracts were authorized and approved. Contracts entered into in the ordinary course of business are not affected by the action of the board."



Bi-Centennial Brings Demand for "Hamilton," Warners Says

The opening of the Washington bi-centennial celebration, scheduled to begin February 22, has resulted in an unusual demand for playdates on "Alexander Hamilton," with George Arliss, according to the home office. Additional playdates are said to have been secured in 43 cities.

Harry Rosenquest, assistant Vitaphone sales manager, returning from a trip through New York state, reports that all key situations have been booked for "Washington, the Man and the Capital," the two-reel special Vitaphone has produced for the bi-centennial celebration.

Music Firms Now Independent

Leo Feist, Inc., and Carl Fischer, Inc., are now operating as separate and independent music publishers, following repurchase of their stock holdings from the Radio Music Company, subsidiary of the National Broadcasting Company.

Herewith is presented a comparison of box office receipts nationally during the four weeks in January, 1931, and the corresponding period in 1932. The graph is based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S weekly compilation of box office returns in leading cities. The heavy continuous black line represents receipts for the four weeks this year, the evenly broken line (— — — —) shows the returns in the same period in 1931, and the 100 per cent line (— — · — — · — —) is the average weekly receipts for the entire year 1931.

Paramount Back To Old Days of Heavy "Sniping"

New and more extensive merchandising plans of Paramount and Publix include a return to the old "circus" showmanship style of poster "sniping" which has been used but little by that organization during the past four years.

Evidence of an immediate comeback of this means of conveying theatre messages to the public is found in the company's recent decision to paper extensively on "The Man I Killed," now current on Broadway, for which an entire unit of 10 trucks and 20 billposters were used to plaster the New York territory—"from barns and farmhouses to the crossroads of the world" at Times Square.

Billing was ordered as far as Stamford, Conn., down through Westchester, to Nyack and Peekskill, throughout Long Island as far as Lynnbrook and Great Neck, and included 200 24-sheet stands, 500 14-sheets, 500 8's, 2,000 3's, 5,000 2's and 5,000 1-sheets. Not one "top-of-building" location was used in the campaign; every spot was a "snipe."

The campaign was engineered by Charles McCarthy, publicity-advertising director at Paramount, aided by Milton Feld and Jack McInerney of Paramount Publix. Phil de Angelis handled the posting, the total of which was equivalent to 36,800 single sheets.

Warner Sales Heads Studying Field for Production Ideas

Warner-First National sales chiefs are either engaged at the moment in key city surveys or plan to undertake them in the near future. The purpose is the contacting of exhibitors and salesmen to determine the types of product advisable for next season.

Gradwell Sears, sales manager for the south and west, intends to visit the Coast studios shortly, stopping over at a number of key centers on his return east.

Motion Picture Club Ball Is Set for Waldorf, February 20

Plans are nearly completed for the Motion Picture Club ball, scheduled for the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, New York, February 20.

A feature of the affair will be a midnight banquet, attended by numerous film stars. Several popular bands and orchestras will supply entertainment, in addition to various individual stage performers.

BIP in Deal with RKO

Bill Rabell, general sales manager for BIP America, has closed for "Trapped in a Submarine," the British Admiralty picture current at the New York and Brooklyn Strands and Warners, New York, in 50 first-run RKO houses and 20 Warner theatres, all in the Eastern territories of these circuits. National deals are said to be pending with both companies.

Hess Marries Linda Watkins

Gabriel L. Hess, Hays office attorney, and Linda Watkins, Fox player, were married last week in Chicago.

Circuit Owner Tells Women "Good" Films Are Patronized

"Good" pictures are patronized, contrary to general opinion, in the belief of Irwin Wheeler, president of Playhouse Operating Company, Inc., operating 30 suburban houses around New York, as expressed at the meeting recently of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs at the Hotel Astor.

Wheeler defined a "good" picture as "one which holds out sufficient promise of entertainment to induce people in the mass to see it; that in seeing it they are entertained, and at the same time are stirred mentally or morally, or both, or are afforded complete mental relaxation." He explained this as the exhibitors' definition of a good picture, and indicated that if the women's group could reconcile its definition of a "good" picture with the exhibitors', definite cooperation with the exhibitors would be possible.

Leo Meehan Recovering

Leo Meehan, publisher of the Hollywood Herald, is on the way to complete recovery following a serious illness resulting from blood poisoning caused by an infected wisdom tooth. He is at the Hollywood Hospital.

Tinker At Fox Studio

Edward R. Tinker, Fox president, Richard Rowland and Sol Wurtzel are at the Coast studio, having arrived from the home office late last week.

Milwaukee Mayor Thanks MPTO for Relief Shows

Thanks of the official city family of Milwaukee to Fred S. Meyer, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wiscousin, and to the members for their benefit performances for the relief of unemployment, was expressed in a resolution passed by the council, and signed by Mayor Daniel W. Hoan and Cornelius Corcoran, president of the common council.

"The official thanks of the city" is extended to "each and every member of the organization in recognition of the public spirit and unselfish devotion shown in a worthy cause."

The resolution said that "the response to this worthy appeal exceeded the most ardent expectations, more than 100,000 citizens attending and a magnificent sum, approximating $45,000, being realized."

Coast Circuit Reverts

The Redwood Theatres, Inc., nine-house northern California circuit, is now under its former manager, George Mann, following a reversion from the Hughes-Franklin circuit. Morgan Walsh will assume the post of general manager.

Handling Supreme Trailers

David Munstuk, operating Crescent Pictures in Detroit, is handling trailers of the Supreme Screen Service in the Michigan territory.

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Family Suitability

CHARLIE CHAN'S CHANCE GOOD
Fox

Mystery—Charlie Chan, a clever Chinese detective, aids the New York police and Scotland Yard in solving the mystery of the death of Sir Lionel, a Scotland Yard official. Amusing and contains a good night scene of New York from a pent house. (Warner Oland, Alexander Kirkland, Linda Watkins and Marion Nixon.)

CHEYENNE CYCLONE GOOD
Willis Kent

Western—The plot of an unscrupulous enemy to steal the land of a young rancher is discovered and foiled through the quick thought and action of the rancher's boy. His rights are established through his own fighting ability. (Lane Chandler and Frankie Darrow.)

FIGHTING FOOL, THE GOOD
Columbia

Another Western of more or less rubber-stamp lot. There is a plan to rob the bank, the usual villain with his bandits, the sheriff and the pretty girl. Excellent riding makes it an acceptable action picture for juveniles. (Tim McCoy, Marceline Day.)

GHOST CITY GOOD
Monogram

Western story of the poor girl in the station restaurant whose valuable papers are stolen by the local bad man. The plot is rapid in action and contains some exciting moments before the papers are restored to the owners. (Bill Cody and Andy Shuford.)

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES
Ideal EXCELLENT

This is an artistic and restrained production in the best British manner. It follows the Conan Doyle story closely and has excellent photographic effects of the weird and lonely moors described in the book. (Robert Rendal, Fred Lloyd.)

HUMAN TARGETS GOOD
Big 4 Film Corp.

This is better than the average Western picture. Buzz Barton as young Dale will intrigue boys. There is good riding and an interesting story. (Buzz Barton, Francis X. Bushman, Jr., and Pauline Parker.)

LADIES OF THE JURY VERY GOOD
RKO Radio

An amusing comedy in which Edna May Oliver carries the laurels. As a member of the jury, she furnishes the humor by asking questions out of order. By a clever ruse she inadvertently discovers the guilty party and sways the other members of the jury to a verdict of "not guilty," thus freeing the innocent defendant.

LAW AND ORDER GOOD
Universal

This Western, with more of shooting than the average, tells the story of the lawlessness of the west in the nineties, when human life seemed to be held of little value among the men of the plains. This is a picture that will delight boys. (Walter Huston.)

CARL LAEMMLE

This week Universal Pictures is celebrating the Twenty-sixth Anniversary of the entrance of Carl Laemmle into the motion picture business.

In these days of unrest in the motion picture industry we are witnessing phenomenal changes in the staffs of the major motion picture companies. The shifting is kaleidoscopic. Almost in an hour, executives and personnel are rearranged to make a new pattern.

This has not happened in Universal Pictures, for standing strongly behind the company is the dominant single figure of the man whose paramount purpose it is to guide his organization safely between the shoals and shallows of existing conditions; to protect his employees, and to offer even stronger cooperation with public groups working for better pictures than he has in brighter times.

Carl Laemmle, wise in the affairs of his business, and with practical vision, has not hesitated to react to public opinion on motion pictures as it is reflected in the organized groups. On more than one occasion he has not counted expense in the remaking or planning of a picture to conform to the requirements of good taste. Protestant, Jew and Catholic, parent teachers, club women, and representatives of all churches have learned that Carl Laemmle is a patient listener, and that his kindliness and willingness to help are unfailing. This has resulted in an enormous amount of good will for Universal.

It is the wish of very many people that the "Uncle Carl" of motion pictures may celebrate many prosperous anniversaries.

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

LOCAL BAD MAN, THE VERY GOOD
Allied Pictures

Taken from Peter B. Kyne's story, "All for Love," this is the tale of a cowboy who outwits two dishonest bankers, restores his good name and wins the heart and hand of the lady station agent. This refreshing Western, well acted and directed, is distinctly above the average. (Hoot Gibson, Sally Blane, Hooper Atchley, Edward Peil.)

ONE MAN LAW VERY GOOD
Columbia

Western—With the usual ingredients of this type of picture, expert riding, wild shooting and the heroics of a plot which concerns itself with the work of a crooked promoter, this film succeeds in being of swift enough tempo to prove interesting. (Buck Jones.)

RACING YOUTH GOOD
Universal

The love story of a girl who attempts to rebuild a defunct automobile company, and a young mechanical genius who has tried to resuscitate the fortune of the enterprise by inventing a new, fast car. The efforts of both succeed when the new car wins the breath-taking race, and the plot of the rival company is foiled. Excellent racing scenes. (June Clyde, Louise Fazenda and Frank Albertson.)

Adult Suitability

MAN I KILLED, THE EXCELLENT
Paramount

This is an outstanding production. It presents an aspect of the war theme hitherto untouched. The story deviates from the usual, and the casting and direction are excellent. Not content to express the plot merely through dialogue, the director has used the full scope of the cinema, and has given us a gorgeous study of the effectiveness of the hands in expressing emotional reactions. (Lionel Barrymore, Nancy Carroll, Phillips Holmes.)

AIR EAGLES GOOD
Larry Darmour

Two aviators, performing for a carnival in the home town of one of them, become involved in a robbery plot in which one of the fliers is guilty. There is a thrilling air chase and a good moral lesson in the heroism of the aviator who sacrifices his own life to save the reputation of his younger brother. (Lloyd Hughes, Norman Kerry, Shirley Grey.)

DANCE TEAM VERY GOOD
Fox

An enthusiastic young "hoofer" meets a discouraged girl who loves to dance, and imbues her with his optimism until they combine their forces and create the most sensational dancing team of the year. Loyalty, pathos, fun and clever performances woven into this picture make it good entertainment fare. (James Dunn and Sally Eilers.)

DEADLINE GOOD
Columbia

Released from prison, after serving an unjust term, the hero of this Western trails the real criminal and, after some difficulty, delivers him and his associates to the law. A good story, with exceptional direction and remarkable acting by a small boy whose name is not given. (Buck Jones, Loretta Sayers.)

DER ANDERE VERY GOOD
(The Man Within)
Europa

Drama—The story is based on the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde idea of a split personality. The acting is good, the photography interesting and the idea arresting. (Fritz Kortner.)

DIE VOM RUMMELPLATZ GOOD
(Those from the Side Show)
Ondra-Lamac

A side show performer steps into an emergency situation at a famous theatre and saves the program. It brings fame and fortune to her and her show associates. This is one of the lesser German productions. (Anny Ondra, Siegfried Arno, Margareta Kupfer, Viktor Schwannecke.)

FINAL EDITION, THE — GOOD
Columbia

A newspaper story much in the manner of its predecessors in this season. It is not a big picture, but has sufficient sustained interest to win it a place on all endorsed lists. (Pat O'Brien, Mae Clarke.)

GABLES MYSTERY, THE — GOOD
British International

Mystery deepened by sliding panels, stranglings and murders, leaves a woman detective and an amateur male detective undecided until the last moment who really perpetrated the crime of stealing the valuables from the museum and committing murder there. (Gerald Rawlinson and Charles Farrell.)

GAY BUCKAROO, THE — GOOD
M. H. Hoffman

A Western picture with the Gay Buckaroo as a veritable Pollyanna who renovates and reforms everything and everyone. A faithful Chinese servant and friend who has an Eastern proverb for every occasion helps him. There are interesting and amusing situations, and those who like Westerns will enjoy it. (Hoot Gibson, Roy D'Arcy, Merna Kennedy, Edward Peil.)

GYPSY BLOOD — VERY GOOD
British International

The story of the cigarette girl, "Carmen." It follows very closely the plot of the opera, and the music and singing of the familiar arias make it important. The picture was filmed in Elstree, England, with an American artist in the title role and though the music is good, the art of production does not compare favorably with American films. (Marguerite McNamara and Thomas Burke.)

HATCHET MAN, THE — GOOD
First National

An interesting but unpleasant story of Tong activities in San Francisco, adapted from the play, "Honorable Mr. Wong," upon which David Belasco was working at the time of his death. It has been beautifully photographed and admirably cast with a fine quality of direction. (Edward Robinson, Loretta Young, Dudley Digges, Tully Marshall and Edmund Breese.)

LADIES OF THE BIG HOUSE — GOOD
Paramount

An innocent couple are railroaded to prison on circumstantial evidence. The girl is sentenced to life imprisonment; the young husband to death. The story tells of the wife's successful efforts to free them both. It is well directed, the plot vivid and consistent. The entertainment value is lessened, however, because of the sorrow and suffering depicted. It builds up to a rather weak climax. (Sylvia Sidney and Gene Raymond.)

LOVERS COURAGEOUS — VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A young man dreams of becoming a playwright, but poverty takes him along a hard road before his dreams come true. It is the story of his own love, marriage and suffering, written into a play that finally brings him success and happiness. This production has charm and more than usual interest. (Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans, Roland Young, Frederick Kerr.)

MAN WHO PLAYED GOD, THE — EXCELLENT
First National

At the height of his career, a great musician loses his hearing, and, utterly hopeless, embittered and filled with self-pity, loses also his faith in God. But, awakening to the needs and sorrows in the lives of those around him, through his knowledge of lip-reading, he becomes a medium for good and eventually regains his faith and a measure of happiness. Outstanding from every angle—story, direction, acting, photography and entertainment value—with George Arliss in the title role. It was produced formerly as a silent. (George Arliss, Violet Heming, Ivan Simpson, Bette Davis.)

MENACE, THE — VERY GOOD
Columbia

An adaptation of a well-known Edgar Wallace story that is well produced with all characters suitably presented. It is thoroughly interesting from start to finish. (H. B. Warner.)

MICHAEL AND MARY — VERY GOOD
Universal

A. A. Milne's story of the hopeful young novelist Michael, and Mary, who has been deserted and is at the end of her resources. He offers her help and eventually they fall in love and decide to marry. Years later, after a successful, happy married life the husband returns and tries blackmail. He drops dead of heart failure and causes a dramatic ending to the story. (Edna Best and Herbert Marshall.)

NIE WIEDER LIEBE — GOOD
(No More Love)
Ufa

A light comedy. The most notable art of the performance is the music, the two principal lyrics being particularly beautiful. The portrayal of Jean the butler by Felix Bressart is especially fine and most amusing. The plot concerns itself with the affairs of a bachelor disillusioned by a girl's deception. (Lilian Harvey, Harry Liedtke and Felix Bressart.)

NIGHT BEAT — GOOD
Action Pictures

Two war buddies meet after some years when one is district attorney and the other a gangster. The latter becomes a detective to help his friend clean up the gangs. The theme that the gangster's day has ended is worked out in a believable story. (Jack Mulhall, Walter McGrail, Patsy Ruth Miller.)

PRESTIGE — EXCELLENT
RKO-Pathe

This serious drama of army life in a tropical penal colony, shows the "breaking" of a young army officer under the strain of his disagreeable surroundings and the discharge of his military duties. The self-sacrificing love and loyalty of his wife, as pictured by Ann Harding, is an outstanding characterization. The work of the director is most commendable and the parts are all well cast and acted. (Ann Harding, Adolphe Menjou, Melvyn Douglas, Ian MacLaren.)

RECKLESS AGE, THIS — VERY GOOD
Paramount

The father and mother of two selfish irresponsible children find them essentially sound when a crisis presents itself. Richard Bennett and Frances Starr give convincing and natural performances as father and mother, Charles Rogers and the rest of the cast are adequate. (Richard Bennett, Frances Starr, Charles Rogers, Frances Dee, Peggy Shannon, Charles Ruggles.)

RIDING FOR JUSTICE — GOOD
Columbia

The sheriff is the villain in this Western, but Buck Jones, as the cowhand, unmasks all plots and all villainy and probably marries the sheriff's wife. It appears that he would, at the end. Plenty of action and entertainment for admirers of wild riding. (Buck Jones, Mary Doran, Russel Simpson.)

LA RONDE DES HEURES — GOOD
(The Dance of the Hours)
Jacques Haik Production

An opera singer loses his voice and his family, but after much suffering regains his happiness and his former place in the opera. It is a well acted story, full of human interest and with good music. The print seen was evidently old for the photography was not always clear. (Andre Bauge, Francine Mussey, Gilberte Savary, Mme. Paul Andral.)

SECRETS OF THE ORIENT — GOOD
Ufa

The Arabian Nights story of Ali the Cobbler is told with charm and humor. It is a silent film with English sub-titles, accompanied by the "Scheherazade" music of Rimsky-Korsakoff. It is a well acted, well photographed fantasy and offers delightful entertainment. (Nikolai Kolin, Ivan Petrovitch, D. Dimitrieff, G. Modot, Marcella Albani.)

SILENT WITNESS, THE — GOOD
Fox

A devoted father assumes the blame for a murder which he has reason to believe his son has committed. This English murder mystery with its well developed plot, excellent direction and acting will prove good entertainment for the average audience. (Lionel Atwill, Bramwell Fletcher, Greta Nissen.)

SUNSET TRAIL — GOOD
Tiffany

The villain, in the person of a crooked bank president who tries to force a girl ranch owner out so he can secure the property, again bites the dust. The hero rides and shoots, in a way to satisfy all who enjoy a good Western. (Ken Maynard, Frank Rice, Ruth Hiatt, Philo McCullough.)

TAXI — GOOD
Warner

The attempt of the Consolidated Cab Company to control independent drivers is the basis of a well written and most realistic story. It is underworld material that offers something pungent, vital and believable. It is made quite clear that crime does not pay. Mr. Cagney as the tough and fighting taxi driver gives an excellent characterization. (James Cagney, Loretta Young, George E. Stone, Dorothy Burgess, Guy Kibbee.)

TROTTE TEODOR — GOOD
(Tired Theodore)
Svensk Filmindustri

A knowledge of Swedish is necessary to really appreciate this delightful musical comedy. But even without the language, the fine photography, the swift moving story with its amusing situations can be enjoyed. A retired official becomes infatuated with his foster son's fiancee. Trouble comes thick and fast until the

happy ending. (Valdemar Dalquist, Karin Swanstroem, Hakan Westergrem, Britta Appelgren.)

UNION DEPOT — GOOD
First National

Two tramps, one young, one old, come into a railroad terminal and the action of a vigorous but somewhat improbable story begins with the Union Depot as its setting. The chance meeting of people develops the melodrama which is acted in an intelligent and interesting fashion by a good cast. Unfortunately, some unnecessarily raw dialogue makes full commendation of this realistic and original effort, impossible. (Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Joan Blondell, Guy Kibbee, Alan Hale, David Landau.)

THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-NOTRE DAME FOOTBALL GAME — EXCELLENT
Sono-Art

This game, called by experts, "the greatest game in football history," has been made into a five-reel feature picture. It is presented by the Knute Rockne Memorial Association and shows every play in the battle that brought Notre Dame her first defeat in three years. The description is given in a clear and remarkably interesting manner.

WITHOUT HONOR — GOOD
Art Class

A western picture in which Harry Carey displays splendid horsemanship. The story of two brothers—one working for the Government as a custom ranger, the other "a bad man," a gambler who, to avenge his brother's death (the brother having been killed by smugglers) becomes sheriff and a hero. (Harry Carey and Mae Busch.)

Short Subjects

AHOY — VERY GOOD
Falcon

"Ahoy" depicts the adventures of a group of Boy Scouts, who rescue a white girl from a desert island. It is entertaining and especially suitable for young people.

CASTILIAN MEMOIRS — EXCELLENT
Imperial

William Pizor presents another Port o' Call —Manila, the finest bay in the Far East. A fine piece of social service is shown in the asylum for abandoned children. Model programs given men in Bilibid Prison. Excellent lecture material.

COLLEGE GRAPPLERS — VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

A Grantland Rice Sportlight in which are pictures of the students at Penn. State College being instructed in wrestling.

DOOR OF ASIA — VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

A Vagabond Adventure, showing the many canals; methods of carrying water, and other interesting facts about China. Synchronized with lecture by Tom Terriss.

DUCKS AND DRAKES — VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

The sound effects make this Grantland Rice Sportlight a highly realistic portraval of the sport of duck shooting. Gorgeous scenic background.

HEARST METRO NEWS — VERY GOOD
MGM

In this newsreel there are glimpses of current events that make newspaper headlines—Gandhi going to prison; Babe Ruth's winter training; stunt flying in Florida, and a lovely scenic of Niagara Falls in her winter guise.

ISLES OF BIRDS — EXCELLENT
Warner

Lowell Thomas tells of the fertilizer "guano" which is a source of great revenue to Peru. It is excrement of birds called Guani. He shows great flockes of these birds, also pelicans and herds of sea lions. The packing and shipping is depicted.

JAVANESE JOURNEYS — VERY GOOD
Warner

A visit to the port of Colombo, Ceylon, and to the city of Kandy, showing rice fields, natives and their dances. Then on to Singapore and Batavia, showing the products and life of the people. Scenery excellent and an interesting picture.

JINGLE BELLS — VERY GOOD
Educational

An animated Terry Toon with synchronized music and amusing singing by soprano and bass voices. Winter scenes and clever action make this of unique interest.

JUST PALS — VERY GOOD
Universal

Babe Ruth demonstrating the fine points of baseball. An excellent exposition of the merits of proper training.

LAND OF GANDHI — EXCELLENT
RKO Pathe

Glimpses of age-old India in a Vagabond Adventure picture, showing primitive machinery, strange religious customs, caste system and the feeling of unrest there today.

MERRY MELODIES — VERY GOOD
Warner

Animated cartoon of a doll in a toy shop singing "Red Headed Baby."

MICKEY CUTS UP — VERY GOOD
Columbia

Another clever and amusing Walt Disney animated cartoon. Mickey and his dog are mowing the lawn and Minnie watering the flowers when things begin to happen.

MELODY ISLE, THE — VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Some of the great beauty and the interest of Ireland is shown by James A. Fitzpatrick.

NOAH'S OUTING — VERY GOOD
Educational

A Paul Terry-Toon animated subject that is amusing. Noah takes every known and some unknown animals into the Ark with him.

PERFECT CONTROL — EXCELLENT
Universal

In a little boy's dream, Babe Ruth comes to school, rescues the children from their mathematics and instructs them in the art of pitching. Delightful juvenile fare!

PIANO MOVER — VERY GOOD
Columbia

A "Krazy Kat" sound cartoon in which Krazy Kat moves a piano, while a little girl (another cat) climbs out of a window onto the piano and plays and sings. It is very amusing and has unusually funny antics.

ROAD TO ROMANCE, THE — VERY GOOD
Educational

A trip to the wonderful painted canyon and desert of the Bryce Canyon National Park. The picture is in color with remarks by Curtis F. Nagel.

SPILLS AND THRILLS — VERY GOOD
RKO Pathe

An outboard water rodeo in Florida. Interesting and amusing.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS, NO. 16 — VERY GOOD
Universal

In this picture we are shown the development of an orchid from the seed to the final blossom. Also raising deer on a ranch in Utah. Indian women at work and several other interesting topics. With accompanying lecture.

TOM-TOM TRAIL, THE — EXCELLENT
Fox

This is a "Magic Carpet" journey along the Zambesi river into the heart of South Africa. Beautiful views of Victoria Falls and interesting contrasts of the British trained natives with the savages of the Interior are shown.

TRADER HOUND — GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A Dogville comedy that parodies Trader Horn. The patience necessary in training and directing the dogs impresses an audience.

UGLY DUCKLING — GOOD
Columbia

The old story of the ugly duckling—a hen hatches out six chickens and a duckling. The hen is disgusted and leaves the poor outcast, who turns out to be a hero rescuing the chickens from death.

WASHINGTON, THE MAN AND THE CAPITAL — EXCELLENT
Warner

A short picture made as a memorial for celebration of the Bicentennial of Washington's birthday. It is entertaining and historically correct.

Serials

DETECTIVE LLOYD — GOOD
Universal

This is a story of Scotland Yard and the men who devote their time to protection of lives and property. It is offered in twelve parts, of which the first three are: "The Green Spot Murder," "The Panther Strikes," "The Trap Springs," and concerns "The Panther," a mysterious thief and murderer and the efforts of Detective Lloyd to capture him. A British cast gives a generally satisfactory performance with an occasional amateurish touch and a flavor of old-time melodrama. (Jack Lloyd, Wallace Geoffrey, Muriel Angelus.)

GREEN SPOT MURDER, THE — GOOD
Universal

A mystery serial—A curio collector has a very valuable armlet. This chapter deals with the attempt of a gang of crooks, as well as a group of Egyptians, to steal the armlet. The episodes are thrilling and one is left in suspense and with a desire to see the next chapters. (Jack Lloyd.)

FROM HOLLYWOOD

BY LEO MEEHAN

The foreign colony of motion picture artists in Hollywood is very much alarmed over the proposed bill now before the house ways and means committee in Washington suggesting a 65 per cent surtax on incomes of alien motion picture actors and individuals in certain other classifications such as prizefighters and even bootleggers.

In commenting on the bill, Representative Dickstein of New York said:

"With prizefighters, movie stars and heiresses married to aliens taking so much money out of the United States, I am surprised there is anything left."

An undercover agent of the Government, investigating the living conditions of the foreign actors and directors in Hollywood, says 90 per cent of those now in Hollywood on the six months passport arrangement spend little more than living expenses and take the remainder with them for investment in their native country.

Quite a few Hollywood folk are en route to New York where some will remain for a few weeks, while others board steamers for various European destinations. Mr. and Mrs. Clive Brook are sailing on the Bremen for England. Sol Lesser and Charles Rogers are headed for the big town to transact a little business, then return, Rogers to close a deal with RKO Radio for distribution of product to be made by him as an independent operator, while Lesser is there to sell his latest Zane Grey picture. Tay Garnett and Patsy Ruth Miller are off for a pleasant jaunt. Abel Green is to rejoin the New York staff of Variety. Mr. and Mrs. Aimee Semple Macpherson have gone east for a short vacation. Smith and Dale are returning to New York to make shorts at Paramount's Long Island studio.

In drawing up a code of ethics to be followed by the newly formed Independent Producers Association, decision was made to abolish the practice of announcing pictures to be made until they actually are set for production. It also was decided to devise ways and means to sell all product to exchanges on a C. O. D. basis, thereby eliminating trade acceptances and many "headaches" for the producer while waiting for the paper to mature.

Central Casting is doing its share toward the relief of unemployed studio technicians by giving them preference in studio calls for atmospheric players.

The most outstanding actor contract to be signed this week was between Radio and Lon Chaney, Jr., for a term of five years with yearly options. He will be featured as a juvenile character actor and be billed under the name of Lon Chaney, Jr.

Universal has assigned three writers to work out an original story for Lew Ayres. It will go into production immediately after "Night Club" under the working title of "Young Justice." Writers working on the story are Jerome Horwin, Alan Rivkin and P. J. Wolfson.

Jack Stebbins, former New York theatre operator for Fox, is now in Hollywood planning to enter the production field as an independent for the making of a series of one-reel stage presentations in color. The series is designed to meet the requirements of the small theatre owner who cannot afford stage shows in the flesh.

HERE AND THERE: As usual, Harold Lloyd is looking for a new leading woman for his next picture, with Constance Cummings about set for the job. . . . Sam Jaffe and Paul Lukas are back in town Paramounting. . . . Miriam Hopkins made her radio debut on the California Melody Hours over the Columbia network last Sunday night. . . . Rod La Rocque is talking with Universal for a part in "Back Street." . . . The motion picture of "Girl Crazy" made such a hit with its first preview audience that Radio is now working five comedy constructors and directors on added scenes and remakes in an effort to take full advantage of its possibilities. . . . Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford appeared on the stage at the local opening of "Arrowsmith." . . . Alison Skipworth landed a new contract with Paramount. . . . Bert Levy, veteran vaudeville actor, is returning to the stage. . . . Paramount is speeding up release on "Shanghai Express" in order to cash in on front-page publicity given to the Sino-Japanese fighting. . . . Chic Sale, like Jackie Cooper, was forced to give up a personal appearance tour in order to play a prominent part in "Limpy." . . . Carl Laemmle, Jr., is planning to make "Night Club" one of the big specials of the year. . . . B. P. Schulberg believes the growing interest in the forthcoming Olympic games is changing the type of leading men to athletic types, but does not cite any particular instances. . . . "Flu" has invaded the Hollywood studios, with some plants having as high as 15 employees confined to their homes or hospitals. . . . Ruth Mannix, niece of Eddie Mannix at MGM, landed a term player contract with that organization. . . . The "Five Friends" plan, recently organized by Fox studio employees for the relief of unemployed studio workers, was the beneficiary of a benefit golf tournament. . . . Andy Lawler opened at the Majestic in a new play, "Shining Blackness." Others in the cast are Joyce Compton, Lucille La Verne and Dwight Frye. . . . Edgar Wallace delivered his first original screen story to Radio under the title of "The Green Pack." It will be produced without a woman in the east. . . .

Warns Dullness Blocks Progress Of School Films

Motion pictures for the classroom should not be produced by an educator independently of a film expert, nor should a producer dominate the influence or knowledge of the educator, according to Edward F. Stevenson, president of Visugraphic Pictures, who predicts that educational motion pictures in the very near future will become an integral part of the industry.

Fox Film Corporation, RCA Photophone and Electrical Research for some time have been interested in the development of the classroom field in order that they might create a market for 16 mm. sound equipment. Several companies have produced school films and in many cases entrusted all details of production to an educator with no knowledge of picture technique.

"School films should be interesting or even exciting, and a dull film will make a lesson in any subject dull," Stevenson said. "With the advent of sound pictures the possibility of making interesting films has been increased, and the danger of making them duller also increased.

"There is no excuse for using motion pictures in the class room unless you can do the job quicker, better, clearer and make a more lasting impression than you can in any other way. When educators, whose entire training has been in thinking in words, try to translate these words into action, then the dullness is appalling."

Hampton, Head of General Film, Dies

Benjamin B. Hampton, who was president of the old General Film Company and former owner of Hampton's magazine, died at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, this week, at the age of 56. He had been ill for about two months.

Mr. Hampton was at one time vice-president of the American Tobacco Company for five years, after which he turned to the film business. For a time president of the General Film Company, he wrote for the screen and was otherwise interested in the motion picture. Last month his work on the industry, "A History of the Movies," received with favor by reviewers, was published by Covici-Friede.

Mr. Hampton is survived by his widow, the former Claire Adams, film player, whom he married in 1924, and by two sons and three daughters of his first marriage to Maria Somers Bartleson, who died in 1922. He was a member of the National Press Club, Writers' Club, Quaker Hill Country Club and the Authors' League of America.

Columbia Group to Dance

Columbia's social organization will hold its second annual formal dinner dance at the Hotel Plaza, New York, February 13. Jeanne Dressler is president. Committee members are: Fay Rothman, Floyd Weber, Mort Wormser, Etta Le Voff, in charge of arrangements.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"TOMORROW AND TOMORROW" is unquestionably a fine picture and a grand vehicle for Ruth Chatterton. It is interesting all the way through and cleverly acted by the various members of a fine cast.

BUT, it's going to be tough getting business with it in the spots outside of key cities. "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" is class entertainment for the classes. The intelligentsia will grasp the many fine things contained in this picture, but it's a question whether the others will get any real pleasure out of it.

The title can be built up in the big cities to mean real "box office" but elsewhere mighty clever advertising will have to be brought into play to get the idea and sales thought back of your campaign. Direct appeal to the better classes of each community will be necessary if you ever hope to get the most out of it. And it certainly is deserving of real business.

In "audience value," the same applies as the title. But those who derive the greatest amount of entertainment out of it will be in the minority. The others are apt to feel that they are being asked to swallow too much.

While not suitable for kids or Sunday showing, it should be spotted where it will lend itself to the type of patronage you are to try to draw from. Possibly it will get some of the "ritzy" folk into your house and start them off as steady future patrons.

Few pictures this season have been better produced, directed or acted, and if a smart showman gets behind it, pushes the title for what it's worth and plays up Ruth Chatterton, Paul Lukas and the youngster, Tad Alexander, he may close his engagement with far more satisfaction than the man who tells his community: "Here's 'Tomorrow and Tomorrow,' come and buy a ticket."

"THE RAINBOW TRAIL," for all its gorgeous scenery and the fact that it was photographed in the Grand Canyon, is still—another Western. And the acting, direction and everything merely serve to emphasize that fact.

In the title you have your selling slant. Backed up with Zane Grey's name, the book tieups (if they still tie up with books in your town), and the scenery, you may kick up sufficient interest to get the natives to the box office and buying tickets.

"Audience value" is just so-so. George O'Brien, to me, is in the same class with every other leading Western star. Cecilia Parker is pretty but seemed out of place in the part. Kirkwood was OK but only on for a flash, and then was killed. Minna Gombell has an unsympathetic role, so, in order not to spoil her with your customers, leave her off the billing.

If your patrons like Westerns of the slightly better variety and nice scenery, then this one should be a happy booking.

"THE MENACE" is just a fair mystery picture and so lacking in marquee names that only a miracle will get it over to profitable returns for most houses. The big deluxe first-runs would hardly take a chance with it; but the smaller spots ought to find it fairly good entertainment if backed up with something strong enough to make up for what it lacks at the b.o.

The title, as with all mystery pictures, lends itself to all sorts of selling gags and advertising. Taken from a popular Edgar Wallace story, you will have that slant, for one, to work on. H. B. Warner, while played up in the press sheet, does not even play an important enough part to warrant it. As the Scotland Yard man he is in action mostly towards the finish.

"Audience value" is fair. The story is fairly well told and manages to hold the interest. The acting of Natalie Moorhead, William Davidson and Craufurd Kent is convincing, but their names are not b.o. Bette Davis does well with what little she has to do, which isn't much. Walter Byron has the leading role along with Miss Moorhead, but whether you can sell him in your campaign is a question.

OK. for kids if they like mysteries, and what kids don't? Otherwise use plenty of judgment in where you play this and how you back it up. Given strong support from the surrounding program, you might get by OK.

The Menace

(Columbia)

Mystery

Heathen idols, Scotland Yard, death plotters, a scrawled "Feathered Serpent," and a "dead" man returned to life, pop up here and there throughout this production, made from Edgar Wallace's novel. The setting is in an English estate and all the players except Bette Davis and Natalie Moorhead are native Britons, though all the others are appearing in American-made pictures. In one respect there is a departure from the melodrama-mystery standard; the hero disclosed his identity before the final denouement, and the confession of the murder comes as an anti-climax.

While H. B. Warner as the inspector heads the cast listing, Walter Byron in the role of Ronald Quayle with the disguise name Robert Crockett, has both more footage and more importance in the unfolding of the story.

Ronald Quayle, falsely accused of the murder of his father, escapes from prison. A plastic surgeon rebuilds his face, disfigured by an oil explosion. He returns from America and appears as Robert Crockett, prospective buyer of Quayle Manor from his stepmother (Natalie Moorhead), and her two fellow-plotters, Utterson (William Davidson) and Lewis (Crauford Kent). Ronald pretends to be in love with her and gives her an engagement necklace. He steals it back and plants it on Utterson. Lewis chokes Utterson to death. Lewis loses in a fight with Ronald and then confesses the murder of the father.

The Impatient Maiden

(Universal)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Watching the unreeling of Universal's "The Impatient Maiden" I couldn't escape the impression that here was another and better "Street Scene," lacking in the synthetic quality of "Street Scene" yet presenting life in a series of overtones, overstressed emotions, bold and clearcut etchings.

"Impatient Maiden" moves rapidly from the start through a fairly stereotyped story to an unusual conclusion that is telegraphed well in advance. The humanness of the characters and their skillful interpretation by a competent and well-directed cast take this film well out of the mediocre class.

Five principal players are in the film and all of them flawless in their parts: Lew Ayres, Mae Clark—who grows on you—Una Merkel, Andy Devine, John Halliday.

James Whale indicates in every picture that is released under his imprint that he has individuality of style plus an understanding grasp of life's fundamentals that will not let him make a false step. "Impatient Maiden" could easily suffer seriously from jarring notes in human values, but there aren't any.

Capable John Halliday as the middle-aged wealthy lawyer who make ineffectual passes at Mae Clarke is exactly to the life what a middle-aged wealthy seducer ought to be: personal, gallant, gay, insouciant, and not one bit disagreeable. Una Merkel continues to give me moments of chortling delight whenever I see her on the screen, and Andy Devine fulfills the promise he gave the fans in "The Spirit of Notre Dame."

"Impatient Maiden" is pretty satisfying screen fare for what it pretends to be—a light and pleasing little story with no problem and no psychology.

Produced and distributed by Universal pictures. Directed by James Whale. From the novel by Donald Henderson Clarke. Screenplay by Richard Schayer and Winifred Dunn. Supervised by E. M. Asher. Photographed by Arthur Edeson. Art director, Danny Hall. Film editor, Clarence Kolster.

well-constructed story, the intimate details of hotel life in any large city, its tragedies and mirth, conniving and trickery and yet withal it does not detract from the main thread of a story worked and timed so that it keeps the audience in suspense from beginning to end. The handling of the mobs and the portrayals of the various characters was thought to indicate competent direction.

Theodore Von Eltz and Peggy Shannon dominate the small cast of principals by the manner in which they work together more than by measure of importance in telling the story, it was agreed. It brings back two former screen idols of the silent days by presenting Ethel Clayton and Henry B. Walthall in small parts. Alan Mowbray registers well as an unfaithful husband and Bert Roach plays his usual amusing role of the drunken playboy.

Roach gets plenty of laughs in the attempt to counterbalance the serious side of the story concerning an embezzler who returns to the hotel after spending five years in prison to recover the money he had stolen. While waiting and planning a way of getting into the room where it is hidden he meets the girl who happens to be a pawn of two other crooks also anxious to get the money. Romance of the more sophisticated type sets in and it becomes a game of guessing what will happen until the climax.

J. Farrell Macdonald plays the part of the sly old gumshoe who is on the trail of the hidden treasure, and does it well, it was thought. The same can be said of several other actors called on to perform minor bits, particularly Harry Edwards as the wisecracking hotel clerk and George Humbert as the hotel barber. Rockliffe Fellowes and William Scott are seen often as the conniving crooks and not only look the parts but act them equally well.

Much credit went to the authors of the story, to Ralph De Lacey for designing the pretentious settings and to Ira Morgan for the photography.

Tomorrow and Tomorrow

(Paramount)

Drama

Paramount has adapted Philip Barry's rather successful New York stage effort, "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" for the screen as a vehicle for Ruth Chatterton, the last the star portrays for Paramount before assuming her contract with Warner Brothers.

It seems quite apparent that Paramount has patterned its adaptation very closely after the original legitimate script, with the addition, of course, of the more elaborate settings possible in the motion picture technique. Lines and business have been followed meticulously under the hand of Richard Wallace, director.

Supporting Miss Chatterton are the late Robert Ames as the husband who cannot give his wife a child; Paul Lukas as the Viennese neurological specialist, who, stopping at their home while on a lecture tour, succeeds where the husband failed; Harold Minjir as the doctor's secretary; Tad Alexander as the son, believed by Ames to be his own.

Lukas brings into the life of Miss Chatterton, we are given to understand, that which she has so completely wanted, a son. Ames, more or less careless and unappreciative of his wife's sensitive nature, cannot see her situation clearly. Lukas, falling in love, departs. Ames, lover of horses, forces his son to jump his horse, not seeing that the boy is frightened. He falls and is badly injured. Fearing to be called "yellow" by his father, he mounts before he is completely well. This time, it is impossible to draw the boy out of a stupor, and Miss Chatterton, learning Lukas is in the country, calls him. He succeeds in bringing the boy to the point of recovery and, finally understanding that he is his own son, asks Miss Chatterton to leave Ames for him, bringing the boy, if she must.

An internal struggle on the part of the mother results in victory for Ames and the boy, defeat for Lukas, who deeply disappointed, leaves.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Richard Wallace. From the play by Philip Barry of the same name. Screen play by Josephine Lovett. Cameraman, Charles Lang. Release date, February 5, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Blue Danube

(British and Dominions-W. & F.)

Musical Romance

(Seen in London)

This addition to British musicals, though not strong in story value, is arresting as a musical. Set against the romantic backgrounds of a gypsy encampment, it serves actually, to introduce Alfred Rode and his Royal Tzigane Band, a party of musicians who, as gypsy types, have taken the West-end of London by storm. Joseph Schildkraut is added to the Rode party in the role of a young gypsy in love with a gypsy girl (Dorothy Bouchier) who leaves him in consequence of a slight affair in which he is involved with a countess (Brigitte Helm).

The countess has been riding in the woods and, seeing the gypsy musicians in their natural lair has invited them to play at her house party merely as a pretext to enjoy closer contact with Sandor (Schildkraut). The beautiful music of "The Blue Danube" runs throughout the story, which develops along the lines that the girl, after running away, marries an army officer, is tracked down by her gypsy lover and is about to rejoin him when again the countess comes on the scene and the girl's doubts are re-established so she remains with her husband and sends her gypsy lover back to the forests. A feature of the picture is the delightful Western Electric recording of the music which is put over in great showmanlike manner by Rode.

Produced by British and Dominions. Distributed by W. & F. Film Service. Directed by Herbert Wilcox. Screen play by Doris Zinkeisen. Photography by F. A. Young. Running time, 72 minutes.

The Monster Walks

(Action Pictures)

Thrill Mystery

Action Pictures offers its own contribution to the group of "horror" films now holding the stage temporarily. An ape is held responsible for two murders and a third attempted killing in an eerie old house in the country, until it is revealed in the end that it is not the ape but a moronic human who has been guided to the crimes.

Rex Lease plays the lead as the doctor fiance of Vera Reynolds, returning to the house upon the death of her father, who had used the ape in scientific work. A paralytic uncle, played by Sheldon Lewis, is the mind behind the crimes, which are dictated by a desire to become sole heir to the fortune of his brother through the death of his niece.

Mischa Auer takes the acting honors rather completely as the apparent moron, son of Martha Mattox as the housekeeper and, it is later revealed, of the uncle. The plot is rather of the conventional pattern, centering about the reading of the dead man's will and set entirely within the heavily "atmosphered" house. The housekeeper is killed by mistake, by the reaching hand, supposedly of the ape, and Auer, when he learns of his error, strangles the uncle in revenge. Auer is about to throw the girl to the ape caged in the cellar, when he is himself caught and strangled by the beast he had attempted to mimic in his murderous efforts.

Sidney Bracy plays the lawyer, on whom Lease's suspicion naturally falls by reason of his studied efforts at what appears to be concealment, and Sleep n' Eat offers a very much frightened and fairly comedic colored chauffeur to Lease.

Produced and distributed by Action Pictures. Directed by Frank Strayer. Story and adaptation by Robert Ellis. Edited by Byron Robinson. Cameraman, Jules Cronjager. Supervised by Cliff Broughton. Recording, George Hutchins. Running time, 62 minutes.

Brilliant British Achievement

(Seen in London)

This is 21 carat "Hollywood" marked and glitters with that something which has hitherto distinguished most American pictures from those of British origin. It is tinged with the sumptuousness of a Lubitsch; has wit in nearly every line; tells a human story; brings vivid satire down to the level of low-brow appreciation and moves as a motion picture should do.

It is a triumph for Paramount and for Alexander Korda and argues more loudly than anything has ever done before, the case for artistic and financial internationalism in the cause of film production. It produces a new feminine player of stellar potentiality in Elizabeth Allan, and gives Leslie Howard, already established both sides of the Atlantic, his best motion picture role to date.

He is Max, the head waiter at London's Grand Palace Hotel; the personification of masculine patience. His imperturbability marks him a greater "politician" than kings or prime ministers and wins him far more feminine admirers. He falls for a girl (Elizabeth Allan) travelling Europe with her gay old father (Morton Selten), and when they leave for Switzerland, Max, whose identity is now unknown to them, follows. At the Winter Sports Hotel where the party stays, a European King (George Grossmith) arrives incognito and recognizes Max the head waiter. The two are seen together a lot whereupon the other guests form a wrong impression that Max is a Royal Prince also incognito who has been chased by the King because of a looming danger of morganatic marriage.

Meanwhile the girl reciprocates Max's love without in the least suspecting his real identity and when he suggests barriers of social difference she senses a slight and is peeved. Max is located at the Swiss Hotel by jealous Countess Ricardi (Benita Hume) and in order to avoid a scene he decides to quit his chances and return to London. The girl and her father are infuriated at his lack of respect and the King suggests that all meet at the Grand Palace, London, when he will produce Max and disclose his identity. They do so, and the girl announces an "engagement" party to celebrate her betrothal to Sir William Carter (Cyril Ritchard). To humiliate him she orders that Max take charge of the party arrangements. During the process she gives him a hot time and plays every tantrum to provoke him—all without success. "A head waiter," he says, "must always remain calm just like a doctor in a lunatic asylum." Girl's father admires Max and urges him to go for what he wants and just get it. At the engagement party it happens.

Leslie Howard shows himself one of the greatest young men in motion pictures; his characterization is superb; he says more with the flick of an eyelid than scores of leads could shout through a megaphone. Elizabeth Allan photographs beautifully and has dramatic power in her difficult scenes as a spoilt society child. George Grossmith is just a king with a lofty disdain for the mudscraping social set and a fixed anxiety about holding down his own job of work. Every supporting part is cast perfectly and the signs are that the Paramount cogs have bitten well on Elstree soil.

The Man Who Dared

(Columbia)

Mystery

Columbia presents an intensely interesting, gripping mystery detective story in "The Man Who Dared," it was definitely indicated by audience reaction.

The story is a miror reflecting the intrigues of a powerful dope ring so extensive and cunning in its operations that even the U. S. Secret Service becomes baffled in its first futile, but at the end, successful, drive to break up the organization. At no time does the story attempt to exaggerate the methods employed in the dope traffic to attain the usual melodramatic punch, but instead it qualifies every move with fundamental logic that convinces the audience such a condition exists in this country. By virtue of this, the picture sustains interest from beginning to end with a flawless interpretation delivered by a cast of players selected to fit each particular part rather than seeking box office names and making the parts fit them, comment stressed.

Jack Holt is billed as the star, but does not dominate the picture as other stars would, yet was thought very effective when called to perform. This gives the supporting cast a chance to declare themselves in a measure equivalent to the star, which, after all, is for the best, and largely responsible for whatever success this picture might achieve.

If one is looking for thrills, mystery, suspense and shocking moments they will not be disappointed in this offering.

Trapped in a Submarine

(B. I. P. Productions, America)

Thrills in a Sunken Sub

Fate had a hand in the release of this pictorial record of a sinking British submarine. It was previewed in New York almost simultaneously with the receipt of cable advices from England in which mention was made of an actual disaster along similar lines to the M-2, which went down with 60 men aboard off the English coast and of which no trace has as yet been found. The picture was reviewed under the title "Men Like These!" in the December 5 issue, W. H. Mooring having seen the production in London. Since then the picture has been revised.

Word of the M-2 disaster was flashed 'round the world and stories of rescue attempts and of life-saving apparatus with which those in the doomed ship had been equipped served to intensify the interest contained in B. I. P.'s newest motion picture.

While maneuvering along the British coast, a sub is rammed by a merchant vessel and, though vigorous attempts are made to "abandon ship," part of the crew is trapped in the torpedo room as the boat sinks to the bottom, where most of the action takes place. Many of the sequences are surprisingly natural, due, it is pointed out, to the cooperation of the British government, which loaned equipment and part of its fleet for filming. Included in the equipment is the new oxygen "lung," which permits of escape after the sunken boat settles and when outside compression equals that within.

The picture speeds along at a rapid pace, having been trimmed in less than five reels, although the British version was made in eight, the latter differing greatly from the new record, according to company officials.

Produced and distributed by B. I. P. America. Directed by Walter Summers. Constructors, John F. Meed, James A. Marchant, Leslie Norman. Editor, Walter Mycroft. Cameramen, Jack Parker, Horace Wheddon. Recording engineer, Alex Murray. Release date, January 15, 1932. Running time, 45 minutes.

Zwei Menschen

(Capitol Film)

Drama

Thrown against a superb background of the natural scenic beauty of the Tyrolean Alps, which the camera has recorded with remarkable fidelity, Erich Waschneck, director, has adapted the widely sold continental novel of Richard Voss, with an obvious appreciation of the significance of his story, making the most, without melodrama, of the pressing drama which underlies the narrative.

Most ably, it was heartily agreed, was he aided in his intention to make the most dramatically, of his theme, by two young German players, Gustav Froelich and the notable and attractive Charlotte Susa, who has done other noteworthy things on the German screen.

The film, already in its sixth week at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York, one of the intimate cinemas, was produced by Cicero Film Company, and is distributed in this country by Capitol Film Exchange.

The two leading players offer roles of unusual excellence, it was thought, as the young son of aristocratic parents who decide he is to go into the ministry, though it is utterly foreign to his free, happy, and romantic nature, and the young neighbor whose incipient love is brought to a climax when they are caught in an unexpected flood and manage to survive. Incidentally, the audience was gripped by the flood scenes, and their photographic excellence.

His mother had taken a deep religious vow, during the time that he was thought lost, that he would enter the church if he should return alive. When he refuses, she climbs to a mountain chapel, is caught in a blizzard and her son finds her dead there. He goes to Rome to seek guidance from the cardinal, who urges him to obey his mother's vow. Sent to do penance at a cloister near his home, he is ordered to officiate at a village marriage, sponsored by Miss Susa.

In a highly dramatic and tense scene following the wedding, the two are seen struggling with their feelings. She sends him away, seeing that it is now too late. He returns next morning, only to find her body lying in the room where he had left her. She had climbed the mountain and committed suicide. On that tragic note the film ends.

Produced by Cicero Film Company. Distributed in the United States by Capitol Film Exchange. Directed by Erich Waschneck. From the novel of Richard Voss. Adaptation by Shirokauer and Zirlett. Photographed by Mutz Greenbaum, Richard Angst, G. Vitrotti. Musical direction by M. Pflugmacher. Release date, December 22, 1931. Running time, 100 minutes.

Two Fisted Justice

(Monogram)

Western

The period of the Civil War varies the background of this independent western a bit, but otherwise it is cut more or less to the usual pattern of this type of production. Tom Tyler, in the lead, succeeds in running down the gang of stagecoach robbers. Young Bobbie Nelson handles himself in a surprisingly capable manner for a youngster. Barbara Weeks as the other half of the romance, with Tyler, has comparatively little to do but was thought to make a pleasing heroine. Kit Guard and Yakima Canut do the most able work in support, it was said.

Tyler gets special permission in his home town to organize a posse and take what steps he thinks advisable in tracking down the gang and eliminating lawlessness from the town. Returning to the village he picks up Bobbie, whose guardians had been killed by marauding Indians. The postmaster and his daughter adopt the boy and his dog. When the postmaster is threatened by the leader of the gang, he tries to quit the outfit, and a knife-thrower is sent to get him. Instead of accomplishing his objective, however, the knifer is himself killed in a fight. The postmaster confesses to the murder when the child refuses to talk, and is about to be hanged when Tyler and his men arrive on the scene just in time to save the situation.

Produced and distributed by Monogram Pictures. Written and directed by G. A. Durlam. Associate producer, Trem Carr. Sound, Balsley and Phillips. Release date, October 20, 1931. Running time, 63 minutes.

Strong Human Drama

(Seen in London)

This is a Julius Hagen production made at the Twickenham Studios which has maintained a fairly consistent output of several popular bookings. In this case Hagen has broken new ground in point of story for he has taken a somewhat heavy theme with a social problem angle and has treated it with fairly brutal frankness.

It is the story of a war baby (Margaret Vines) who has been brought up by a highly respectable family and when on the point of becoming engaged to one of that family's scions (Frederick Peisley) her illegitimacy is discovered and steps are taken to prevent her marriage. She is, in fact, sent back to her mother (Mary Newcomb) who by this time, embittered with the world, has become, more or less, a hardened prostitute. She is, for the time being, living under the protection of a bookmaker (Edmund Gwenn). She accepts the situation philosophically and her loyalty to her somewhat cynical mother wins her the support of an old friend of her family of adoption (Owen Nares) who goes to her home to assist her. On coming face to face with the girl's mother the fact is revealed to him that the girl is his war baby and in order to legitimize her he marries her depraved mother. The woman has enough fine feeling, however, to realize that no good can come of that marriage for her and she returns to her bookmaker's flat and in his absence kills herself.

This picture is likely to get general release throughout the RKO theatres in America because Radio Pictures here have arranged to distribute the film on this side and it is almost certainly good popular booking. There is a strong feminine angle in the mother sacrifice theme and the unpleasant subject associated with the woman is never carried to an extreme point.

The appeal of the picture will be strengthened in America by the stellar performance of Mary Newcomb, established American stage actress.

The Road to Life

(Amkino)

Drama

Overflow attendance was the rule throughout at least the first day of public showing of this Soviet picture. It was pointed out that the appearance in New York of production from the land of the Steppes is an immediate draw to the large Russian colony around Fourteenth street, but that did not account in entirety for the waiting lines at the Cameo theatre. Previews to the daily press the night before had brought out comment uniformly positive in the morning papers Thursday.

The picture, which runs almost two hours, is frankly propaganda. It treats of the reformation of street gamins by the Children's Commission of the Russian government. The juvenile delinquents are gathered in a citywide raid. Then what to do with them? Nikolai Sergeyev solves the problem by giving them work on their honor and under their own responsibility, and the boys finally build a railroad to Moscow, 50 miles distant. They also successfully plot the end of the reign of Zhigan, the adult gang leader for whom they had committed their petty thieveries.

The tempo is thoroughly Russian—a mixture of deliberately slow movement and hysterically fast gyrating. The dialogue is in Russian, but the silent titles in English maintain the continuity.

Leading characters are Nikolai Batalov as the understanding agent of the commission; Tzyvan Kyrla, as Mustapha, the leader of the boys, and Mikhail Djagafarov as the boy who succeeded him before he, too, decided he wanted to work.

Human Targets

(Big Four)

Western

"He-man" Buzz Barton does things in the grand western manner in this western, where he is the leading player. Unusual for this type of narrative on the screen, the romantic interest is very much subordinated to the exploits of Buzz in straightening out several things and saving the day for his sister's fiance and gathering the necessary funds to aid his ailing mother by securing the services of a specialist.

Barton assists his future brother-in-law to stake a claim discovered by the latter, who intends to aid his fiancee's mother with the money the mine should return. The gang leader plans to block the staking of the claim, with the idea of appropriating the valuable property for himself. In the course of his efforts in that direction, he succeeds in saddling Barton with the blame for a murder and robbery. A negro ranch hand ruins the alibi established by the gang chief after he is taken by the sheriff. The audience at Loew's New York, where the film recently was shown, enjoyed the manner in which the negro came to the aid of the hero at the right moment.

Present in the usual rather entertaining proportions are the background of western mountain scenery, always effective; and the shooting, hard riding and real scraps which often bring the youngsters up standing.

Duck Hunter's Paradise

(MGM)

Splendid

(Seen in Hollywood)

Harold Austin, who recently made "Fisherman's Paradise" and other adventure films, comes forth with a new sensational one-reel offering.

When seen at the Fairfax it brought enough thrills, laughs and cheers to leave no doubt that it is the type of picture the public will appreciate and remember for a long time.

It reveals what every ardent duck hunter dreams of but never sees. Thousands of ducks are seen flying over the rice fields of the Sacramento valley as Mr. and Mrs. Hunter and their Labrador retrieving dog take up their positions in the blind for the killing. The dog gets tired and hungry from chasing ducks and steals the hunter's lunch, which adds a great touch to the picture. Then as the party prepares to return home, a snake in the hunter's back yard decides to do a little hunting himself and is about to land a small chicken when the house cat comes in on the scene and puts up a fight. The cat is assisted by reinforcements in the form of a police dog which takes over the battle from there on and produces many hair-raising and exciting moments, giving the picture a sensational climax.

Magic Carpet Series

(Fox; produced by Fox Movietonews)

Interesting and Highly Instructional

An entire series of eight subjects, each running two reels, and representing the newest group of "Magic Carpet" releases, was previewed at the New York headquarters of Fox's newsreel division, of which Truman Talley is chief. Movietonews cameramen throughout the world gathered the material for these subjects, which included:

"Manhattan Medley," an impressionistic picture of metropolitan New York; "Over the Yukon Trail," in which the romantic trail of '98 is retraced; "Zanzibar" pictures the colorful aspects of that sleepy tropical port; "Fires of Vulcan," presenting daring ventures into dangerous volcanic locations (a portion of this, however, was resurrected from library sequences to serve as background). "With the Foreign Legion," shows "for the first time, the true Foreign Legion, photographed by special permission of France."

In "By-ways of France," the cameraman takes the audience amid the beauty of rural France, and likewise in "Alpine Echoes," where Switzerland's yodeling mountaineers and snow-capped tops are the subjects. "Big Game of the Sea," offers a thrilling whale capture and its attendant treatment at a Japanese whaling station. "Incredible India" concludes.

As a group, this series is commendable. Picturesque, for the most part, the subjects are often thrilling and almost always quite interesting. There are weak spots, but these are few and far between and are vastly outbalanced by the entertainment quality of the series as a whole.

Of particular interest is the unique camera study of New York, in which Fox's cameraman offers a most realistic picture of life in the metropolis, from dawn 'til dark.

The Circus Shows Up

(Universal)

Good

Another of the Shadow Detective series, and vastly improved by the fewer appearances of the shadow with his deep-voiced crime warnings. A circus is the setting and the mystery is a good one, with no indication of the real murderer until the conclusion. The complications are rather well worked out.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Studio Murder Mystery

(Vitaphone)

Good Mystery

One of the S. S. Van Dine mystery series of shorts in which an enacted murder on the studio set suddenly turns into the real thing. A jealous ex-husband, the perpetrator, seeks to fasten the guilt on a rival player. The complications are well handled and the manner of solution effective.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Old Man Rhythm

(Paramount)

Only Fair

George Dewey Washington leads a group of Negro singers who render a number of melodies in a setting representing the hold and deck of a river steamer. The rendition is in a measure effective, but the subject is rather too prolonged to be striking in any way.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Land of Gandhi

(RKO Pathe)

Possesses Interest

One of a series of travelogues, hardly new, but with a new narrator, Gayne Whitman, is this number of the Vagabond Adventures. India is the jumping off place in this instance, with most emphasis placed on the people, rather than the place. Of particular interest is the contrast between the modern methods of manufacture which have slowly found their way into the backward country, and the old-fashioned hand work.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Battling Bosko

(Vitaphone)

Good Cartoon

Bosko turns battler in this animated effort, set to music of the modern mode. Bosko's opponent is a pugilist of mountain-like proportions in comparison. Just as the small lad's sweetheart reaches the ringside, he is very surely counted out. This is number six of the series.—Running time, 7 minutes.

THE LAEMMLE-UNIVERSAL JUBILEE

by TERRY RAMSAYE

This is the season of the Carl Laemmle Jubilee, a vivid, living memorialization of one of the motion picture institution's most romantic traditions.

Here today and in terms of the vital concerns of now the world of the screen does honor to a quarter of a century of achievements by the only surviving member of the brave array of pioneers and founders who is today still achieving, attaining.

The Carl Laemmle is at once a tradition, a patriarch of the industry, rich in his yesterdays and an aggressive, vigorous force and factor in the international realm of the motion picture today. Great days have gone before for Laemmle, days of strife and triumph, days dark and bright, but none brighter and more triumphant than now.

It is a distinction indeed that has come to him, that his Universal, in the bitter season of 1931-32, in the trying era of sound assimilation, should deliver and present the most significant product of its eventful twenty-six years.

This is, certainly enough, a triumph indeed for Laemmle, but beyond that a triumph for the industry as well, an encouragement to a business sore beset, within and without, with its inherent problems of creative labor and merchandising multiplied a hundredfold by the economic woes of a world out-of-luck.

There is mayhap something about adversity which is good for this Laemmle. In his adventurous quarter of a century he has been defeated, thwarted, surrounded by insurmountable difficulties as many times as there have been cycles in the hectic history of the pictures. He never seemed to know it and so it was not so. Somewhat with the persistence of the much sung "Old Man River" he has just kept rolling along. He has expressed in terms of personal philosophy and in corporation administration a quality of patient persistence which is rarely to be found fused into the zestful quick burning stuff of showmanship.

Nothing is ever settled for this Laemmle. Just when it seems that he and his Universal have fallen into line with one of the endless "trends" of production, he abruptly emerges with spectacular departure—so often successful as measured by the values of showmanship as to make him clearly one of the major contributors to the development of the screen institution of today.

The story of Mr. Laemmle and of Universal from his adventure out of haberdashery in Oshkosh into amusement and the White Front motion picture theatre, an early nickelodeon, in Chicago's Halsted street is a classic of motion picture history. And adventure is someway just the word for it and the whole of the Laemmle career, for despite the involvement of much serious commercial business and many solemn concerns down the years, it has been invested with a quality of excitement, surprise, humor grim and humor gay, and glints of glamour, too. It has been written often and told often. It is one of those sagas of an American art and industry which will prove eternal in the amber of tradition.

The Program of this Year of Jubilee

The most ambitious program of Universal is announced by Carl Laemmle for 1932, marking his twenty-sixth anniversary and seeking perhaps to better the pace and standard which Carl Laemmle, Jr., established in production for 1931.

Announced by way of program betterments are substitutions for the earlier part of the year, including: "A Lady of Resource" by Arthur Somers Roche, replaced by Dale Collins' story, "The Adventure Lady"; "Bullet Proof" by W. R. Burnett, will be replaced, and so will "Gallows" by Roland Brown and "Barbary Coast." They have been replaced by the British-made picture, "Michael and Mary"; "Brown of Culver" and "Ambition" by Emil Gavreaux.

The Carl Laemmle Twenty-sixth Anniversary Jubilee starting in January runs through February. It was during these two months that most of the important milestones and triumphs have occurred in Carl Laemmle's life. In the first place, he was born on January 17*th. Last month he was sixty-five. It was on January* 1*st that he decided definitely to enter the moving picture business and gave up his situation as manager of the Continental Clothing Store in Oshkosh and came to Chicago. On February* 14*th, St. Valentine's Day,* 1884, Carl Laemmle landed in New York on the steamship Necker. But it is February 24*th*

SOME UNIVERSAL FILMS OF TODAY

Citing some notable productions created since the introduction of sound, representing the talking picture as it has evolved unto its present form and technique, with references to their distinction as contributions to both the art of the cinema and the ultimate arbiter of that art—the box office.

Lobby display for "The Spirit of Notre Dame" RKO Hippodrome, Cleveland

The Spirit of Notre Dame

An inspiration to American youth not only on the athletic field, but in the greater competitions of Life, is what Universal's "The Spirit of Notre Dame" proved to be, and while its entertainment value immediately made it one of the leading box office pictures, its distinction in large measure unquestionably lies in its realization of a spirit that is endeared to Americans as the spirit of their country. It is this same spirit that has made Knute Rockne so widely beloved, and "The Spirit of Notre Dame," dedicated to him, is also a tribute to a man canonized by an admiring nation.

Thus the exploitation possibilities are prodigious. Civic, social welfare and collegiate organizations extend instant sympathy to the efforts of showmen to promulgate the "teachings" in entertainment of this kind. The usual type of exploitation methods seem to be amplified also by the tremendous public interest in football, as well as by the social significance of the theme.

The Stanley theatre in Philadelphia, for example, launched a special drive for women patronage with a newspaper contest on "Why I Am a Football Fan." The same theatre also effected a tieup with a large department store in a fashion show, the stage for which was decorated with stills, lobby photos and special title streamers. The show itself displayed "what the well-dressed young woman will wear to football games."

The cast includes Lew Ayres, Frank Carideo (former Notre Dame football star), William Bakewell, Sally Eilers and the former Notre Dame "Four Horsemen."

The world premiere of "All Quiet on the Western Front" Central theatre, New York City

All Quiet on the Western Front

A CREATION like "All Quiet on the Western Front" cannot be thought of in terms of sheer entertainment, and it proved a milestone in the career of Universal. The book, by Erich Maria Remarque, from which the production was taken, had already caused a stir among the thinkers of many nations, and the film was acclaimed as worthy of the book. Indeed, the picturization inevitably vivified the horrific record of a German soldier in the World War far beyond the powers of even Remarque's realistic pen.

Official Germany itself, wincing as the narrative unreeled before them, only spread its message by banning the production from exhibition. This act alone served editorial writers as a trenchant theme—and made the exploitation man's task that much easier.

But they also had the picture itself to write about. They had fought through many columns for a new conception of war. Here the monster was pictured as he is and as every one, from illiterate to doctor of philosophy, could understand it.

Exploitation, therefore, need go little beyond making known to a community the zealous praise that the leading men and women of nations lavished upon this production. Names known throughout the nation are included in the list of those who bade every man, woman and child to behold war shorn of its parades, revealed only as stupidity, cruel and unremitting.

The cast is headed by one still beloved in the memory of theatregoers every where—Louis Wolheim. Others are Lewis Ayres, John Wray, Raymond Griffith, William Bakewell, Russell Gleason and Yola d'Avril.

Lobby treatment for "Frankenstein" Mayfair theatre, New York City

Frankenstein

MORBIDITY is not without its claim to high place among humanity's respectable emotional interests. "Frankenstein" merely takes advantage of this paradoxical delight in being horrified.

This "shock picture" is among Universal's current releases and comes, if the psychologists can be believed, at the familiar psychological moment. Say the savants, people like the tragic best at those times when their own spirits are depressed, and the economists tell us that even more than their spirits are at a low ebb. At any rate, "Frankenstein" has proved one of the biggest box office films in Universal history.

Because of its unusual nature—it is based on the venerable story that made the word Frankenstein a term in our language for an inadvertent creator of a horror—this production lends itself to novel exploitation treatment. The State-Lake theatre in Chicago, for instance, conducted an emotion test in a rather sensational manner. Four registered nurses were stationed in the lobby to aid "persons who might find the picture too nerve-racking." Other young women dressed as nurses gave out envelopes containing "nerve tonic" capsules at busy street corners.

A weird effect in screen-advertising the picture was contrived at the Midwest theatre in Oklahoma City. For 10 seconds before the trailer was projected, the house was completely darkened, and by means of a small disc record, moans and groans came from the speakers, while a ghastly green head and hands of the Monster were projected with the additional aid of mirrors to many parts of the auditorium. The trailer came on with the accompaniment of backstage gun-shots.

Crowd in front of Midwest theatre, Oklahoma City, waiting to see "Seed"

Seed

EVERY married couple knows intimately the problem around which the narrative of "Seed" revolves. For this searching picture, Universal went to the socially studious Charles G. Norris, who has assumed as his own the ambitions of his late brother, Frank, to interpret in literature the most significant currents of American life.

The problem, simply stated, is that of "How many children?" The novel was engrossed in that theme, raising the issue of contraception. The picture forces the husband to suffer less meekly, sending him to the arms of another woman.

Appreciating the social significance of the theme, the management of the Main Street theatre, an RKO house in Kansas City, Mo., conducted a preview to which were invited leading club women, ministers, officials of the parent-teachers' association and others of similar civic character—700 in all. This preview easily made good space in the newspapers.

The appeal to women in this production is an obvious one. But since her problem in this matter is likewise his—indeed, in a sense, the husband (as he does in the novel) may suffer most of all from this wife's point of view—there is a direct vital interest for a husband, and doubtless advertising and exploitation should not overlook the male portion of the patronage. To a lesser extent, there is appeal also to the smaller children, there being a number of them prominently in the picture.

The cast of "Seed" is headed by John Boles, Genevieve Tobin and Lois Wilson, supported by Raymond Hackett, Bette Davis and Zasu Pitts.

Humanity struggling upward: A drawing based on "The Mystery of Life"

The Mystery of Life

Timeliness and interest beyond sheer entertainment characterizes another of the more recent Universal productions of distinction. This is "The Mystery of Life," which presents in accordance with the fine aptitude of the cinema for such purposes, materials that modern science has brought forward to show both the physical nature of life and the possible origin of species. This is distinctly educational stuff, but treated in a quasi-dramatic manner, it is entertainment that has proved an effective appeal to the modern popular interest in the revelations of science about ourselves and the world we live in.

In addition—and again—this Universal production manages to take advantage of that interest-provoking device, controversy. The subject, in a word, is Evolution. A typical reaction in some quarters is represented in what happened at Atlanta. An ecclesiastical protest from another city was transmitted by the management of the Capitol theatre to all the leading Atlanta clergymen, and before the situation was closed, it had involved the mayor's office. The result was much discussion of the picture in both the public prints and social circles—and, as intended, the picture did a nice business. The possibilities for novel exploitation proceeding from this controversial nature of the film are obviously many.

The picture also permits the exploitation of a man of national fame, Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer who defended Evolution against William Jennings Bryan in the Dayton, Tenn., Swopes trial. Darrow appears prominently in the film as a sort of scientific master of ceremonies.

Produced as a full-length picture, "The Mystery of Life" doubtless represents a phase of cinematic entertainment possessing great potentialities, not only in sugar-coated education for the masses, but in the more practical matters, variety and prestige.

Broadway . . . with the Criterion ready for premiere of "Strictly Dishonorable"

Strictly Dishonorable

DEPARTING from problems and issues and resorting merely to typical aspects of contemporary American life, content to achieve lively entertainment, Universal translated the highly successful stage play, "Strictly Dishonorable," into a work of the cinema that—unexpectedly, perhaps—won critical praise commonly elicited by only pretentious "supers." Probably without any such intentions, this picture entered the group of Universal's notable productions.

Quite possibly its merit lay importantly in its following the often neglected principles of "the simple story well told." Yet this film has its variety of exploitation angles, too, some of them readily admitting of the sensational interpretation required in some theatre situations.

That always dramatic phenomenon of the current American scene, the speakeasy, plays a vigorous role. Yet the picture taken as a whole was accredited (to quote one New York newspaper critic) with "humor, charm, zest and intimacy."

The exploitation angles, indeed, are well indicated by the reviews. Said another New York critic, "it has the same spirit, the same gaiety and the same romantic appeal" as the stage play. "A new type of play," wrote another. One saw this picture as "light, sure, rapid in its movement," while further critical observation found it sophisticated, "with gay lines, spicy situations."

The title itself is "intriguing," and in the large cities, it has some fame.

The cast includes Paul Lukas, Lewis Stone, Sidney Fox and George Meeker.

Peasants: A sombre parade in the picturization of Tolstoy's "Resurrection"

Resurrection

ONE of the first distinctive productions in the medium of the talking motion picture was "Resurrection," and it has this special significance as one of Universal's outstanding contributions to the screen.

The story was created to be a classic. From the pen of Tolstoy, the story of Katusha Maslova, courtesan, and the Christ-like Dimitri, a prince, has remained eminently worth a retelling, and Universal sought to give it the advantages of a modern medium now made yet more resourceful.

The lasting fame of the book suggests at once the possibilities lying in the bookstore tieup, which was used in the exploitation for this production extensively. The ability of a motion picture taken from a classic or semi-classic novel to revive the sale of such works is well established, and bookstores, having rather limited means of promotion, are usually anxious to make the most of occasions on which films made from them are being shown locally.

From this same angle proceeds the suggestion of cooperative arrangements with libraries. Very often this can be carried so far as to permit the placing of stills from the production in prominent places within the library.

The location of the story in Old Russia, suggests devices revolving around contrasts between the old and the new. Both from this angle and that of the classic character of the book, the production also possesses strong educational values as a subject for exploitation.

The cast includes John Boles, Lupe Velez, William Reighley, Rose Tapley, Nance O'Neil, Michael Mark, Sylvia Nadina and Edward Cecil.

The volcano belches terror: An episode drawn from "East of Borneo"

East of Borneo

ADVENTURE exotic and fearsome was sought in the making of "East of Borneo," and this brought a photoplay that lived this kind of life to the hilt. "East of Borneo" is therefore to be included among the high points of Universal's career.

Even to the most adult of adults, Borneo is still the very strange, far-off land from which the "wild man" comes. That is a memory persisting from our earliest circus days in spite of any intellectual corrections we may impose upon it. And of course that represents the selling point that made the picture successful at the box office.

Some of the exploitation used went directly to this point. In Miami, the Capitol theatre had four negro boys in loin cloths and "wildman" makeup stand with spears and shields in the lobby.

Probably not at once suspected is an educational angle. The Rialto theatre in Washington, for example, stressed this in one phase of its exploitation. A letter was sent to the principal of each school, representing the picture as an authentic wild animal film partly produced in Borneo, showing the beasts in their native haunts, native life and a volcano in actual eruption.

Also addressing the schools, the management of the Lyric theatre in Indianapolis, enclosed a supply of tickets entitling the pupils to admission at a special price.

The story is of the melodramatic type employing all the resources of the jungle for thrills, the plot centering around the rescue of a beautiful girl from the clutches of a dastardly native prince.

The Program of This Year of The Jubilee

which Universal annually celebrates. This is the anniversary of the opening of the White Front Theatre in Chicago, Carl Laemmle's first moving picture enterprise.

The Jubilee productions on the feature schedule are releases of the first two months of the year: January releases "Strictly Dishonorable," by Preston Sturges, with Paul Lukas, Sidney Fox and Lewis Stone; "The Unexpected Father" by Dale Van Every, starring Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts, and "Michael and Mary," by A. A. Milne, with Edna Best and Herbert Marshall. There are three more Jubilee releases for February. The first is Walter Huston in "Law and Order" by W. R. Burnett. The cast includes Lois Wilson, Harry Carey, Ralph Ince and Raymond Hatton. The second production will be "Speed Crazy" with Slim Summerville, Louise Fazenda, Frank Albertson and June Clyde. The third is the third in the trilogy of terror films which Universal has sponsored. It is the famous story by Edgar Allan Poe, "Murders in the Rue Morgue." Its cast includes Bela Lugosi (Dracula), Sidney Fox, Leon Adams, Brandon Hurst and Bert Roach.

During the Jubilee, the short product devoted to the celebration includes: "Four "Oswald" Cartoons, two "Strange As It Seems" Reels, No. 17 and No. 18 in the series; one of the Sports Reel Series, a "Doc" Meanwell Basket Ball subject; two in the "Shadow Detective" series of two-reelers made from stories in the Detective Story Magazine, the first of which, released on January 20th, is entitled "The Red Shadow"; four two-reel comedies, as follows: Daphne Pollard in "Sold at Auction," and "Running Hollywood," the Thalian Comedy; also Slim Summerville in another of his Marine Comedies, "Sea Soldiers' Sweeties" and Lloyd Hamilton in "Robinson Crusoe and Son"; and also, the new British-made serial, "Detective Lloyd." This is the chapterplay made in England with Henry MacRae directing.

Though the order is not definite, the balance of the 1932 Universal productions include: Lew Ayres in "The Impatient Maiden" by Donald Henderson Clarke, with Mae Clarke, Una Merkel, John Halliday, Helen Jerome Eddy and Andy Devine, directed by James Whale; "Back Street" by Fannie Hurst, directed by John M. Stahl; "Marriage Interlude" by Luigi Pirandello, with Tala Birell, directed by William Wyler; "The Invisible Man" by H. G. Wells, with Boris Karloff; "The Adventure Lady" by Dale Collins; "The Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood" by Howard J. Green, with George Sidney and Charlie Murray, directed by John Francis Dillon, who has not been on a Universal lot since the well remembered days when he directed Priscilla Dean's starring pictures; "Destry Rides Again" by Max Brand, with Tom Mix, directed by Ben Stoloff. And at least two more, if Mix recovers as rapidly as now seems probable; "Brown of Culver" by George Green and Dale Van Every, with Tom Brown; "Ambition" by Emil Gavreaux, directed by Russell Mack, with Pat O'Brien; "Night Club," a Hobart Henley story by Allen Rivkin and P. J. Wolfson; "Steel Men" by John Huston, directed by Edward Cahn; and "Laughing Boy" by Frank La Farge.

"Frankenstein" Doing Well in Second Runs, Universal Says

Universal reports "Frankenstein" doing excellent business in subsequent run situations. The manager of the Ottumwa theatre, Ottumwa, Iowa, states that a midnight performance crowd broke the plate glass in front of the theatre in efforts to gain admission.

At the Iowa theatre, Cedar Rapids, the manager reported to the home office that approximately 3,500 people attempted to enter and that it was necessary to call out the fire department to check the crowd after the police failed.

Nina Wilcox Putnam Signed By Universal; 35 on Staff

Nina Wilcox Putnam, celebrated novelist, has been signed as a writer for Universal by Carl Laemmle, Jr., bringing the total of the studio scenario staff, under the direction of Richard Schayer, to 35. Martin Mooney, Patrick Kearney, Paul Perez, Elynore Dolkart, F. Hugh Herbert, Lieutenant-Commander Frank Weed have recently been added to the staff.

Final conferences on next season's production will be held at the studio next week, with sales and export department executives in conference.

McEvoy Named Universal Assistant Sales Manager

Edward McEvoy has been named assistant Eastern sales manager for Universal, handling short subjects under the supervision of Ted Schlanger, Eastern sales manager.

McEvoy will work in conjunction with Schlanger and Harry Milstein, head of the short subject sales department.

Tom Mix Starts Work

Tom Mix has already started production on "Destry Rides Again," first of the series of talking westerns he is making for Universal. Max Brand wrote the story, and Claudia Dell will play opposite Mix. Ben Stoloff is directing.

Release Babe Ruth Shorts Now

Universal will release its sports series featuring Babe Ruth, immediately. Titles are "Slide, Babe, Slide," "Just Pals," "Perfect Control," "Fancy Curves," "Over the Fence."

Academy Plans Schedule

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood is drafting a schedule of activities for the coming year to present to the first board of directors' meeting next month.

Canon Chase, Foe of Film Industry, Resigns Rectorate

Canon William Sheafe Chase, for more than 25 years rector of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, New York, and long a vigorous opponent of Sunday motion pictures, has resigned as rector. He plans to devote his entire time to the work of the International Reform Federation, of which he was for several years superintendent. Its headquarters are at Washington.

Canon Chase has been known as an enemy of most modern forms of entertainment, including motion pictures and stage plays, which he believed had fostered immorality. In 1908 his opposition to Sunday films resulted in his being found guilty of contempt of court by the supreme court of New York for a "false report" of proceedings in an injunction case.

He has also supported legislation to make the motion picture industry a public utility under federal regulation. At one time, while Mayor Walker was a state senator, Canon Chase accused him of being "the paid representative of the movie interests in the legislature."

Methodists Plan Film Production

A movement to provide exclusive talking motion pictures for educational and entertainment use in Protestant churches throughout the country has been instituted by leaders in the Methodist Church in the organization of the John Wesley Picture Foundation. It is proposed to inaugurate a campaign to raise $100,000 with which to launch the enterprise.

Although the foundation is thus far a Methodist organization, it is felt that other Protestant groups may join the movement. All income derived from the renting of films produced will be used in the production of other films. The first picture will depict the life of John Wesley, the scenario having been prepared by Dr. James K. Shields. Rev. Dr. George W. Henson, district superintendent of the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been elected to the board of trustees, and Dr. J. S. Ladd Thomas, pastor of the First Church of Germantown, will also serve on the board of the John Wesley Picture Foundation, incorporated in New Jersey on January 7.

The officers of the organization are: Rev. Dr. Chester C. Marshall, assistant director of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., president; Rev. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, vice-president; Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, second vice-president; Rev. Dr. George E. Vogel, treasurer; Rev. Dr. James K. Shields, secretary. An advisory board of 18 ministers has been chosen to pass on all pictures before they are released.

Milliken Sees the Public Dictating Picture Quality

"Audiences make pictures," Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America, told the State Pastors' Conference on Tuesday at Syracuse, during a meeting sponsored by the New York State Council of Churches. Raising the standard of taste among audiences is a necessary concomitant of all motion picture improvement, Milliken said.

"If you could have a law passed today requiring that every motion picture made should be in exact accordance with your particular standard of taste, you still would not have accomplished any real advancement of your ideas in the entertainment field; because you would have to have another law passed making people to go to see the pictures you think they should see," he explained.

"The sensible, practical and demonstratedly successful alternative to these two impossible courses is for you to use your great influence in the education of public taste to support the highest type of pictures."

Milliken noted three current films, as of exceptional merit in critical opinion. The three are: "Arrowsmith," United Artists; "The Man I Killed," Paramount; and "The Man Who Played God," Warners.

John B. Nathan Honored

John B. Nathan, of the Paramount foreign department, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given at Sardi's in New York on Wednesday, by his associates in celebration of his appointment as assistant to John L. Day, Jr., Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, general manager of the company's South American organization. Nathan sails on Saturday on the Southern Cross to take up his new duties.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts for the calendar week ended January 30 fell off rather definitely from the total recorded for the previous calendar week, ended January 23. The total for the present week, from 184 theatres in 30 key cities, reached $2,301,831, a drop of $165,289 from the previous week, when 182 theatres in 30 key cities showed a box office total of $2,467,120. Eight new individual high records were established for the present week, and six new individual low figures, which compares with three new "highs" and two new "lows" during the previous seven-day period.

WE ARE INVESTIGATED!

The executives of a national producing and distributing concern, aggressively interested in the efficient conduct of their business, have conducted an exhaustive field investigation of the exhibitor preferences among the business papers of the industry.

For a stipulated period each field representative of this inquiring company was required to learn from each exhibitor which publication or publications he read, and his preferences. The inquiry was conducted without the knowledge of Quigley Publications.

The dominance of leadership of service to the motion picture exhibitor by MOTION PICTURE HERALD reflected in the resultant figures is overwhelming, and far, far beyond any claim which MOTION PICTURE HERALD has ever publicly made.

The supremacy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, indicated in these pages by the official figures of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, the only officially audited circulation figures in the business press of the motion picture, is now reasserted directly in the field. The differences in what the advertising dollar buys, as evidenced by the exhibitors' judgment, as between publications is sensational—to those who haven't known it before.

COST PER UNIT OF ATTENTION

The exhibitor-preference figures established by this distributor's research, when applied to page rates show what advertising really costs per unit:

MOTION PICTURE HERALD	.237
MOTION PICTURE DAILY	.421
Paper No. 5	.654
Papers No. 3, regionals	.852
No. 11, vaudeville journal	$8.88

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

NEW MERCHANDISE TOMORROW!

WE should consider ourselves mighty fortunate that we are engaged in the business of selling entertainment for many reasons. Chiefly, the fact that no two days are ever alike.

With each change of program we really find that we have cleaned out stock and taken in an entirely new line. Each new picture presents new ideas in merchandising. New displays. New advertising copy. New exploitation. How on earth can anyone so engaged find life or his job monotonous? He can't if his heart and soul is in the business.

Stacking up jobs side by side with someone engaged in a commercial line and we start wondering how on earth the commercial man can stand the same everlasting thing day in and day out. Nothing new for months on end. True he may be as fascinated with his work as you are by yours, but for something to keep you busy and constantly interested you must go a long ways to equal show business.

Oscar Doob said, "You're in a new business every time you change your show." And that expression has already started to go the rounds of the industry. It has been accepted as the keynote for many circuits on their pep letters to the house manager. It is being used by advertisers because it conveys one of the real big truths of our business.

After the final fadeout of your current show you clean out your entire stock and on the morrow you are opened again with a brand new line of merchandise on your shelves. You start selling that merchandise a week or two before it arrives. But you are not selling it in the same sense of the word as a grocer or butcher. You are first selling an idea, a wish to see something that you will soon have to offer. That's how you create interest.

Then, the day before you actually unpack your new merchandise you fire your big guns in an advertisement designed to make them stop, look and buy a ticket.

No matter whether you change your show every other day or every week. The same fascination is there. No matter how poor your current show may be you can always work up enthusiasm by looking over your advance bookings and estimating how much you ought to do with this or that picture. Doping out the best way to advertise it, possibly planting the seed for some novel exploitation that will make the natives more anxious than ever to see that particular picture.

That's show business. A new show. New stock. New ideas. New ads. New everything and always a chance to better your last week's business. No time to speculate on past performances of weak pictures but always looking ahead hopefully at the possibilities of the next attraction.

A fascinating business indeed and one that has no equal in any commercial line. A business that holds your interest and keeps you keyed up constantly because you can accomplish so much, if you but have the desire and enthusiasm. And why not? You're not like the poor guy who runs that notion or novelty store. You don't have to sit back of a counter looking for days, weeks, months and years as those same needles, thread, buttons and what have you.

We can well understand why so many stores become stagnant. Their owners and employees lose the incentive of tackling something new and different as time goes on. They fall into a rut and do a routine business. True, some of those stores can make a mighty fine living out of that "routine" business, but just imagine if they had our opportunities, our chance to go out and sell something new and totally different every week or so. They, too, would then be so enthused over their jobs that they would be burning up the town with the glad tidings that "McGinty's Notion Shop Will Feature Norma Shearer In a Brand New Blah Blah Blah."

They can't. But you can.

If you lack the pep to feel just that way it's because you've started to lose interest in the most interesting job on earth. If among your coming attractions there is not one single picture that gets you all hot to break records and stimulate business, then you're growing old.

Getting tired of your job? Feeling dull and listless? No ambition? Ideas just won't materialize? Mister, you're growing stale. Sit yourself down in the corner and look over your last few issues of the Herald. Find out what the producers are about to release. Begin to visualize the box office possibilities of those pictures.

You'll snap out of it quickly. Your mind will start functioning like it did before. There's plenty of business to be had and every good reason to go out and get it. Just remember; when your present show closes you get a brand new stock to sell to your customers. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Yes, sir! Better make sure that even the toothpicks are included or they'll loosen their wrath upon your head. You know, in these days of give-aways the patron insists on full baskets and full value—or else—!

RIVALRY OF BLONDE OVER BRUNETTE WAS STAGED BY SIMONIS

A controversy as to whether gentlemen preferred blondes or brunettes and how the town felt about it formed the basis of a campaign made on "Platinum Blonde" by E. M. Simonis, manager of the American Theatre, Pittston, Pa.

Twelve leading merchants, preferably those dealing in merchandise of feminine appeal, and the leading newspaper were tied in on the deal. Each merchant sponsored a blonde or a brunette and was required to pay an entry fee of $10, to be used in various ways for putting over the stunt.

Motion pictures were made of each contestant and exhibited ten days in advance of the date set for their personal stage appearance. Trailers were made for each girl exhibited on the screen, introducing them by name and also mentioning the merchant's name who sponsored her.

A photographer was contacted and Simonis promoted the making of three photographs for each girl entering the contest. The photographs were disposed of as follows: 1—an 8x10 was mounted in a handsome folder used to display week in advance in the window of the merchant who was sponsoring that particular entrant together with star still of Jean Harlow and card with suitable copy pertaining to picture and contest; 2—a 6x8 was mounted on a 3-sheet art poster and displayed in lobby week in advance which attracted considerable attention; 3—2½x3½ of each girl was sent to engraving plant to make midget cuts to be supplied to the newspaper office in connection with their publicity.

A large beauty parlor was contacted and got out, paid for and distributed 5000 cards carrying copy about the contest, picture, theatre and playdates. Girls furnished by the beauty shop distributed the cards on the streets.

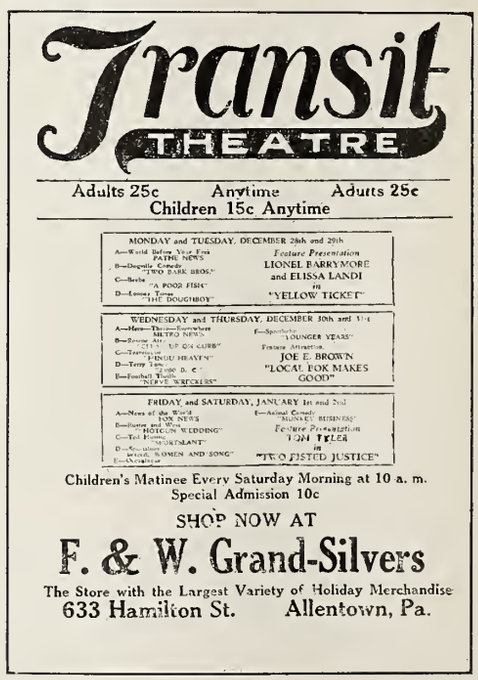
Three silver trophies which represented the prizes to be awarded the winners on the stage were exhibited several days in advance in the lobby in conjunction with the art poster.

The beauty parlor during the run of the picture had a special counter in the foyer of the theatre with three or four girls in attendance—distributing free samples of cosmetics such as shampoo, lip stick, souvenir matches and face powders.

All contestants were given free hair treatments by the beauty parlor prior to occasions of being photographed and their personal appearances on the stage.

And so Pittston, with the aid of Harry Simonis, decided the old controversy of blonde versus brunette. Who won? Who cares! The stunt got the picture off to a corking start and assured word o'mouth comment for the balance of the run. The merchants received their ten dollars worth many times over in advertising value and everybody was happy. Okay, Harry, and let's hear more about your work.

Luckless Early Birds



Early birds who have been patronizing 25c shows at the Fox-Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, Wash., will now have to pay 35c up to 1 P. M. or stay outside as the result of a recent change of policy. Due to hogging of the first evening show by matinee patrons, who have kept the good old 60-centers from obtaining seats, it was decided that the regular matinee rate would prevail until 6 P. M.

FELT SECURED WIDE CIRCULATION USING AD ON A PAPER BAG

Just a little old paper bag is being used to excellent results as a means of advertising pictures by Michael Felt, manager of the Transit Theatre, Allentown, Pa. Not that paper bags haven't been used before to carry a theatre's message to a portion of the public, but this particular bag appears a bit different than the average run of advertising bags, therefore we're offering Club members a reproduction of same.

Most bags we've seen have carried some plug for a theatre or featured a give-away, etc.—all good ideas, of course. However, you will note that this one features the complete program for the week and that theatre copy practically dominates the entire front. The merchant is credited at the bottom.

Naturally the theatre usually stands the cost of such a tie-up and we take it for granted that this case was no exception. But bags are cheap and it can be assumed that printing is the largest item of expense for a gag of this kind. Considering point of distribution and that the message is delivered to a shopper in the downtown business section, it logically follows that the theatre program is being placed before a prospective patron at a time when he or she is near the theatre district. That the bag will be carried home may also be a sane conclusion. Now that we've passed along Felt's idea to his fellow Round Tablers, we'll be awaiting another show gag from Allentown.

Change of Policy

Warner's Hollywood Theatre, New York City, is slated to open Feb. 15 with a stage revue policy. Benny Holzman and Nat Dorfman, well known in Broadway amusement circles, are handling publicity and advertising.

Gary Promoted

Robert C. McGary has been appointed general publicity and advertising director for the Omaha division of RKO. He recently managed the Paramount Theatre in Omaha. The appointment was made by Morgan Ames, G. M. of the Omaha Division.

KRESS STAGED NOVEL SHOW TO HELP TRADE ON NEW YEAR'S EVE

A well filled house greeted the New Year's show held in conjunction with a showing of "Cheat" by Milton Kress, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Meridian, Miss.

The prologue of the show consisted of Old Father Time with scythe being chased across the stage behind scrim by a three-year-old girl dressed up as a kewpie doll. This same youngster later did a tap dance.

Fifteen seconds before midnight the youngster finished her tap dance and the New Year's trailer came on. Then the Saenger beauty chorus did a routine and at conclusion of this five little girls rushed out on the stage and helped members of the chorus throw bombardment balls and streamers at the audience; at the same time a gross of balloons were released from the ceiling. Advertising of the show included 500 mimeographed throw-aways, a midget ballyhoo on the streets; extra readers and scene cuts in Sunday's and Wednesday's paper; free radio advertising, and plug by trailers.

Prior to the New Year's show Kress pulled a good-will stunt by staging a children's benefit performance the first Saturday in December, admittance being gained by new or used toys. The kids' performance was sponsored by a local women's organization and the toys were turned over to the fire department for repair and later given to the poor children of the city on Xmas day. A trunk load of toys resulted from the affair. Newspapers helped by carrying front-page stories six days in advance.

Both of the above are good to file away for a future occasion and we're glad to know that Kress is keeping up to his usual energetic pace.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Because show-business was interesting and fascinating, H. B. Tollett entered the game at the age of 16 years at Madison, Wis., where he went through the various routine jobs to gain experience necessary to fit him for a future executive post.

H. B. Tollett

That was eight years ago and, after spending three years in Madison he went to Fond du Lac where he continued to follow theatre work for a period of four years. Following this connection, he went to Burlington, Wis., where he served as a manager for two years. Owing to the exigencies of all business these days, this writing finds him holding down the job of assistant to Jack Rosenfield, at the Fox-Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee.

During his experiences in this business he has been connected with Fischer Theatres, Fox-Midwesco and Community Theatres, and his work has embraced both managerial and sign artist work. If he had to start all over again he states that he would again choose show-business for a career, so we gather he'll be around theatres for a long time to come.

SIDLINGER OBTAINS GOOD RESULTS WITH NOVEL STYLE HERALD

A line on recent activities of Al Sidlinger, manager of the Holme Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., discloses that he has been indulging in one of his favorite pastimes—that of issuing novelty heralds whenever the occasion warrants—and doing other things to keep his name and theatre before the public eye.

He is a firm believer in the herald as an advertising medium when proper distribution can be effected. However, he does not think that any sameness in style should be used and therefore attempts to give each one a novel twist. He takes local happenings and ties the idea in with his copy, such as a recent announcement in his city concerning a raise in taxes. In this case, the front cover of a four-page herald read in large bold face type: "Taxes may be Raised 35c per $100." Note that the "may be" was in small type, so at a first glance the thought was that the advance had taken effect. Other specimens which we've had occasion to look over are all different in design and generally feature some catch lines on the front cover or some trick gag that will make it possible for the reader to possess a guest ticket.

Following his usual custom during the Xmas season, Sidlinger played host to some 2,000 children in communities tapped by the Holme. He gave them a free show in return for some article of food for the needy and the stunt produced fine results. The local newspaper played up the affair in a big way.

One other thing we want to call attention to while we're on the subject of this enterprising Round Tabler is his auto bally, a photo of which appears on this page. He built this sound truck himself and it's often pressed into service by other Warner houses in Philly. That Sidlinger got a big kick out of constructing this bally we have no doubt, for sound is one of his hobbies.

That's about all we have to tell you about this member at this particular writing and so we'll close until we get further information concerning his methods of selling shows. However, he's always doing something interesting so we trust it will not be long before another opportunity will arise to pass along some of his show dope.

Cole's New Post

Edward Cole has succeeded Jack Bender as manager of the Lorain Theatre at Cleveland, Ohio. Cole was formerly connected with Associated Theatres.

EASTER ACTIVITIES SOON!

Although we have many other things to work on for the month of February including: Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Valentine's Day, Lent, Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration, Leap Year, etc., we must not overlook Easter.

Holy Week, this year, runs from March 20th to 27th. Earlier than usual, therefore, while working on your more current items keep Easter in mind. The Club pages will feature special material for Easter Egg Hunts, Bunny Matinees and other timely ideas. Look them over and use as many as practical for your house.

GEORGE MILLER BUSY SELLING SHOWS FOR SMALLEY IN HAMILTON

The last report we had concerning whereabouts of George A. Miller he was located along the shore of a big lake up at Cooperstown, N. Y., the stronghold of Smalley's Theatres, but we are now informed that he is holding forth as manager of the Smalley Theatre in Hamilton, N. Y., seat of Colgate University and home of loyal Republicans.

He has been quite busy, according to what we hear. From the Grand Mouse's lair in Hollywood permission was secured to start a Mickey Mouse Club and at this writing the organization is well under way, to the intense satisfaction of the young Hamiltonians. Prior to starting the Mickey Mouse gang, a Harmonica contest was staged and all members making good in that became qualified to join the Mouse Band. At the inauguration of the Club all duly elected members were given prizes.

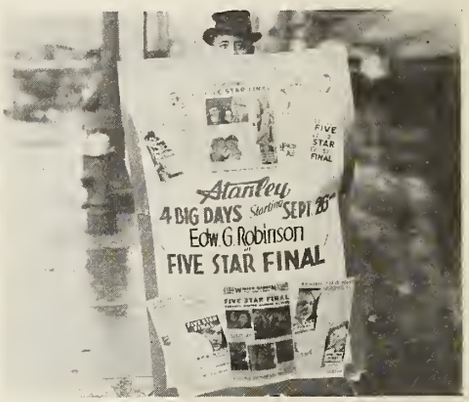
In line with activities to bring kiddies to the theatre, Miller has a gag that he works in communities outside or adjacent to Hamilton. The move is sponsored by the newspapers in these towns, which exercises a drag with boards of education to bring out theatre patronage at special rates. Most Round Tablers will get the idea. The paper makes it possible for the pupils to see a bona fide show at the extremely low rate of 10 cents per pupil. This has worked out unusually well and can be used most anywhere. Support of the paper practically assures success.

Hamilton does not boast a newspaper, the nearest one being a weekly publication in an adjacent town. So what does he do for ads? He puts what has every appearance of being an ad on a hand bill—all dressed up with regular mats, snappy copy, etc., which ought to be a very good gag for any manager similarly situated.

Other effort made by Miller since moving to Hamilton included the holding of a couple of novel contests. One was a poster design affair, run in conjunction with "Manhattan Parade" and the other a "Colgate Beard Growing" gag offered in advance of "Unexpected Father." A silver cup was given for the best design but we are at loss to inform Club members concerning the beard-growing gag. Apparently it had a lot to do with Colgate, for it was billed that way.

Now that we've unearthed Miller again, it is to be hoped that he'll keep in touch more regularly with his fellow showmen. When you see your boss, Bill Smalley, George, please give him our very best regards. It's been a long time since we met, but it's easy to recall a pleasant hour or so spent in Cooperstown several years ago. That also goes for that able assistant of his, Miss Smith, if she is still with the organization. In the meantime, keep the ball rolling and don't forget your Club's address.

HART PULLED PHOTO GAG ON FIVE LOCAL BOYS WHO MADE GOOD



A photographing gag sponsored by a leading newspaper proved a highlight of the campaign made on "Local Boy Makes Good" by Ed Hart, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y.

Five local "boys" of a rather mature age, who were born in Utica and really had made good, were photographed from a rear view and photos published in the newspaper along with a brief description of their activities and hobbies. These were run for three days and on the fourth front views of the same five were published, along with the names of 50 who participated in promoted gifts and guest tickets for identifying the men.

Wide spread discussion was created by this stunt, as evidenced by the number of people who endeavored to identify the local men. The men chosen were well known, well liked and notably successful merchants and executives. The only expense attached to the stunt was for the printing of the back views of the men, which had to be placed in single column. The final pictures made an extremely good flash arranged one under another which, along with reader, occupied a space two columns wide and half the page in length. The group was headed, "They Now Face Camera."

Clown Also Helped!

Other efforts included a street bally of a clown who carried a rolled up concealed sign through business and shopping districts, which could be unfurled quickly by use of a string attachment. The clown also carried a set of individual letters spelling out title which he would cleverly manipulate in puzzling formation at various points along his route. Additional advertising included numerous window tie-ups and placards on trucks in and out of city.

Other stunts used on recently played pictures included a bally of two boys dressed in football togs for "Touchdown"; invitations to football teams to be guests of theatre; distribution of heralds by "Liberty" boys, and regular run of advertising routine.

On "Suicide Fleet" telegrams were sent to 200 citizens, selected from a class most likely to be interested, and all Army and Navy recruiting stands were covered with copy advertising the picture. A temporary stand was also arranged near the theatre. Right at the time it happened that some special publicity was being given a sailor who was travelling around the world on roller skates. The theatre cashed in by dressing him up in a reefer coat and sending him out to games and elsewhere on Thanksgiving Day.

It's plain to see that Hart is still batting the ball at a lively pace up in his town and just as soon as we can catch up with some of this mass of other correspondence, we'll tell you more about his show-selling activities. In the meantime, we wish him the compliments of the season.

A DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES FROM THE SCHINE OHIO THEATRES!

The following appeared in one of the Schine Ohio theatre programs and seemed to have made a hit with the local folk and newspapers. It represents excellent institutional copy and can be utilized for similar purposes by other theatres wanting to impress these thoughts locally.

To give to our public the last dollar in value, reserving for ourselves only a fair and just profit.

To show nothing upon our screens that we would be ashamed to have our wives, daughters, sisters and mothers see.

To lend the power of our screens to the upbuilding of Piqua, Miami County and Ohio and all worthy institutions therein.

To fearlessly and vigorously eliminate from our programs all that does not conform to the highest standards of morality.

To acknowledge and perform our duty as citizens and to zealously guard the position we have attained as the arbiters of Piqua's pleasure.

To keep our theatre clean, cozy and comfortable and to serve our patrons above ourselves.

To accept no profit that is obtained at the expense of our principles as men or that requires a slackening in our sense of right.

To deliver, at all time, the finest entertainment attainable at the lowest prices commensurate with a just profit.

Our business is to be built upon a solid rock of confidence.

YOU MUST BE SATISFIED AT OUR THEATRE OR WE DO NOT WANT YOUR MONEY.

The Management.

CANNON BALLS FOR ELEPHANTS, BUT GRAPESHOT FOR SPARROWS!

Vic Gauntlett has been identified for many years with the show-selling of various theatres and circuits around Seattle, Portland, etc., and probably knows how to reach the movie-going public as good or better than any other man in the same position. Read what he has to say in the fifth of the series on: "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary?"

We also offer the views of Bolivar Hyde, Jr., a showman and manager of long experience in the South. You get the house manager's viewpoint on this question. "CHICK"

By VIC GAUNTLETT
Fox Theatres, Seattle

DURING the long duration of depression throughout the nation, there has never been a more important subject come up for discussion, not only in the show business, but in every branch of industry throughout the country, than advertising.

Due to the fact that theatres have levelled more strongly on consistent advertising and exploitation than any other form of industry, naturally this factor has been one of the predominating outlays of money, and naturally would be the one that would first come in for criticism in the slashing of budgets.

I have repeatedly heard, for many, many years in the show business, the one question arise, that a certain picture is so big that it doesn't need any advertising to break records. The statement has come from very successful showmen—by showmen whose success has been made on advertising, and through their own showmanship ability of being able to secure the best of entertainment for their patrons.

IF IT were possible, which it is not,—but granting that it were possible for a theatre to secure every big outstanding hit of the screen, with every big, outstanding star of the screen, to play week in and week out in their theatre,—still I doubt that it would be successful without advertising.

Too many showmen live too much in the show world, and not in the general world. The average showman or motion picture operator throughout the country, sits and previews a picture. He sees the picture from the beginning to the end, not from the middle to the end, and then after a lapse of comedies, shorts, stage shows, orchestra concerts, and what-not, goes back to the beginning of the picture to finish the story. I wonder how many showmen of the present day would be so sold on pictures if they saw them like seventy-five per cent of their audience sees them—from the middle to the end, and then after their minds have been distracted by other subjects, go back to pick up the thread of the story at the start.

GETTING back to the showman again, who sees the picture from the beginning to end. He is so thoroughly sold upon the greatness of the picture that he figures this picture doesn't need any advertising. Truly, a silly statement for any showman to make.

He wouldn't have gone to see the picture in the first place, if it hadn't been through advertising. He had been informed about the greatness of the picture in trade magazines or maybe through telegrams from the officials at the studio. That's advertising. Any form of printed word, or verbal word, is advertising. If he is relying on just the word-of-mouth advertising of the patrons of his theatre, I am afraid that the wait will be too long before he gets results.

The big curse in the show business at the present day, is not in big advertising, but lies in the fact that many showmen endeavor to sell through big advertising,—attractions that they in their own hearts know, are not as big as the adjectives and the space that they are using to try and sell them with.

If they are following these sort of tactics, they are killing the confidence of the public in their advertising, so that when they do have a big picture—that is a big picture—the public is skeptical.

IN the old days of the show business ballyhoo was the big word. The word "ballyhoo" covered everything that was big in exploitation and advertising. However, the public nowadays is getting wiser on shows. They have their certain favorite star; they read more the criticisms on attractions in national Photoplay magazines; they more or less form their opinion of a picture weeks before it arrives in their town. But unless the showman capitalizes and informs them that this picture is in town, how are they to know?

In conclusion, I want to reiterate again, that the bigger you shout in advertising and exploitation about a good picture—that you know is a good picture,—the bigger will be your returns at the box-office. And the bigger you shout about a picture that you are just trying to put over from a sensational angle, and you know is not quite up to the standard of big entertainment—just that much quicker are you tearing down patronage and the lack of confidence in your salesmanship to the public.

SHOWMEN, ever since the show business was invented, have advertised. They have educated the public upon this one thing. The public expect it. Then if the showman is successful, he has got to give the public what it wants.

Use the big words on the big pictures; use the big space on the big pictures. In other words, shoot cannon-balls at elephants—but grapeshot at sparrows!

THE MANAGER'S VIEWPOINT!

By BOLIVAR HYDE, JR.
Sparks Theatres, Lakeland, Fla.

DURING the past few years exhibitors, in an effort to explain away a tremendous reduction in box office recepits and, in many cases, a subsequent dive into the red of profit and loss reports, have made repeated attacks on producers, charging that the field is being flooded with an inexcusable abundance of poor or worthless product. Some have gone so far as to say that, if producers turn out nothing but good box office pictures, the type which exhibitors vaguely classify as "hits," there would be no need for any considerable expenditure for exploitation and advertising purposes. This attitude on the part of many showmen throughout the country brings us again face to face with the old question: "Can a theatre exist without any form of advertising or exploitation, if it runs all hits?"

If this question must be answered unqualifiedly and without explanation, we should have to answer in the affirmative. It is our opinion that any theatre could exist by running only hit pictures. However, what showman can be satisfied with merely squeezing out an existance for his theatre? The difference between the box-office results of an unexploited hit picture and one around which a judiciously planned scheme of advertising has been worked out is the difference between a theatre which shows a considerable profit and one which merely "gets by." In other words, even though a hit picture may show a profit, regardless of advertising effort on the part of the exhibitor, a few extra dollars spent in carefully thought out advertising will inevitably bring in the large return that is necessary for the really successful theatre.

It is quite possible that showmen have turned against advertising hit pictures because their campaigns have not been of the right sort and consequently the results were disappointing. In the case of a picture of this type, the motif of the campaign does not concern itself primarily with selling the merits of the particular picture; the real object of the campaign is to make prospective patrons thoroughly and unmistakably aware of the fact that you have this picture at your theatre and then create in their minds the subconscious desire to see a picture which they already know to be good. A dollar spent toward convincing patrons that a picture, which they already know to be of a superior quality, is a good picture, is obviously a dollar wasted. To say, however, that exploitation and advertising is unnecessary or unprofitable, even in the case of the best pictures is to deny the worth of advertising when applied to any good product in any field of merchandising. We might go so far as to advance the opinion that the better the picture the more yield one gets per dollar of advertising expense.

Many exhibitors have not stopped to think that in the final analysis, advertising is really one of the primary reasons for any picture becoming known as a "hit." For instance, the producer releases a picture which is "par excellence"; a group of able showmen get hold of this picture and by means of their advertising ability bring enough people into contact with it to start a flow of mouth to mouth commendation; the result is a hit!

MAYOR AND THE NAVY HELPED PAULSON PUT OVER FILM IN ALASKA

The Mayor of Juneau, Alaska, has the distinction of being the first man in that city to own an all-steel dirigible airship, all of which was brought about by Eric Paulson, manager of the Capitol Theatre. 'Course the Mayor may not be able to take a joy hop, 'cause the ship is a miniature model of the Akron, which was loaned for the making of the picture "Dirigible," but there's a receptacle for cigarettes and that's something.

A Coast Guard packet happened to be laying off Juneau while the above picture was being shown and many members of the crew were granted liberty to attend the theatre en masse as guests of the management. One of the accompanying photos shows the front of the theatres decorted for the occasion and the staff, including Paulson, rigged out in nautical costumes.

The other photo was taken in front of the theatre on the occasion of a gathering of the Mickey Mouse Club, claimed to be the only one of its kind in Alaska. It's a real going concern, this Club, and the kids are all raving about it. Last Xmas the members all cooperated in the holding of a big charity show, collected a lot of groceries and turned them over to the Elks for distribution to the needy.

Paulson is a veteran showman in motion picture exhibition, having served in Sweden before coming to this country. In those days the features ran about 500 feet in length and he often had to go over to Denmark and Germany to obtain his shows. He has been all over the world and has seen many amusing phases of picture exhibition. We'll tell you more about this in a future issue.

LEGION AND COLLEGE HELPED FARQUHARSON SELL WAR-TIME FILM

Legion post and college cooperated with Don Farquharson, manager of the Kennedy Theatre, Kirksville, Mo., when he played the revamped version of "Big Parade," now making the rounds as a sound picture.

On the opening night a band of forty pieces from a local college and another band from the high school led a crowd of small boys carrying "Big Parade" banners as well as fifty legioneers and a National Guard unit. Several other small boys carried red flares on the outskirts of the parade.

Special day letters were sent to all presidents of fraternities and sororities at the State Teachers' College and local Osteopathy College, asking that the letter be posted on bulletin boards. Letters were also sent to school boards and 1,000 heralds were distributed to business houses and schools.

This is the first time we recall getting a line on the activities of Farquharson and now that the ice has been broken we hope that he'll become a regular contributor to this department. It's a sure thing that he knows how to go out and tie up with local institutions and we would welcome an opportunity to pass along more of his ideas on how to sell shows.

RICE PROMOTED NEW AUTO AND IT WAS A STRONG ATTRACTION

Aided and abetted by H. W. Rice, maneger of the Paramount Theatre, Monroe, La., Santa Claus visited this Club member's theatre on Xmas Eve with a brand new popular priced auto under his arm for some deserving patron.

When advertising this give-away Rice had extra billing around town and in adjacent communities; several hundred tack cards in town and vicinity over a period of six weeks; 300 one-sheets; underline in every ad for six weeks; trailer on screen for six weeks, and an underline in 30,000 heralds put out over the same period. Attention was also called to the requirement of having an admission ticket on gift night.

On the give-away night, in anticipation of a record crowd that did jam the theatre to capacity, a public address system was rigged with loud speakers on the marquee to take care of turn-aways and to broadcast advance information regarding how the affair was to be handled.

Autos are certainly worthwhile give-aways, as has been found out by other showmen who have handled affairs such as the above. According to information we have at hand this one was promoted absolutely gratis by Rice and that's what counts in one of these deals. More power to this able showman for his ability to promote de luxe articles.

Club Index for Month of January

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of January. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

IT REALLY HAPPENED!

By
ROY J. HUFFORD
Via
AGNES MOWRY

If you play the short, "My Wife," we're hoping that an exchange mix-up don't bring a telegram like this to your home. All wives are not too broad-minded . . . !

TOM WEAR NOW LIVE MEMBER OF SMALLEY CREW, NORWICH, N. Y.

Since joining that live-wire Smalley Theatre organization of upper New York State and being assigned manager of the Smalley Theatre in Norwich, N. Y., Tom Wear, Jr., has been busily engaged in selling shows and adapting himself to his new location.

Heralds are used quite extensively in his section and some samples of ones recently turned out by Wear indicate that he believes in variety of style and copy as far as these advertising mediums are concerned. Each one brought to our attention is different as to size, color and make-up. As an example, when he sold a Leo Carillo picture the caption read, "Attenzioneal-Popolo Italiano"—the balance was in English.

A Snappy Ballyhoo!

When using a lobby number gag for an attendance booster he had an attractive girl, strikingly dressed, pass out the cards on the street. She was masked and along her route mingled with shoppers on the street and in stores. The card was headed, "Expensive Women—will certainly entertain you on a lavish scale—Dolores Costello—has nothing on me either for looks or being one of the Expensive Women—except that she plays with So and So and So and So, etc." The card was good for a guest ticket if properly identified.

Although the Norwich showing of "Vienese Nights" was delayed for certain reasons for about a year, this picture finally made its appearance. Wear exploited it in advance by holding a special screening for executives of every civic, music, religious organization, including the press and clergy. Two music clubs gave it a 45-minute discussion and members of all other clubs received a good earful from those who witnessed the showing. He also arranged a costless radio broadcast of six air programs within a period of seven days. The attraction went over well.

By this time Tom Wear is undoubtedly a well established citizen of Norwich and known around town for his enterprise in show-business. He's a member of an organization of hard working, go-getting showmen and we not only hope to hear from him again but from other fellows along the Smalley circuit. Continue the good work, Tom, and keep in touch with headquarters.

JACOB DOING LOT OF COSTLESS PROMOTION IN JACKSON THEATRE

Promotion of co-op ads and give-aways recently figured in the activities of A. M. Jacob, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Miss. Both materially aided in bringing about an increase in box-office receipts.

The co-op ad page was used in connection with the engagement of "Frankenstein" and featured portions of the head of the "monster" in each ad. Readers were invited to assemble these parts as neatly as possible to form the complete likeness. To make sure that all ads were digested it was also required that a 200-word essay be written about all advertisers' products, and as to preference of readers for any particular article advertised. Awards were made to the persons who made the best assembly of head and to the writers of the best essays. The theatre and attraction were prominently displayed in the ad.

A handsome gown and a popular make of radio were featured for give-aways on each evening of the two-day engagement of "Susan Lenox." Both these articles were promoted free of cost to theatre and the dealers further co-operated with window displays and distribution of cards calling attention to the give-aways. A reproduction of a page from the novel of the same name as picture title was used for a throw-away. This also carried copy relative to picture, theatre and playdates.

It appears that Jacob has been doing considerable work at no cost to theatre and that's always good for a pat on the back from the powers that be these days. But business is hard to get in many sections, particularly when give-aways have to be arranged to exploit a Garbo picture, and it only goes to show that some of us have it a whole lot easier than others. We understand the "Frankenstein" gag went over well and it may offer a suggestion to other members of this organization.

ANSWER TO A POSTERMAN'S PRAYER!

Four six-sheets, two three-sheets, seven one-sheets, two sets of 11 x 14 lobby photos, and in addition a Western "Main Street" back drop type painting, with cowboy in full regalia, were used to ballyhoo "Cyclone Kid" by Otto Meister, manager of the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. It certainly was a "picturesque" front and one that would make any posterman register a wide smile. Meister also gave out Buzz Barton buttons to every child who brought along a grown-up. Box-office returns were most satisfactory.

COYLE'S CANTINA PROVED POPULAR!

HERE IS THE "CANTINA" GOING FULL BLAST!

A NOVEL idea for the mezzanine is being used by Frank Coyle, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, Wash., and it's making a big hit with patrons of that house.

The photo on this page shows the front of what is known as "Cantina de los tres Amigos," or a replica of a Mexican Cantina. It is built out of compo-board. Coffee, of a brand furnished by a local importing company, is furnished free of charge; likewise, cookies, cigarettes and mints by other distributors. The cantina is open daily from two to five-thirty p.m. and an average of 400 patrons daily take advantage of the service.

We are mighty glad to get in touch with some of the J. & Von H. boys out in Seattle and in this case we'll have to thank Bob Armstrong, director of advertising and publicity. He's a recently elected member of this Club and we certainly hope that we'll hear from him and his associates often. The above cantina idea, credited to Coyle, appears to be a corker for any manager to use in order to provide a bit of exotic atmosphere, and anything relating to Mexico these days seems to be popular. The costless part of the stunt can also be borne in mind, for reason that all drinks, food, etc., dispensed can be prompted.

Thanks, Bob, for making it possible for us to pass along the idea, and let us have some more. Your advertising is also very interesting and we'd like to see more of this. You might tell Coyle, if you will, that we will look forward to hearing more about his work; or for that matter, from any of the showmen on the J. & Von H. circuit. It's a well known fact that you fellows do good work out your way and we'd like to let the rest of this gang in on it.

TIE-UP WITH TAXI FIRM BROUGHT FREE SPACE TO MARCHAND

A tie-up with a big taxi company for a co-op ad brought in good business on a midnight showing of "Flying High" for J. Harry Marchand, manager of the Crown Theatre, Mobile, Ala.

This two column by 6" ad, which literally dominated the amusement page, read as follows: "Tonight—After You See George White present his most successful stage show—Flying High—on the Talking Screen with Bert Lahr, Pat O'Brien, Charlotte Greenwood and the George White Scandal Beauty Chorus at the Crown, New Year's Eve at 11:15, Ask the Usher To Call a Yellow Cab—Do This Anytime—Hail Them Anywhere.

The newspaper also came through with a corking advance reader which not only mentioned the special showing but gave a brief history of practically everyone in the cast.

It's evident that Marchand is still on the job when it comes to going out to promote a free ad. He is an alert member of this organization and we're always glad to get a line on his activities. We'll be looking for other examples of his showmanship.

McDaniel On Job

Terry McDaniel has assumed his duties as City Manager of Fox theatres in Seattle, Wash., under the direction of Robert Frost, who succeeded Robert Bender as Northwest Division Manager. McDaniel replaces Howard White, who has returned to the Fox purchasing department in Los Angeles. The new C. M. was formerly manager of Fox theatres in Sacramento. Prior to his appointment no City Manager for Fox houses in Seattle existed.

COMING SOON!

—sounds like a feature picture announcement, but it isn't. We merely want you to know that in an early issue we will present a series of articles from Jack Hess on the all-important subject of theatre advertising. Hess, as you probably know, is the national director of advertising and publicity for R.K.O Theatres.

Watch for the first installment and enjoy reading a treatise on a subject uppermost in the minds of all live-wire showmen.

PERRIN HAS RADIO STUNT THAT WORKS OUT NICELY FOR ALL

A new kind of radio stunt, calculated to increase both theatre and air audiences, has been devised by C. T. Perrin, manager of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

Four daily announcements are broadcast on the current picture. At the same time a certain person is named in reference to guest tickets awaiting him at the box office on proper identification.

The tickets are given out in the name of the radio station as donor, which leads us to believe that cost of this stunt is absorbed by the radio company. At any rate, this would appear a logical conclusion since the theatre furnishes the tickets and gives credit to radio as host. The stunt naturally adds to the air audience, and at the same time gets in a good plug for the current attraction.

The names can be culled from any selected list, preferably to add to those already being reached by mail. This gag has worked out so profitably for Perrin that we are passing it along for others to try out. Thanks to him for the contribution.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

According to a portion of data we have at hand concerning Charles Lee Hyde, owner-manager of the Pierre Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota, he gravitated toward show-business because he wanted to see shows. Then he awoke one day to find that he had a theatre on his hands that no one had managed to extract rent expense from since it was opened. From that time on, along with farming and a bit of politics, he has managed to eke out a pretty fair living.

C. L. Hyde

Although his experience in show-business dates back to the age of 13 years when working as an usher in a theatre, and includes management of two other houses, the Agar and Oneida, he did not neglect schooling. Graduating from the Pierre High School, he took a course at Beloit College and later was awarded a J.D. from the University of Chicago. Then he entered the U. S. A. Ground School for Kiwis at the University of California, and, after completing a course in aviation, helped strafe the Germans for two years.

Returning to this country after the war he reopened his theatre and, with aid from farm revenue, has managed to pay the rent. This must be done so that he can continue to enjoy his hobby of viewing pictures. True, he has had to take time off to serve in the So. Dakota Legislature in order to kill off a couple of vicious tax-admission bills, but the farm continues to function on a paying basis and all is serene.

It may be that he will have to spend all of his time on the farm to assure an assortment of entertainment to his liking, or he may some day go into another field; but if he does, he's afraid he'll find it cluttered up with a lot more salesmen.

Aside from the above, Hyde belongs to eight Masonic bodies, is a member of the Elks, American Legion, Kiwanis, So. Dakota Polo Club, Phi Kappa Alpha, and the Pierre Commercial Club.

TWENTY-FIVE COST-FREE WAYS TO BEAT THE LENT BUGABOO!

By JACK JACKSON
Penn-N. Y. Division
Publix Theatres Corp.

PLAN YOUR WORK— WORK YOUR PLAN— BUT ACT RIGHT NOW!

The approaching Lenten season, starting February 10, prompts queries as to what you have done—what you are doing—what you will do—and what plans you have made to offset this trying period when so many forces are working against theatre revenue.

To the energetic, resourceful, far-sighted managers these six weeks offer unlimited possibilities to indulge in the kind of outstanding effort that will indelibly impress Home Office executives and by the same process of reasoning the manager who vacillates and allows the forces of Lent to catch him unprepared will find himself at a sore disadvantage in an effort to explain box office failure.

We are expecting big things during Lent and it is with this thought in mind that I offer here several suggestions of things that you can do not only to forestall the inroads that this period of the year ordinarily makes in theatre receipts, but to actually increase your profits during this period. The suggestions offered are sufficiently varied in scope to embrace all classes of operations and it is for you to decide which are applicable to your community. Only one thing is certain: the success of any or all of these ideas is entirely dependent upon YOU and how hard YOU are willing to work to put them over.

Those of you who have lobbies that will allow for the display of automobiles are in position to take advantage of the many tie-ups that have been perfected in the division whereby the auto dealer, in return for space on your screen and display space in your lobby, awards the car to the holder of a lucky number. It is needless for me to expound here what a prize of this kind will mean in inducing patronage over the entire Lenten period—particularly if the give-away of the car is scheduled for the night of Good Friday. During the past year approximately 10 automobiles were awarded at theatres in this division and I do not feel that I am exaggerating when I declare that it is not impossible for you to repeat the performance of those managers who have successfully promoted cars—particularly on a basis of six weeks' display, which is two weeks longer than ever given before. To begin with, you must convince yourself that you are giving dollar for dollar cooperation. Your lobby is worth a minimum of $100 a week for display rental and your screen is worth twice that much. Figure it out and see how much in advertising value you are offering an auto dealer in return for the car: this to say nothing of the community-wide interest that will generate from the activity. The car, cooperative newspaper space, herald distribution and valuable word-of-mouth publicity is yours without cost. How hard are YOU willing to work to get it?

Regular recurring stage activities promoted locally are to be had for the asking by the far-sighted, energetic manager who is willing to solicit this type of cooperation and is equipped with stage facilities for exhibition. A few of the avenues open are:

1. Local dancing teachers are always anxious to display the talent of their pupils to the local populace because it means new business and added prestige to their school. By approaching these dancing teachers NOW you will be able to arrange three or more appearances during the six-week period of Lent.

This article was sent by Jack Jackson to every manager in the Penn-Lower New York Division of the Publix Circuit as a guide for stimulating business during the Lenten period. The only changes made were merely to make it sound more general than personal since it will be read on the Club pages by thousands of showmen all over the country.

Jack Jackson, we once remarked, was a successful publicity, advertising and exploitation director because he has the knack of working right with the boys on the firing line. Hogging the show was never a specialty with him and as a result the house manager seems to be anxious to lend Jack and his ideas every possible cooperation. Other men in the same position ought to take this tip and try the same formula. They are apt to find that it gives their ideas a far better chance for successfully going through than making the house manager feel like a glorified porter with brains.

As publicity chief under Division Manager Walsh he has been responsible for some unusually effective ideas which directly showed response at the box office, and after all that is where your efforts prove their effectiveness. Other material from Jackson will always find a welcome on the Club pages. Let's hope we carry lots more from and about him.

"CHICK"

2. Music teachers will arrange piano recitals, violin solos and many other musical novelties that will do a lot to bolster patronage.

3. Piano dealers and purveyors of band instruments are an unfathomed source of information concerning available musical talent and they will eagerly grasp an opportunity to sponsor or foster an exhibition that means popularity for the merchandise they sell.

4. High school and college sororities and fraternities offer great possibilities as a field to provide amateur entertainment. The membership of these organizations contain many singers, dancers and musicians that will respond to a call from their leaders to engage in a night of whoopee at your theatre. It is imperative that the leaders of these organizations be contacted NOW before the restrictions of Lent are placed upon them by school superiors. If they stand committed to an appearance on your stage they'll go through with it regardless of restrictions.

5. Social clubs will continue their weekly meetings during Lent. See if you cannot dig up talented members and have one or more meetings held at your theatre with entertainment furnished from their own ranks. Again you must contact NOW. Don't wait until Lent is upon you.

6. Your Rotary Club, Kiwanis and Lions Club all have pianists and song leaders that can be prevailed upon to conduct one night at your theatre at which the audience will be invited to sing the club songs. Start working on it NOW.

EXTRA EFFORT WILL DO THE TRICK FOR YOU— JUST START WORKING!

Prizes for any or all of the above nights can be promoted from your local jeweler in return for telegrams from the stars in the attraction appearing at your theatre. You know how and where to get the telegrams.

Fashion Shows

Eastern style shows are a natural promotion during this season and it should not be difficult for any manager to sell the merchants of his community that the week of March 7th is a logical time to stage these revues. In taking advantage of this early date he is simply building interest in his Eastern sales, an interest which he cannot hope to capitalize to the fullest if he waits until the last minute. In putting on these style shows make sure that your theatre is fully covered on the item of expense. See that the merchant provides a caretaker for his gowns, that the selection of models is in keeping with his wishes and that every other detail of the activity is handled so as to preclude the possibility of criticism, or expense due to loss or damage of merchandise. Be sure that you arrange for newspaper space and herald distribution in bundles of the merchant cooperating at no expense to your theatre.

It might be possible to conduct three or four of these style revues depending on how many merchants are susceptible to the idea. You might break it down to a "Millinery Show," a "Cinderella Show," for stockings and shoes, a "Fashion Show" with gowns, suits, etc., and possibly a "Lingerie and Pajama Show" for a special lady's matinee. The possibilities are as great as YOU make them and depend entirely on how hard YOU are willing to work.

Lincoln's Birthday

Offers great possibilities to interest the schools in a juvenile playlet on the life of Lincoln. If this is impossible see if you cannot promote a debate on America's greatest statesmen, Wilson vs. Lincoln, two war Presidents, with the contestants offering their arguments from your stage. The possibilities of this are unlimited. You can even pit one school against another, one classroom against another and get teams of six or more from each school which will guarantee maximum interest.

The same thought is applicable to Washington's Birthday, but it is necessary for you to get to work NOW and arrange all details in advance.

From the entrants of your dancing school, music teachers and piano and band dealer activities you can select the best of the talent and arrange for a kiddie revue with small prizes, presumably donated by the star appearing at your theatre—this revue to take place two nights of some one week during the period.

Cash in on Bridge!

Those of you who have mezzanine floors are in position to take advantage of the present bridge craze, contacting your social sets and encouraging them to hold their bridge parties on your mezzanine. Grocers will furnish tea and cake and you can hold out to the players the lure of the entertainment on your screen as a welcome recreation after the mental strain of the bridge game. This one is HOT. The recent Culbertson-Lenz tournament makes it so—get busy with it.

The possibilities of promoting major prizes—

POSTER ART FOR THE THEATRE!

Another artist to join the contributing group to this series is Erling Espedal, poster artist for the D & R Theatres in Aberdeen, Wash. Through the courtesy of Manager O. T. Taylor we get a chance to see the type of work being turned out by Espedal.

Artist Espedal, you will note, goes in for "action" stuff rather than just the usual star heads. This we find is popular in many of the theatres outside of large cities. The preference is natural since they lean towards such material in all of their displays.

These two posters on "Beloved Bachelor" are typical of this artist's work and may be found acceptable for theatre in similar locations. We hope to be able to pass along more examples of his fine art work.

That our efforts to reproduce samples of poster art work have met with a hearty response from artists all over the country is evidenced by a steady increase of contributions, many of which are from men whose names were hitherto absent from these pages.

JACKSON'S 25 LENT IDEAS!

radios, washing machines, furniture suites, sets of automobile tires and other really valuable prizes are unlimited and should prove real revenue getters in those houses who have not yet indulged in this type of activity. Be sure the prizes are big enough to command attention and encourage attendance. The average give-away of small value is useless during this period.

The School Too!

Contact your school superintendent NOW. See if you cannot arrange for a weekly merit award of two passes to your theatre to be given in each grade of junior and high school to the student most deserving. Allow the superintendent and teachers to determine the basis of give away insisting, of course, that proper mention of the award be made which will guarantee that your attractions are brought before the school students every week. Do not be overly generous with the passes. Hold them to a minimum and they'll be appreciated more.

During this six weeks period patronage from your normal drawing area is going to be considerably curtailed and the use of a "Town Crier" in an auto properly bannered going into the surrounding communities and out into neighborhoods crying out the attraction at your theatre will broaden your appeal and help to overcome the patronage loss suffered locally. The salary of this Crier and the cost of rental on the automobile can be covered entirely by contacting local merchants who are faced with the problem of declining patronage and will eargerly grasp an opportunity of broadening their trade possibilities. Split the cost of the activity among your cooperators keeping your operation cost free.

A stage wedding offers tremendous possibilities as a business-getter. This activity has been explained so often in trade journals that it is needless to enter into the details here. You know how it's done.

Easter Rabbits!

Most of you will remember the tremendous success you had with the rabbit matinees held last Easter with prizes of live rabbits and small incubator chickens going to the children attending. Elaborate on this suggestion conducting give-aways three days instead of one, put it on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Start NOW to promote your rabbits offering the display in front of your theatre in return for all or part payment. See that the display is out well in advance and that interest in the event is maintained at peak so as to insure maximum attendance.

It might be possible that merchants in your city will be interested in giving away toy wagons, large dolls and other prizes that will keep your kiddie attendance will above average. You'll have to run this down yourself canvassing your town and determining just what the possibilities are along this line.

Co-Operative Ads!

Many theatres in the Division have had considerable success contacting milk companies to run full page cooperative ads in newspapers in return for a slight price reduction to children who present a bottle cap from their particular brand of milk. It has been proven that this is a revenue getter. Go after it.

Many of you recall the tremendous success of the bread tie-up with the Homeade Bread Company which brought theatres as high as $350 extra revenue for one matinee. See what you can do with your bakery having them pay a portion of the admission price in return for acceptance of their bread wrapper at your theatre on a reduced admission price basis. You should come out with full revenue on this—the bakery paying part and the child applying for admission paying the balance.

Several of the theatres have had success promoting local stock companies and amateur theatrical groups who can be prevailed upon to offer one-act playlets, minstrels, comedy skits, etc., one or two nights a week during this period. In every town and hamlet in the United States there is a social leader with theatrical ambitions who is anxious to be an impressario. Find this person and they'll dig up all of your talent. But again you must do it NOW before they begin thinking of the restrictions of Lent. Shenandoah had considerable success with this activity last year; the Granada Theatre at Olyphant is engaging in the activity with considerable success and plans are now under way at Towanda, Pa., which convinces me that it can be done any place.

I cannot say too much for the high quality of product that is to be yours during this period. It is hard to recall a time in the past four years when pictures have had the outstanding box-office merit that they possess today. For this reason, I know that genuine effort on your part will produce results.

Again I admonish starting to work right NOW and to keep working until you have perfected strong supporting activities to carry you through the entire Lenten season.

WEEKLY STAGE REVUE BOOSTING TRADE FOR EDMUNDSON IN ASBURY

Bernard Edmundson, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., has found his audiences responsive to a weekly stage revue put on by colored players.

He has been staging these shows every Wednesday night and business has been high above average for this time of the year in a resort town. The act is composed of a six-piece stage band, a Master of Ceremonies, two dancers. Of the latter, one is a singer and the other a comedian. All work together and put over a snappy new show every week.

Weinberg Moves

S. D. Weinberg, publicity director for Great Lakes Theatres, Inc., and formerly located at Erie, Pa., recently moved his office to Youngstown, Ohio. Recent activities included the opening of the Strand Theatre, Huntington, Va., with Don Johnson as manager, and the Hippodrome at Youngstown. Ed Oliver was at the helm of the Strand when it opened but has been transferred to Uniontown, Pa., for the opening of the West End Theatre. Weinberg joins him about Feb. 10.

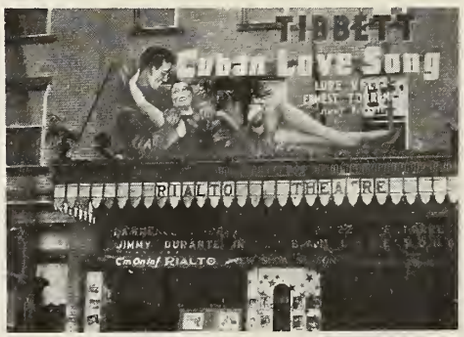
CAN WE BE OF SERVICE?

During the past three years out-of-town showmen visiting the city have made Club headquarters their New York address. Mail can be directed here and will be held or forwarded according to instuctions.

We can also arrange your hotel accommodations at special rates through several representative hotels; secure privileges for inspecting the large Broadawy movie theatres; help you with your business matters; in fact, we want you to know that the entire organization is at the disposal of visiting members.

Drop us a line and let us know when you are coming and remember that the latch-string is hanging on the outside at 1790 Broadway.

KLINGLER SAYS HIS TOWN STILL MOVING ALONG AT FAST CLIP



Evidence is at hand that the town of Lewistown, Idaho, has neither been snowed under by that element, the depression nor the big potatoes that come from that section of the country. We know this because the word comes straight from Paul O. Klingler, manager of the Rialto Theatre in that city, and he's in a position to get the low-down on the situation.

For instance, let's go back to Xmas week when the theatre played to most satisfactory attendance. Maybe the general attractiveness of the house both inside and out had something to do with this. Your attention is called to one of the photos, the interior shot of a half-portion of the Rialto's auditorium. It's a shame that the snap wasn't large enough to faithfully reproduce the skyline wings on either side of the stage and the silhouetted figures above the exit doors. However, small as it is we can believe that the effect was striking. The black and white skyline of a city depicted a winter or holiday scene and the background, which appears white in the photo, was made unusually effective by use of blue silk which produced a very good winter sky. Small lights in the windows also lent to the general scheme.

The small silhouettes of colonial design on either side of the stage were cut from beaver board by a member of the house staff. Colored lights were hidden in back of the figures. Although this appears intricate, intricate or not, it was cut entirely with a handsaw. The other photo, showing cutout display on front of theatre made for "Cuban Love Song," was also done in its entirety with a small handsaw. The title of the picture was finished in a very brilliant diamontine. At night, five different colored spots were used to illuminate this display.

While we haven't any particulars at hand of his campaign on "Dirigible," considerable work was done on this picture owing to the fact that it had to be given extended run in Lewistown. On the opening night, however, Klingler enlisted the services of the local Y.M.C.A.'s band of 55 pieces, had it parade through the main streets with a large banner and halted the band in front of the theatre where it gave a fifteen minute concert. Flood lights were used on the front of the house during progress of this stunt. The only cost to this phase of the campaign was free admission to each member of the band at the opening performance.

We also have a sample of newspaper advertising used one day before opening on "Flying High" but cannot reproduce it because of reaching headquarters in a torn condition. However, it's a four-column by 12-inch affair and presents a snappy appearance. It was headed, "How that audience yelled—it was a riot," and this referred to reports received from every city it had played. It was illustrated with certain mats selected from the press book, along with some stock mats on hand at the theatre.

It is gratifying to have Klingler back with us again as a contributor to this department.

SELETTE HAS TOUGH OPPOSITION BUT IS SELLING HIS SHOWS

One of our hard-working Club members, Eddie Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre in Portsmouth, N. H., has been having more troubles than a dog has fleas, but despite all the monkey wrenches in the machinery we are pleased to record that business is not too bad; in fact, it's been pretty good.

For the second time during the past year Selette has had to withdraw newspaper advertising owing to what he terms a prohibitive increase of rates. Maybe this will be more clear if it is disclosed that his editor also heads an opposition theatre. So, according to Eddie, the opposish gets by with a cheaper rate while Eddie is charged war-time prices. He also has to pay for each little reader, with "advt" at bottom. To make the cheese more binding this editor and theatre owner is also the town mayor, which is another thing to take some more joy out of Eddie's life. But, as we stated, he appears to be getting along well despite the alleged handicaps.

Always Something Doing!

He has his ways of getting along, such as tying in with the Salvation Army for the staging of a benefit show. All the unemployed were admitted free of charge and, of course, all these sort of things put Eddie in solid with the public. Having been a former vaudeville booker, he knows how to buy vaude attractions at the right figure and for an innovation he recently added three acts at no increase in prices. Now he has a five or six-hour show at a rate that is most attractive to the masses.

He held a gift night a short time ago—on Friday, the 13th, to be exact—and several hundred customers had to be turned away. It took an hour to dispose of the 187 articles he promoted all by himself for the occasion.

Another stunt he recently put over was a tie-up made with the American Legion on the showings of a purported authentic picture of the late war. Special tickets were made for this event and 50 per cent of all proceeds from tickets sold by the Legion were turned over to that organization. For this occasion the front of the house was decorated with sand bags, barbed wire, etc. Members of the Legion, dressed in uniforms, also contributed to the general scheme.

A Real Battler!

It scarcely seems necessary to offer any encouragement to this Round Tabler, who, in the face of a tough set-up, appears to be able to fight his own battles. All we can add is that we hope Eddie and the mayor will some day start speaking again when they meet on the street. Mayors are tough opposition any way you look at it, and personally, we'd much rather have one for a friend, especially in New England. On the other hand, if one chooses to become an enemy, we'd go out and do battle, just the same as Selette. In the meantime, we'll be looking for further dispatches from the front line trenches over in New Hampshire.

IF YOUR NAME ISN'T HERE—WHY?

JAMES G. EDWARDS is a member of the Golden State Theatre Circuit on the West Coast and manages the Hayward Theatre at Hayward, Calif. He was recently transferred to this house, having been in the East Bay Division of this company for the past two years. He thinks he should have joined this organization a long time ago but, as he states, it's not too late now. So meet this new member, Round Tablers, and give him the glad hand. Soon he'll be letting you know how show-business is going along out his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BERT H. TODD manages the Great Lakes Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, and he's another newly-elected member of this organization of showmen. We're glad to extend the Club welcome to this new representative from Cleveland and hope that he will do his share to keep these pages full on interesting slants on the business of selling shows. Shoot along some of your ideas, Bert, so that we can pass them along to the rest of the gang.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD WIDENHORN is an assistant manager and another one of Robert Weitman's boys over in the big Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. He has been connected with this house for the past two years and formerly held the post of treasurer. Weitman recommends him highly so there's every reason to believe that show-business will hear a great deal more concerning this new member. Harold, see if you can get your boss to let us know what he is doing to keep the Paramount out of the red. He owes the Club a story.

HERE'S THE BLANK

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

Name .....

Position .....

Theatre .....

Address .....

City .....

State .....

LAVERNE C. INGERSOLL holds down the job of house manager at the Strand Theatre in Caro, Mich., and we are also in receipt of his application for membership. We are mighty glad to record his name on the Club roster and want to advise him at this writing that his responsibility as a Round Tabler is not limited to the hanging up of his "framed certificate." We want him to keep us posted on what's going on in his line in Caro, so that some of his selling stunts can be used by other members of this organization.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES A. COLLINS is another assistant manager to become enrolled in this outfit and he has the job of helping Fred J. Sarr manage the Strand Theatre in Oswego, N. Y. Collins is twenty-two years of age, has been with Sarr for seven months and was promoted to his present position from the post of doorman. With the able coaching that Sarr can give him it probably will not be long before he'll be standing at the helm of his own theatre.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEON STERNBERGER is Roy Rowe's new assistant at the Warner Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa., and he migrated there from Long Island, where he helped Tom di Loreno operate the Cove Theatre in Glen Cove. Prior to his association with de Lorenzo he has connected with Paul Binstock at the Astoria Grand, Astoria, N. Y. Well Leon, we're glad to welcome you into the Club. You certainly do manage to hook up with a Round Table wherever you happen to go. That's good practice. Keep it up. Tell your boss that we'd like to have a line on any stunts being put over at the Warner.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ELMER JOHNSON is located out in Columbus, Ohio, where he assists James A. Jackson with management of the Empress and Ogden Theatres. Elmer is twenty-eight years of age and has been associated with these theatres for the past eight years, graduating to his present position from the job of chief projectionist. We are glad to welcome this new Round Tabler and wish him continued success.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WELLS WITT is the assistant manager of the Waldo Theatre and if we could decipher the signature on his application for membership in this outfit we'd tell you the name of his boss. At any rate, Witt is 24 years of age and has been with the Waldo for one year. He was promoted to his present post from doorman. So he is another step up the ladder and it probably will not be long before we hear that he's running a house of his own. We would like to have him keep his Club posted on what's going on in his neighborhood.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL H. HARRELL has the job of assisting C. E. Stone with the management of the Paris Theatre, Durham, N. C. He's another young showman to file his application for membership in this organization and we're glad to have him with us. Harrell is eighteen years of age and has been with the Paris for the better portion of the past two years. The last position he held was that of doorman. We hope that both he and his boss will keep the Club posted on theatre activities in Durham.

DON JOHNSON has charge of the Strand Theatre down in Huntington, West Va., and is recommended for Club membership by S. D. Weinberg, publicity man for Great Lakes Theatres, of which the Strand is a unit. Any man sponsored by Weinberg can be counted upon to give a good account of himself as a showman and so we will anticipate some interesting contributions from this new member. Being boss of the Strand is a new post for Johnson and we'll want to know how he's getting along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN LEHANE assists Jack Portee with the management of the U. S. Theatre, Bronx, New York City and we have Jack's word for it that this newly-elected Round Tabler will make another live-wire acquisition for this organization. He has had five years experience around theatres in various capacities, has learned a lot and is well on the way toward taking full charge of his own house. Under Portee's able guidance a promotion shouldn't be far off. Give our best regards to your boss, John, and keep in touch with Club headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWIN J. OLIVER is the manager of the West End Theatre, a newly opened house at Uniontown, Pa., and his application for membership in this organization is also sponsored by S. D. Weinberg, of Great Lakes Theatres. Both Oliver and Weinberg will be on their toes taking care of publicizing this new unit in the Great Lakes circuit and will no doubt have some interesting contributions to make to this department when all is said and done. We hope that both these showmen will continue to let their Club know what's doing wherever they may be.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. C. KALAFAT manages the Royal Theatre in Garrett, Ind., an independently operated house. Kalafat operates on a partnership basis and is in a position to shoot along a lot of worthwhile show-selling ideas for these pages. We hope that he will remember the Club slogan and do his share to keep this department chock full of interesting slants on showmanship.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

I. J. SEGALL manages the Frankford Theatre down in Philadelphia, Pa., and it's a pleasure to record that he, too, has joined the best and fastest stepping organization of showmen in the wide world. Just as soon as Segall can find the time he's going to let all of you know how shows are sold at the Frankford. In the meantime, we wish him and Director Stamper continued success.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED REETHS, JR., is the manager of the Sheboygan Theatre, a Warner house out in Sheboygan, Wis., and at this writing he also becomes a member of this ever-increasing army of live-wire showmen. Fred, we're glad to include your name on the Club roster and will look forward to receiving any suggestions you may make on the subject of show-selling. Shoot along your ideas and we'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. L. CROUSE hails from Eveleth, Minn,. where he manages the Regent Theatre. We are glad to have the opportunity to introduce this new member to his host of brother showmen and hope he'll do his part to keep the old ball rolling along at the usual clip. What's doing out in Eveleth, Crouse? Drop us a line and tell us about the last good stunt you put over.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE INC. SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
HOLLYWOOD, CAL.

My dear "J. C.":

Well, all I can say is that it is pretty soft for some folks. Here I thought you had started on your trek across Arizona, New Mexico and Texas, when, lo and behold, the columns of The Herald inform me that you are still gallivanting around Hollywood. What with getting an eye full at the studios and being swamped with invitations to tea (?) parties at the homes of some of the big shot stars, you sure are living the life of the late Mr. Riley. And that ? after the word "tea" goes, too. I know, "J. C.", for I've been there. I'll never forget one I attended at Noah Beery's ranch. But say, "J. C.", if you want to spend a real evening, here's a little tip. Grab a telephone right now and call up any one or all of the following celebrities and tell them you want to come over to their homes, because you have heard they thought so well of RCA Photophone sound reproducing equipment that they had it installed in their own private theatres for the entertainment of themselves and their guests. I'll let you off reasonably easy, "J. C.", by giving you just a few of the big shots. If I gave you all of them, you and "April Shower" wouldn't get out of Hollywood this winter. You might start with Ann Harding, the Pathe star; then Gloria Swanson, Marion Davies, Cecil DeMille and Sam Goldwyn. And don't forget Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford. Joan gave Doug a complete RCA Photophone Senior Portable for Christmas. Of course, a lot of other prominent people have RCA Photophone apparatus in their homes, too. William Randolph Hearst, who has three units in as many different homes, and Albert D. Lasker, H. F. DuPont, Cardinal Mundelein and M. J. Meehan are among them. You know, "J. C.", when folks in their class buy anything, it must be the best. Well, that's the answer, isn't it?

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Hollywood

DEAR HERALD:

We have just had a delightful conference with Mr. Joseph I. Breen and Colonel Jason Joy, both of the producers and distributors organization. Mr. Breen is assistant to Will Hays at the production center and Colonel Joy is director of studio and public relations of the MPPD, giving particular attention to the operation of the Production Code of Ethics and matters of censorship.

When one considers the mass of manuscript, scenarios and plot themes that must be examined and revised by this bureau each year it seems incredible that this amount of work could be done within the 365 days without including a lot of nights and a tremendous number of headaches. To recite these arduous duties here would be to confirm a belief in the exhibitors' minds that the producers have yet to fully appreciate what constitutes wholesome entertainment for the masses.

We regard the work of these two gentlemen as being of tremendous importance to the picture industry, and we desire to express our thanks to them for much information hitherto unknown to us and trust we were able to give them some information of value gained from our contact with exhibitors far afield.

Auto Crashes Picking Up

Hollywood is what you would call a cosmopolitan town. There are people here from every corner of the globe and some from Wisconsin. It's the mecca of hundreds of girls who were told by their townspeople that they could come out here and step into stardom as soon as they stepped off the Pullman, but ninety-nine out of a hundred are stepping behind lunch counters and into laundries.

You will find a building sixteen stories high, and on one side of it will be a hot dog shack and on the other an open air parking space 25 cents. Across the street will be a beauty parlor with a filling station on one side and a dog and cat hospital on the other.

Down on Film Row we met a bunch of fine people, among them being H. J. McIntyre, branch manager for RKO Radio; W. J. Heinman, branch manager, Universal; Ben Gould, manager, Fox West Coast Theatres; Carroll Johnson, assistant branch manager, Fox; Frank H. Bowen, theatre equipment; E. Peacock, branch manager, Paramount; R. A. Mitchell, Talking Pictures Epics; Harry Weinburg, manager, California sales, Universal; and N. P. (Red) Jacobs, salesman for RKO Radio.

We also met Miss Lola Adams Gentry, secretary and treasurer of the Film Board of Trade. Miss Gentry advised us that she is still single but we could hardly believe it. We told her that she ought to come to Nebraska where there are some live ones. She half way promised to do it.

Harry Weinburg is the only film salesman who ever guaranteed an exhibitor's business. He sold us "Westbound Limited" once and guaranteed us a certain return, and, be it said to his credit, he made good on the guarantee.

We visited the Warner studio and met quite a number of the Warner players. When we were introduced to Chic Sale we were thunderstruck. Chic, off the screen and stage, looks about as much like Chic on the screen and stage as we look like the king of Siam. We would have picked anybody else in Hollywood for Chic before we would have picked him.

Marion Marsh is one of those conscientious, hard-working kids that one likes to meet. There is nothing upstage about Marion in spite of the fact that she's a delightful actress and exceedingly handsome. Most girls would let it go to their heads, but not so with Marian. We predict that the public is going to demand that they see her very often. She has promised to send us a big photo of herself, for which we express our thanks in advance.

We also met Warren William, but only for a moment, not long enough to get his exact measure, but our impression is that Warren will measure up to all requirements and turn in a 100 per cent score.

A Pleasing Voice

We have always insisted that Kenneth Thomson has the most pleasing voice of any actor on the screen, and after meeting him and talking with him we have not revised our opinion. Not only that, Kenneth is our style of an actor. He puts sincerity in his work that gets hold of you and grips. Watch him closely the next time you see him and see if we are not correct.

We are indebted to Mr. Lin Bonner, publicity director, for a delightful luncheon and for taking time off to show us around the studio. Few people would pay us that much attention.

We also had the pleasure of meeting Carlyle Jones, who is connected with the Warner publicity department. Carlyle cut his first teeth in our home town and we have known him every since and always knew he's make good. You just can't keep those Neligh boys down.

Tough for Elmer Gailey

We went deep sea fishing, and if we should tell you about the halibut, barracuda, yellowtail and sword fish we caught, Elmer Gailey would rare up and say, "There goes that guy again on another fish story, why don't the HERALD muzzle that bird." Elmer is always so sensitive on matters of fish. He's that bullhead fisher of Wayne, Neb.

We want to apologize to Mr. F. E. Smith of the Smith theatre at Yuba City for failing to mention the delightful visit we had with him and his estimable wife when we were in his city. Mr. Smith is an ardent HERALD fan as well as a popular theatre manager. Both of these excellent traits go together always. We hope to visit the Smiths again some time.

In Hollywood's drugstores you can get ipecac and Johnson's horse liniment on one side and a hamburger sandwich and coffee on the other side (not of the sandwich). We don't know what you can get behind the prescription case, probably a headache.

Aleograph Loses Appeal on Erpi Infringement Verdict

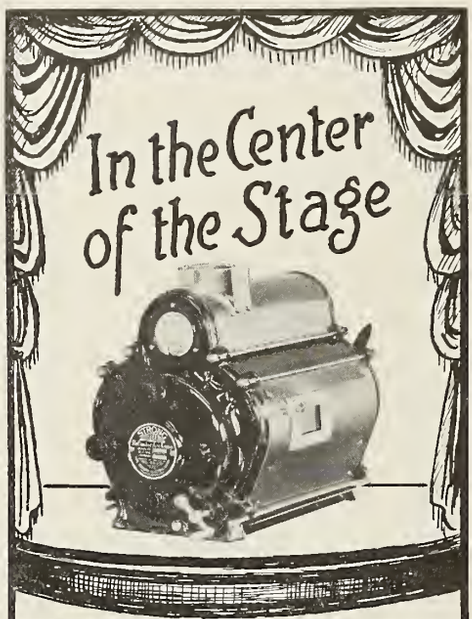
The Aleograph Company has been defeated in its appeal from a patent infringement verdict rendered against it, and in favor of Erpi, in the circuit court of appeals at New Orleans. The court sustained the decision of a lower court in Texas which decided that the plaintiff had failed to establish any infringement.

The patent in question relates to a specific mechanical connection between the turntable and film projection apparatus, as well as several other features. The patent is number 1,494,514.

Four New Tax Measures Face Illinois Industry

Illinois theatre interests are facing four different tax bills of from 5 to 10 per cent on gross receipts which have been introduced in the State Legislature. Two of the bills call for a 5 per cent tax on gross receipts, another for a 10 per cent tax on gross receipts, and the fourth for a 10 per cent tax on admissions of 50 cents and over.

Former Film Service Men to Hold Reunion in Near Future



All former motion picture and "still" photographers, as well as laboratory men, who were members of the Signal Corps during the World War, are requested to address Frank A. Krueger, P. O. Box 331, Trenton, N. J., with reference to a reunion to be held in the near future.

The location of the affair and the exact date have not been decided as yet.

New Independent Producer Group Plans Studio Relief

The Independent Producers Association, recently organized on the Coast, has launched a campaign for the relief of unemployed studio labor, according to C. C. Burr, following a meeting of the organization's directorate.

Declaring that the unemployment situation is appalling, and charging that efforts have been made to minimize conditions, Phil Goldstone urged support of the cause. The directors passed a resolution, to be presented to the entire membership, to the effect that each member contribute a certain amount toward a relief fund. Trem Carr, Monogram producer, was elected to the board, now comprising 10 members.

British Quota Law Expected To Pass in British Columbia

Legislation requiring all film houses in British Columbia to show a certain quota of films made in the British Empire is under preparation at Victoria and will be submitted to the Conservative caucus at its February meeting.

It is generally expected to be adopted and handed to the legislature. The plan results from a government inquiry which alleged the existence of a film combine in Canada. Under present conditions, the government believes it is difficult for theatres to secure an adequate supply of British-made pictures.

Clarke Resigns as Warners' Far Eastern Representative

Horace L. Clarke, long prominent in the export field, has resigned as Far Eastern representative of Warner-First National, with headquarters in Tokio, to enter another activity. He will return to the United States.

Clarke was in Australia for a time for David P. Howells when the latter owned the Warner-First National foreign franchise. He later represented Howells in the Far East. Joining First National under Bruce Johnson, he transferred to Warner-First National.

Van Beuren Will Release 12 Chaplin Silents with Sound

The Van Beuren Corporation will shortly release 12 of the old Charlie Chaplin silent short comedies, synchronized with sound effects and music. RKO will distribute.

Gene Rodemich, musical director for Aesop Fables, another Van Beuren product, is handling the synchronization.

SOUND PRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 110

Bluebook School Question No. 110 was: "(A) Name the various things to be examined and tested before each show is started. (B) Tell us how you would mark the projector so that the exact point at which the intermittent movement starts to move and stops may be instantly, conveniently and accurately determined. (C) Describe correct method of handling records and placing them on a turntable. (D) How fast does the turntable rotate? (E) What may be the effect of holding the hand on turntable to make a quick stop? (F) What will be the effect of any variation in turntable speed?"

The following made acceptable answers (remembering that the term "acceptable" is construed to mean that the answer was in the main correct, or at least correct enough to convince me that the one who made it has at least a fairly comprehensive understanding of the points involved):

Herman Billings*, Lester Borst*, C. Rau and S. Evans*, George A. Artley*, Roy Arntson*, G. E. Doe*, Pat O'Brien*, Tom Turk*, Bill Doe*, John Williams*, T. Van Vaulkenburg*, J. T. Loat, T. Wylie*, J. Young, James McGuire*, Lewis A. Goldman, D. Hotaling*, D. R. Robbins, Andrew McPherson, George Danields, F. G. Caton, Frank D. True, William Sudbury*, Will Peck, W. D. Samuels, P. L. Landry, Richard L. Lomax*, Harry Lidding*, Bert Johnson, Thomas Rodney, Frank Peters, Andrew McPherson, Larry James*, William Edwards, S. R. Anderson, Lon T. Grady, W. D. Singleton, George Thompson*, D. Cole, Frank Oliver, George A. Artley*, John Flynn, D. Lantry and T. L. Davidson, O. Cranby, P. H. Bondom, R. L. Little, Mike McGuire, Andy Bailey, Dave Lode, A. Rangor, Sam and Andrew Wells, T. L. May, Thomas McGruder*, Chick Peters, U. K. Hobert, Dan Roxbury, R. J. Arntson*, K. L. Knight*, Tom Wignath, Henry Sicmann*, John Cermak, William Broadbent, S. T. Jones*, John G. Farmann, R. Lester*, Tom Murphy, Andy Rangor, William Bogert, H. G. Tonlin, Cyrus Wentworth*, James Ledbetter, F. G. Garison, Kent Garman, James Devoy*, Sackman and Tracy, S. T. Jones and Frank Tubel. (An asterisk denotes the author of an especially good answer.)

I have selected the reply of Bill Doe for publication. He says:

"As I understand the meaning, Section A means only what points should be inspected, not including proper threading of film, etc. Answering on that basis, both apertures should be inspected to make sure no dust, lint or other things adheres to their edges, and that there is no deposit on the metal surfaces the film comes into contact with in passing through either of the gates. That, and seeing that disc records are clean is, I believe, all the actual inspection the apparatus requires each time, except before starting the first show for the days, when many other things should have careful attention.

"(B) Several methods may be followed, but the most simple, easily applied one is to make a chalk mark on the rotating shutter and another opposite it on its casing, first having carefully brought the intermittent movement just to the point where the intermittent sprocket ceases to move.

"However, this will vary with different projectors. The rear shutter of the Motiograph DeLuxe, for example, cannot be marked thus. The Simplex shutter, on the other hand, can. If a front shutter is used, then one has only to make a chalk mark at the top of the shutter, and that is that. I repeat, the procedure will vary with different projectors. The thing is to establish a mark on some rotating member and on another close to it on a stationary member, so that when the two are opposite each other we may know the condition sought exists.

"(C) Records should be stored in a dustproof case. They should be handled very carefully, laid upon the turntable with both hands, dusted off thoroughly and so placed that the needle will be exactly at the starting mark. After being properly set in its holder, the needle should be dropped very gently into the groove, and the arm given a gentle shove sidewise to make certain the needlepoint is in place in the groove. When the record has been played, it should be removed and stored immediately, since if it remains on the turntable it will of course gather dust, some of which will lodge in the groove bottoms, where it will later assist materially in quickly flattening the needlepoint and in the damaging of the grooves.

"(D) The turntable rotates at the rate of 33 1-3 revolutions per minute, or that number of revolutions to each 90 feet of film projected.

"(E) Using the turntable as a brake sets up the danger of ripping out gear teeth, as has happened many times. The leverage of the turntable against the gearing is so great that if the braking effect be heavy a very heavy strain is set up.

"(F) Variation in turntable speed will cause a variation in reproduced sound known as 'wows' or 'flutters.' The speed of reproduction is varied by turntable speed variation, of course, and we all. I think by now very well know the effect of that. Increased speed operates to produce sound of higher, and decreased speed of lower, tone."

Selecting Officers

In the current issue of the General Bulletin from the general office of the IATSE and MPMO, appears an article entitled, "Eliminate Prejudice in Selection of Local Officers," which is deserving of high commendation. I quote the following paragraph:

"Organized labor is facing a test. The organizations which are sound will come through intact, but it is not to be expected that where a union is handicapped by anything short of the best in the way of leadership, it will escape suffering. . . . In the selection of leaders the members should look them over for honesty, energy and ability, giving some care to avoid the impulse to even up a grudge or to pay a compliment to some 'good fellow' who may not be qualified to fill the position to which he aspires."

For many years I was myself an active union man, starting first in the Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen in about 1885, or perhaps a year or two later. Anyhow, it was not long after its formation. I can well remember what very slight attention was paid to the selection of officers best fitted to the work. That was just something that was not done, with the result that unions were constantly embroiled in strikes and other troubles, many of which would unquestionably have been avoided had the leadership been of better quality.

Whoever wrote that Bulletin article wrote wisely and well. It is to be most sincerely hoped that his advice will be heeded.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending February 4

The current stage-show, "Illustrated Songs," devised and staged by Jack Partington, proved less attractive than Partington's usual presentations, nevertheless the audience apparently cared not for that but only for the fact that Bing Crosby and Lilyan Tashman were the headliners. The show is in five distinct parts, the first being the presentation of "illustrated songs" as done thirty years ago. In this, Miriam Lax nicely sings "All that I Want is You," as the old time slides appear on the screen. A trailer, covering the years from 1902 to 1932 introduces Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford, who offer the latest style of presenting songs. Seated at their new stage organ consoles, in front of an attractive back drop and playing special arrangements of popular numbers of to-day, the Crawfords prove a decided contrast to the oldtime presentation of songs. Their numbers this week are a special waltz arrangement of "Faded Summer Love," and the latest marching song, "I Love a Parade." This last number is built into a production number, first by the use of shots of marching soldiers, flashed on the screen just above the Crawfords' heads and then by the 16 Danny Dare girls, in grenadier uniform, doing a march and baton wielding routine. Number three offering is dance routines by the Six Steppers. These colored boys work well together and then offer challenge time steps. These are no better than from the usual colored dance teams but the novelty of six of them dancing together and the manner in which their act was staged proved attractive and earned them good applause.

Number four spot opens to a dark stage with a pin spot played on Bing Crosby, who sings "Cuban Love Song." As he sings, the stage is slowly lighted and behind him appear the 16 Danny Dare girls, posed on the slowly rising stage-elevator. After it reaches the level of the stage the girls, dressed in colorful costumes, go into a simplified rumba routine, and, at the finish of the song, make their exit the same way that they came on. Bing offers two more numbers, "Spend an Evening in Caroline," and "Is That the Human Thing to Do." These were sung before a plain drop curtain with Bing using a guitar accompanist.

The show closed with "The Interview," a spicy, wise-cracking comedy skit, featuring Lilyan Tashman, Bing Crosby and Sid Silvers.

Miss Tashman has an opportunity to live up to her reputation of being the "screen's best dressed woman," for she is dressed in most beautiful gowns. Crosby surprised (at least this reviewer) by showing actual human traits and an ability to portray a character other than that of a crooner. The cross-fire wise-cracking between Miss Tashman, Crosby and Sid Silvers certainly proved entertaining.

Show seen Friday evening. Business SRO. Feature picture, "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," with Ruth Chatterton and Paul Lukas.

Operating Beacon

ARLO HULTS

Hults, who is well known in New York theatres, is the new featured organist at RKO's "ace" Brooklyn house, the Albee. Hults offers an intimate style of work that goes a long way in making him popular with his audiences. He also has a very nice singing voice which is a featured part of every solo. You can see for yourselves that he is personable, and hearing about his other abilities should be conclusive proof of just why he is a good attraction for any house.

Warner Vaudeville Revue To Be of Intimate Variety

The Warner Hollywood vaudeville revue, opening within a week, will be one of the most original ever to reach the patrons of a motion picture theatre, according to Harry L. Charnas, general manager of Warner Brothers' metropolitan theatres.

Lou Holtz will present an all-star show which includes Vincent Lopez and his Hotel St. Regis Orchestra; the Boswell Sisters, those famous radio singers of the South; the celebrated comedians, Clark and McCullough, with Collette Ryan; Jay Brennan, Venita Gould, Mr. Snake Hips and Miss Snake Hips, Three Little Words, and additional acts.

Intimate vaudeville, Holtz explains, is a distinct departure from the current mode of vaudeville where the fall of a curtain and the change of annunciator cards mark the passing of each act. In his show, even the barrier of the footlights is to be banished. All acts for the Hollywood are being booked through Walter Meyers, head of Warners' Artists Bureau.

It is reported that the policy will be extended to several other Warner houses if it proves the success anticipated.

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending February 5

There is nothing on the current bill to cause a traffic stampede or crack any house records, but it is satisfactorily diversified.

The rotund, gargantuan comedian, Johnny Perkins, billed as "A Ton of Fun," acts as M.C. The Neal Sisters—Lucile, Ann and Gwyneth—stately blondes, start the bill nicely with their harmonious vocalizing accentuated by their pleasing personalities. The act is labeled "The Blondes in Blues."

"The Runaway Four," patomimic funsters, open as stooges, changing to sailor uniforms, to project a hodge-podge of singing, dancing, satire, clowning and general hokum, with a bit of acrobatics here and there. The backdrop depicts Brooklyn Bridge and the New York skyline.

Gloria Foy, formerly of Cincinnati, with Sam Cricherson and Walter Lane, fills in No. 3 spot. Leading cinema lights are impersonated to piano accompaniment by one of the men. Solo and trio dancing is interspersed.

Perkins puts his own act on No. 4, aided and abetted by Ruth Petty, for whose well-rendered blues singing two of the Neal girls provide the accompaniment on a pair of grands, after which Ruth and Johnny indulge in some smart repartee. Perkins introduces Richard Montgomery, a colored lad in his teens, whom he announces as a recent "find." The young man, who sang "Roses of Picardy," "Two Hearts" (in German) and "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," the two last named as encores, has a voice of excellent quality, especially in the high notes.

Borrah Minevitch and his 12 harmonica musicians, headlined, close the show. This act is framed much the same as when previously presented, although it goes over just as big if not more so. These lads of all shapes, sizes and colors, know their harmonicas, and produce everything from grand opera to grand larceny. Solo dance and a song also are injected, in addition to which Perkins and Lucile Neal come on for a flash of comedy. Later the three Neal sisters and Miss Petty alternate in singing "Shine On, Harvest Moon," accompanied by the harmonica orchestra, with a subsequent request for the audience to join in the singing.

Mortimer Wilson Dead; Composer and Teacher

Mortimer Wilson, American composer and teacher of musical composition, passed away January 28 at his home in New York, of complications in consequence of an attack of pneumonia a month ago. He had seemed to be on the road to recovery. He was in his fifty-sixth year and leaves a wife and his son, Mortimer, Jr.

Publix Boston House Ready

Publix will open its new Paramount-Publix theatre, Boston, on February 5. Seating capacity is 1800. No provision has been made for an orchestra; music will be produced by organs, emanating from the dome of the theatre. "Shanghai Express" will be the opening attraction.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending February 4

The main attraction at this deluxe house for the past two weeks has been the MGM picture "The Champ," featuring Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper. The stage-show, which also has been held over for two weeks, features Benny Davis and His Broadway Stars of the Future. The entire stage-show was one of the poorest attempts to entertain an audience ever evidenced here. With a few exceptions it was exactly the same show that Davis brought here just a short time ago. Credit must be given to the group of talented youngsters Davis introduced; they do work hard and some of them undoubtedly will succeed in becoming real stars some day.

The show closes with Benny's singing of bits of his past hits, which not one-tenth of the audience remembered and the rest didn't care about.

Show seen Friday afternoon, business good.

Portland (Ore) Portland

Week ending January 21

Celebrating the tenth anniversary of Fanchon and Marco, "The Around the World" idea offered a combination of musical comedy, vaudeville and miniature world tour that was most entertaining. In spite of a most unusual and heavy Oregon snowstorm, this stage show registered at least 75 per cent of the week's entertainment.

Harry and Frances Usher, magicians and mentalists, handed out a large assortment of perfectly baffling tricks and an amusing way of presenting them. The humorist skit offered by Tex Morrisey and Company also registered well. Al Nord, a big boy who knows just how to tickle the banjo, and a little girl, Jeanie, had an amusing line of chatter with a double banjo number. The Daniels, lively steppers, and adagio dancers, six colorful teams, gave a whirlwind finish to the act. Clever electrical illusions of airplanes and parachutes, and rapid fire of comment of various countries, covered by airplane in a few minutes, were entertainingly described by the Ushers.

Al Gillette and his Portlanders from the KGW studio provided the musical background, while the Paramounteers took a week off.

Stanley-Warner to Use Acts, Orchestras in Neighborhoods

The Stanley-Warner Company will definitely begin operation of its long-expected plan to use vaudeville in its larger Philadelphia neighborhood houses, on February 6.

The three houses selected, Uptown, Circle, State, will all employ orchestras. The plan was discussed four weeks ago as a means of employing the jobless musicians, coincident with the settlement of the musicians' strike.

$74,891 of $300,000 Raised To Assist Idle Musicians

Contributions totaling $74,891 so far have been received in a drive to aid unemployed musicians, it was announced by Walter Damrosch, chairman of the campaign committee at a luncheon this week at the St. Regis Hotel in New York. The goal of the campaign is the accumulation of $300,000.

Hollywood, Hollywood

Week ending January 30

The current bill bids fair to break all previous records, judging by the crowds which had Hollywood's largest theatre jammed to capacity long before the first matinee. The management is to be commended highly for presenting such a program. It has stopped at nothing to give the patrons ace-high entertainment and the favorable response for everything on the bill speaks well for the audience's appreciation.

Opening with the world premiere of "Union Depot," First National's latest picture, the line-up clear through the three-hour show was 100 per cent amusement. Following the feature Gaylard Carter, house organist, gave a pleasing organ solo to a good hand; an interesting short subject, "Movie Album," showed sex appeal and horses galloping backwards as we knew it in the days before microphones were to be an instrument in guarding the virtue of our heroines. This feature alone was worth the matinee admission, and drew many a laugh. Overture by Jesse Stafford's band followed (report on "Overture" page). Following the Stafford aggregation, the house blacked into a trailer announcing Gene Dennis, Psychic wonder. Without the usual Egyptian assistants, without Crystal gazing and without the general hokus-pokus, Miss Dennis made a straight-forward, half-shy entrance which immediately inspired confidence, and which she immediately justified by her amazing answers to the public's questions. Miss Dennis is unquestionably the reason for the SRO status of the house. As the show caught, Miss Dennis apparently threw light on a murder mystery. No fake to this girl, she's great. More shows like this and the public's belief in Santa Claus may return. Credit for this fine show goes to Frank Newman, Weiss and anyone else connected with it.

NBC Seeks Empire State Mast For Television Broadcasting

The National Broadcasting Company is seeking the use of the dirigible mooring mast atop the Empire State Building for broadcasting sound pictures to radio audiences via television, according to M. H. Aylesworth, NBC president.

Televised images will soon be greatly improved over the best transmitters in use today, Aylesworth said in an address on Welfare Island, in New York, this week.

Report Stage Acts Successful

Five Hartford, Conn., theatres are supplementing their film programs with stage shows at popular prices. The additions are said to have resulted in increased box office returns.

Stage Bills in the South

Practically all theatres in Tampa, Florida, are offering stage attractions with the film program, as is usual in the winter months, when numerous of the stage players move to the south. Generally there is no advance in prices.

Bolger Succeeds Young

James C. Bolger has been named to succeed Theodore C. Young as head of the Paramount Publix real estate department. He has been affiliated with various retail concerns for many years in real estate work.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY

"Community-singing" is now an institution 'way up in Fairbanks, Alaska, according to a letter from Don Adler, chief organist of the circuit of theatres there. . . . Lee Woodbury, organist at the Oritani in Hackensack, N. J., not only gives his audiences plenty of novel organ solos but has even put on a big show, using local talent, writing the music and producing it all himself. . . . The idea went over so well that the management has asked him to produce another in the near future. . . . Dick Betts is now featured at the Warner Brothers Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y., and according to the local newspapers is quite an acquisition to the house. . . . Did the resemblance between Tommy Christian, who is playing the Loew vaudeville circuit, and Paul Ash, daddy of all masters of ceremonies, ever strike you. . . . Gosh, I saw Tommy work the other day and his looks and many of his mannerisms were just like those of the "old master." . . . Ray Teal, who has done m.c.ing all over the country, is now at the Olympia, Miami, for the "winter season" . . . lucky chap. . . . There are two new organists over in Brooklyn now. . . . One, Bob West, is the "prodigal son" returned home at the Fox . . . while the other is Arlo Hults, RKO featured man. . . . Billy Long, m.c. and musical director, well known throughout the country, is now at the Ridgewood, Brooklyn . . . and doing very well. . . . The Schenectady Union-Star recently devoted an entire page to Bettye Lee Taylor, formerly of the RKO Proctors and known throughout the country as "Queen of Harmony" through her broadcasts from radio station WGY. . . . Bettye is now at RKO's new house, the Plaza, a straight picture house. . . . She is starting right out with a "Sunshine" club and also an "Organ Club" for the kiddies. . . . Dick Hartigan, who was at this house, is now featured at his old stand, the Warner in Troy. . . . George Latch is no longer "pushing the pedals" on an organ . . . No, sir . . . he's making "dough" in a different way. . . . He has gone into partnership with another former organist, John Copeland, in the baking business. . . . Ken Wright, formerly of Lloyd's, Memominee, and more recently of the State, Rhinelander, Wis., is back at his old stand. . . . Harry Zimmerman, formerly of Chicago, is now known as "Zimm, the Zippy Zestful Organist" and is at the new RKO Palace, Albany. . . . Al Forest, former Publix and Warner organist, is now at the Palace, Danbury, Conn. . . . Warren Yates, featured at the Fabian, Paterson, N. J., and over radio station WODA is a "guy" to see when you have that blue feeling. . . . He's a great fellow and everyone who knows him is anxious to join his club. . . . Yates tells me that Eddie Molteni, known as the "Old Maestro of the Fabian," in his spare moments takes a trip on the good ship, "Clarinet" . . . and that Harold Lewis (Luke the Deacon) is still on deck around those parts. . . . Don Miller, featured organist at the Olympia, Miami, has a beautiful prize Persian cat named "Cuddles," that has traveled nearly all over the United States. . . . Bing Crosby, after playing the New York Paramount for three or four months, opens at the Brooklyn Paramount the middle of this month. . . . Russ Colombo, Brooklyn's favorite, will take a band over the RKO circuit, 'tis said. . . .

ED DAWSON

BILLY MUTH (Des Moines Paramount), who is on his fifth week, continues to surprise the audiences with many different kinds of organ novelties, which, naturally, are getting him talked about, and, of course, helping him. His first solo was a "Hello," which introduced him and the singing of popular tunes by the audience. His second was a distinct departure from the first; this was a "letters" idea and in it Muth proved his ability to play difficult numbers as well as popular. The outstanding bit of this solo was his playing of "Rigoletto," the opera. For the Christmas solo he offered an orchestra-organ production which was beautifully presented. The New Year show included plenty singing numbers and the novelty of hearing him play both the organ and trumpet, simultaneously, was enthusiastically received by this audience. This week he again offers something different, this one being "A Chinese Fantasy." Though it is not as novel as his previous solos, it is being well received.

DICK LIEBERT (Jersey City Loew's) offered another of his "Sing with Dick Liebert," community-song fests this week, featuring old and new "theme songs." Liebert opens with a smart bit of talk and then goes into "Hail, Hail, the Gang's all Here," the audience clapping hands as he plays. The beautiful numbers, "Time on My Hands" and "River Stay 'Way from My Door," are then sung by the audience. Dick then has them sing two old-timers, "'Til We Meet Again" and "Moonlight and Roses." A "challenge contest" to the tune, "Goodnight Sweetheart," was next offered and then the solo closed with a special parody about well known advertisements, to the tune, "River." Audience reaction was good.

ELSIE THOMPSON and MERLE CLARK (Brooklyn Paramount) presented five practically new popular tunes for their spot in the program this week. Merle started proceedings with a smart send-off (orally) for the new numbers and then he and Elsie, who is seated at the twin console, play them in their nice style that makes singing so easy. The tunes were: "All of Me," "Too Late," "Rain on the Roof" (this was played with a special arrangement as an organ duet), "One More Kiss" and "Home." The beautiful rustic scenic effect used throughout the solo was enhanced by a rain effect on it as Miss Thompson and Mr. Clark played their duet. The audiences surely enjoy singing here, and proof of this team's popularity is in the fine applause given them after each performance.

KEN WIDENOR (Hackensack Fox) the new organist here is setting himself in well with the audience right from the start, with his efforts to give them solos, built around current events.

His first solo at this house is called "Song Show," and is explained orally by Widenor as "an exhibit of songs," and was compiled with the thought in mind that, there being so many other exhibits and shows in New York, he would offer his "Song Show."

Exhibit number one was a comedy song, "Sittin' in the Movies," with special lyrics which proved laughable to the audinece, incidently starting them off right with the following songs, which they sang: "Cryin' for the Carolines," "An Evening in Caroline," "Home" and "River Stay 'Way from My Door." It appears as if Widenor has moved into this city to stay. He is a good musician and the audience like him.

RAY TURNER (Columbus Palace) reintroduced community-singing here for the first time in two years. His opening solo was entitled "Hello Columbus" and incorporated tunes popular with the audience, who sang them very well. The opening lyric was a special, written to "Time to Fall in Love," and carried as its theme something about the prodigal song stopping his wanderings to hear how Columbus could sing. This was written in such a manner that it got a lot of laughs and "thawed" the audience quickly.

Next was a community chorus, sung rather feebly to the regular words of the first song. Turner counteracted this by giving them a clever and laughable chorus, written to "99 Out of a 100." A special "challenge" chorus of "Good Night Sweetheart," followed, and was really sung by the boys and girls. This number got them in a happy mood and when Turner followed with that old favorite, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," every one joined in the singing. Two choruses with special lyrics to "Stars and Stripes," and a final chorus of "Shine on, Harvest Moon" brought the novelty to a close. Turner is personable, a good showman and musician and if he keeps up the way he has started, the audience will want him for a long time.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) offered as his final organ solo at this house the following song slides: "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "When the Blue of the Night," "Lazy River," "Faded Summer Love" and "Sleepy Time Down South." All were presented beautifully by this organ magician and the audience sang and how! This organist has been the most popular ever to play this de luxe theatre, and his four-year stay ends with the regret of his following.

OVERTURES

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Michigan) is heard again as guest conductor of the Michigan orchestra. He selected an overture consisting of modern arrangements of the better-known Irving Berlin song hits, starting off with "This Is The Life." Then come "Alexander's Rag-Time Band," "All Alone," "Lady of the Evening" and "Everybody's Doin' It," followed by the war-time favorite, "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," into which the musicians collectively put plenty of energy. The high point of the overture is Venavie's violin solo, "Reaching for the Moon," which he plays with a delicate touch and the hand of a master musician.

DAVID MORDECAI (New York Fordham) and his RKOlians presented a "Medley of Popular Hits," as their overture for last week. Opening with a compilation of numbers, Mordecai then features a violin solo by himself of the popular tune, "Cuban Love Song." A blue spot is thrown on him as he plays and at finish of the number, this audience proved their appreciation of his efforts by applauding him very well. A real "hot" arrangement by Jack Shaines (one of the boys in the band) of the ever-popular "Tiger Rag," is used for the closing number. Mordecai is a personable and capable chap, who takes special pains to present his overtures in an up-to-date and snappy manner, and to the liking of his audiences.

YASHA BUNCHUK (New York Capitol) and the Capitolians this week presented an overture called "Radio Echoes," which was far the best presentation of its kind this great orchestra has offered in a long time. The overture incorporated numerous theme songs from popular radio broadcasts and was Mr. Bunchuk's own compilation. It ran for 12 minutes and each minute of it was entertaining.

JESSE STAFFORD (Hollywood Hollywood) and his band, still a strong draw here, offered a production overture this week which made use of not only the band of 17 but four other entertainers as well. The band appeared in a setting beautiful in its sheer simplicity. The musicians, dressed in trim naval officers' uniforms, were seated in a semi-circle of Roman pillars with only a cream colored "cyclorama" for a background. The lighting on this set was continuously changed and well handled.

"Lady of Spain" was the first band number, augmented by an unannounced Spanish dancer. Glen Dale, a very fine tenor, next favored with "Song of Songs" and "Bend Down Sister," as Gertrude Fischer offered sensational acrobatic dancing. Martha Vaughn won top honors with a beautiful rendition of "Dream Lover," though her encore, something about "Cheri," was a sad letdown. "Anchors Aweigh" played as a band number made a strong finish.

RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) and the Paramount Orchestra offer a compilation of "Friml Melodies" for their presentation. Opening with "March of the Three Musketeers," and modulating cleverly into the soothing strains of "Allah's Holiday," "Rose Marie," and "Indian Love Call," Rubinoff proved his superior knowledge of showmanship by closing with the soul-stirring "Song of the Vagabond King." Rubinoff's own violin solo, "Indian Love Call," earned him fine applause, and the entire orchestra was given an ovation.

LOU KOSLOFF (Oakland Paramount) and his orchestra offer a novelty this week in the form of a number arranged to represent a night in a clock store. The medley that has been arranged include both classical and popular numbers having to do with clocks and there is much lively winding, ticking and striking.

The inevitable "Four O'Clock in the Morning" is played with delightful abandon and the musicians have a lot of fun playing the "Blue Bells of Scotland" on bells of different tones. Full use is made of the organ, with the organist kept busy producing effects.

Lou Kosloff has gathered a splendid aggregation of musicians around him at this new house and is getting splendid results.

New Committees of the SMPE

As extensive and comprehensive as the activities of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have been, so many are the ramifications of motion picture engineering that new arms of the society are required from time to time, in order to reach out into realms hitherto unexplored. New committees must be added to the list from time to time, not only to study some of the older phases of motion picture technology, but to keep abreast of the advance of the art and the trends of the times. (As acceptances are received by the committee chairmen, personnel will be announced.)

The recent inception of a new branch of the industry, that of designing and supplying motion picture equipment for use in the home, made it necessary to establish the new Committee on Non-Theatrical Equipment, whose function it will be to study all matters relating to non-theatrical home equipment. This new committee is now in the process of formation, and is headed by R. E. Farnham, of the National Lamp Works at Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio. It is to report on the progress made in the development of home equipment, to make recommendations to the Standards Committee, and to make suggestions with regard to the various processes involved.

A new committee known as the Committee on the Development and Care of Film, under the chairmanship of R. F. Nicholson, of Fox Film Corporation, has also been created. Its function is to study and investigate the various processes through which film passes during development and fixation, and the methods of caring for the film up to the time of arrival in the projection room of the theatre.

The function of the new Committee on the Preservation of Film is to study the various requirements for preserving film, particularly film of historical interest. This committee, under the chairmanship of W. H. Carson, of the Agfa Ansco Company at Binghamton, N. Y., is to collaborate with representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the National Fire Protection Association, and of the United States Government, with regard to methods of storing, preserving, and making suitable copies for use, of films of historical interest to be stored in the National Archives Building, recently provided for in the Congressional budget. The data and information on these subjects which will be obtained by the committee will be of great value also to producers and exchanges, with regard to the methods of storing and preserving film which they are now using.

Another new committee, known as the Museum Committee, has been formed under the chairmanship of W. E. Theisen, of Hollywood. The function of this committee is to search for and solicit motion picture apparatus, samples of film, etc., of historical interest and worthy of preservation in a suitable museum selected for the purpose. This committee is to collaborate with the Historical Committee in discovering relics worthy of preservation and in determining their value as contributions to the art of motion picture engineering.

The reports of these new committees, together with those of the older committees, will be published from time to time in the Journal of the Society. Any information regarding their activities and the results obtained therefrom, and regarding membership in the Society or subscription to the Journal may be obtained from the General Office of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at 33 West 42nd Street, New York.

Aperture Standards

During the past month or so the Standards Committee of the SMPE has been busily engaged in studying the problem of establishing dimensional standards for the apertures of projectors. Although the introduction of sound into the picture took place several years ago, no efforts were made to revise the size of the picture frame to conform to the space requirements of the sound track. Accordingly, the available photographic area ceased to have the 3 x 4 ratio which was always desired, and the projectionists of necessity had to adjust the aperture opening of the projectors to provide a shape of picture more pleasing to the eye than the almost square shape provided by the available picture area of the film. As a result, the image of parts of the action photographed on the film, particularly the tops and bottoms, never reached the screen.

The recommendations recently made by the SMPE Standards Committee provide for aperture dimensions of 0.590 inch in height by 0.825 inch in width, the increase in width admitting of an increase in the width of the action being photographed, and the particular value chosen for the height providing for a picture of pleasing proportions in class "A" theatres employing projection angles as great as 27 degrees.

The Standards Committee is also beginning an intensive study of the problems facing the introduction of 16 mm. sound on film equipment. The standardization at as early a date as possible, of matters relating to the design and production of this equipment is of considerable importance, for, by virtue of the means employed to arrive at such standardizations, the particular standards adopted will reflect the concerted opinions of those vitally interested in the matter, and will indicate a definite path to be followed, thereby avoiding much confusion that would follow if each were to go his separate way.

SMPE Fellowship

Through the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and due primarily to the efforts made by Mr. J. I. Crabtree, president of the society during the past two years, to interest in the project various individuals and corporations, Mr. George Eastman of the Eastman Kodak Company very generously donated $1,500 for the establishment of a fellowship at a university to be decided upon by the society.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Governors of the SMPE it was decided that the University of Rochester be invited to accept this fellowship: and that although the administration of the fellowship is to be left entirely in the hands of the University accepting it, the society will be glad to assist in its administration through the medium of the Projection Theory Committee.

The purpose of creating the fellowship is to enable the recipient, by conducting researches on problems directly concerned with or cognate to motion picture engineering, to add to the store of information on motion picture technology already collected, and being collected, by many individuals and corporations, and particularly by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Washington Convention

The Spring (1932) Convention of the SMPE is to be held in Washington, D. C., May 9 to 12, inclusive. Convention headquarters are to be at the Wardman Park hotel, where the technical sessions are to be held. Special convention rates are to be provided by the hotel for members of the society attending the convention.

An interesting program is being arranged by the Papers Committee, under the chairmanship of O. M. Glunt, and by the Convention Arrangements Committee, under the chairmanship of W. C. Kunzmann.

New Bell and Howell Lens

Bell & Howell, Chicago equipment manufacturers, announces a new Varo lens, which, it is claimed, makes it possible to approach or recede from the object being photographed without moving the camera. It is also claimed that closeups can be taken without any extraneous noise.

Critical definition is said to be possible at any distances. The lens will be manufactured, according to the manufacturers only on special order.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

FOR YOU

HO! HUM! LEO DOES IT AGAIN!

'Tarzan' Bangs At Sneak Preview

San Diego.—The MGM crowd sneaked out of Culver City with 15 reels of their latest picture, "Tarzan," and sprung it on an unexpecting audience in the North Park theatre, a neighborhood house seating 1500, every seat in the house being filled, as this is the first time it has ever shown a preview.

It looks as if MGM has another smash, maybe one equal to "Trader Horn," in this production. The audience was highly enthusiastic and at one time, when the film broke, and there was a delay, it was easy to recognize this enthusiasm

THIS CLIPPING from the Hollywood Reporter gives you just a faint idea of what the motion picture colony is talking about today!

"TARZAN, THE APE MAN"

is being discussed at every studio, by every producer and director as one more "fast one" pulled by that M-G-M crowd! Not since "Trader Horn" such excitement. Wait! You'll see. Meanwhile, stick close to your pal—Leo, that good old Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lion!

Vol. 106, No. 7 — February 13, 1932

WHAT "THE INDUSTRY" IS

THE mid-winter season of speaking before clubs, committees, associations and the like, listening to pleas for "better movies," listening to clamors for art, listening to demands for "cultural values," brings us to the opinion that it is about time that it be recorded for the guidance of all and sundry that a number of these concerns are none of ours, neither "ours" editorially, personally nor yet institutionally as representing the motion picture.

It would be wholesome and beneficial to all involved if it could only be clearly understood that there is in truth no such institution as "the motion picture industry" of which we all so often so glibly speak.

What we mean when we speak of "the industry" is in truth precisely this: that portion of the amusement business which utilizes the camera and the screen as its tools of expression and purveyance. Because of the excellence of this machine tool system, and the ready mechanical duplication of its products it has come to be the dominant element of the amusement business.

It is neither the purpose, the intent nor the possibility of the amusement business to apply the camera to other purposes than amusement. Educational, cultural and scientific pictures will never be successfully made as by-products of the amusement industry. Technological facilities may be loaned for experiments in such endeavors, but the results will always be experiments.

"The motion picture industry" will get about as far in the serious concerns of education and science as Constance Bennett, Jean Harlow and The Garbo would as preceptresses in a female seminary.

Not a little of the embarrassment which "the industry" occasionally faces comes as a result of the easy promises of important cooperation to influential or troublesome persons with causes which in fact the amusement business cannot serve. The usual final result is a letter of introduction to a newsreel editor who cannot do anything about it either. This is the amusement business, which incidentally uses the motion picture mechanism. Other businesses, other interests and causes can use it, too, but not on the same lot.

THE OLD RED ROOSTER

BY official announcement from Joseph I. Schnitzer the Pathe rooster trademark passes from the screen with the passing of the RKO Pathe trademark in the combination under the Radio banner for all dramatic product. However, the belligerent Gallic gamecock, selected as an emblem by Mr. Charles Pathe in Paris more than a quarter of a century ago and oldest surviving trademark of the industry, will, on the word of Mr. Courtland Smith, continue on Pathe News, which has presented the doughty bird since 1910.

"MASS THINKING"

THOMAS J. WATSON, president of the Merchant's Association of New York, told a session of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, the other day, that: "A few years ago we got into mass thinking, and I think that is one of the reasons we got into this trouble ordinarily called 'the depression.' But now we are getting back to individual thinking."

There is a significance to the motion picture industry, from Hollywood to Times Square and way stations, in that term "mass thinking." With the unanimity of mass thought the industry in the last few pre-depression years was doing precisely those things that it is busy undoing now, among them super-circuiting, over-building and over-elaborating in general.

By mass impetus things went wrong, but by individual acumen, enterprise and daring the recovery is coming. The new successes ahead will be won by men working hard in the courage of their individual convictions, not by surf board riders on a flood tide. "Mass thinking" is really not thinking at all. Thinking is a one man job, in this and every other industry.

ALL WASHED UP

A GREAT New York department store has just completed an investigation of 20,000 typical homes of customers. Deep in the report one makes the startling discovery that in 40 per cent of these homes the husband helps with the dishes after dinner. This is important to the amusement industry. The movement should be encouraged, liberating the household earlier and permitting its members to yield to that motion picture urge.

BROADWAY DIRT

A GREAT deal has been said by press and pulpit on this subject of Broadway dirt, but at last some scientific facts about the atmosphere of that gay street are becoming available. Professor H. H. Sheldon of the physics department of New York University has just completed some investigations, using the air filtering mechanism of the Roxy Theatre to make the tests upon which he has based his calculations. In a week, a typical week, the Roxy air machine handled 341,250,000 cubic feet of air, and from it enough dirt was extracted to show that in the trillion cubic feet of air over the city of New York there are no less than 2,000 tons of dirt, cinders, etc., on clear days. On windy days there is more. This report is pleasing in many respects. In the first place the figures are large enough to command respect even among motion picture statistics, and, second, they tend to indicate that one may breathe easier in a motion picture theatre than elsewhere. That ought to be a business building argument.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

"PSYCHED"

The WORLD-TELEGRAM in NEW YORK deplores, editorially, the "psyching" of Mickey Mouse by dealers in complexes and inhibitions, thus:

Mickey Mouse has been banned in a Scandinavian country as mentally unwholesome, and is diagnosed in Germany as a victim of paranoiacal dementia.

That would happen. Poor Mickey is being "psyched" by the scientific gentlemen whose preoccupation in life is to delve into any mental quirk that seems to them to be outside the range of sanity as catalogued in their card-index. They are the "norm" boys, and so they are bothered by Mickey, whose antics lie beyond their comprehension.

That the gay, mad, little mouse belongs to that fantastic land of which Alice and Bottom and all of the pixies and elves of the Irish fairy tales are denizens is nothing to them. Nor can they comprehend that the world of make-believe is a real one and that into it creep at times the children of all ages, to whom the nagging cares of a work-a-day existence compels some escape.

Mickey mad? His sanity is proven every day to thousands of believers. His antics are those of the completely free individual, the defier of time and gravitation and pain and all of the other laws by which comformists are punished.

It will be a sad time for a sad world when the emancipated Mickey is looked upon as something pathological. Despite what dealers in "complexes" and "inhibitions" say, he seems the symbol of freedom, and as such we wish him a long and useful life.

FOR THE CODE

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR of BOSTON, under the editorial heading of "Self-Discipline in the Movies," records an attitude of approbation for "The Code" and sees it a milestone of progress, thus:

A recent incident in the motion picture business revealed the strength of the code under which the leading film producers in the United States have agreed to operate. As a safeguard this code has proved efficient to bring into line a producer who protested against the verdict within the industry that certain scenes in his latest picture should come out, both in consideration of the good name of the industry and to avoid an easily foreseen conflict with the censorship authorities in several states.

In one state the censor had already ruled that the picture could not be shown as prepared for exhibition by the producer. The other producers, acting in concert under their code, supported in effect the contention of this censor and pointed out how the objectionable elements could be removed. These corrections, it is declared, are the same as those proposed by one of the men whose duty it is to expound the code in Hollywood when this same story was submitted to him before it was filmed. His warnings were ignored, only to be observed finally in editing the picture in New York.

After the editing it was approved alike by the state censor and by the united producing interests. The producer involved became reconciled to operating under the code when he realized that all the theatres in the circuits controlled by the other producers would be closed to his picture unless it was revised, and to this was added his natural satisfaction when the revised picture was in immediate demand for many simultaneous showings.

American film producers as a group have definitely learned by a study of various censorship rulings the limit to which it is permissible to go in their films, and their production code is a summary of the compromises of "artistic liberty" with certain generally accepted standards of public good taste. That such a code should exist at all is a good sign. It is a milestone marking a slow but perceptible progress toward better things in popular entertainment.

BLAMING US

THE EVENING POST of NEW YORK presents some poignant remarks by Thornton Delehanty on the matter of blaming the pictures for everything, and especially the British habit of blaming the American film, thus:

When anything goes more than usually wrong in England you can be pretty sure that the press will blame it on the American movies. Everything from kidnaping to mayhem is held to be traceable to Hollywood, as if there could be no other motive for crime than that which springs full-grown from the overheated brow of a movie addict.

Thus it is not surprising to find the English newspapers ascribing the prison break at Dartmoor to such pictures as "The Big House," "The Secret Six," "Numbered Men," and others of that school. . . .

In their eagerness to make a scapegoat of the American cinema and thus absolve the Dartmoor rebels from any suspicion of delinquency could it be that the English editors have forgotten a British film made several years ago which dealt with the escape of a prisoner from Dartmoor? . . .

. . . The film was called "Escaped from Dartmoor," and it doesn't seem possible that with such a title it could have failed to reach the attention of at least one inmate of the famous prison. . . .

KEEPING NEW

LIONEL BARRYMORE is interviewed at length in the Evening Post of New York on what pictures are really made of. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Barrymore said:

The story is the basic thing in motion pictures today.

The work of this and that player or the device of this and that director, is in itself nothing, except as it affects the telling of the story itself.

The public may swarm to view the work of an actor or a director once, twice, or perhaps three times, but that person must keep constantly changing the basic principle of the medium in which he is working to continue to attract public acclaim.

That is, the actor must keep appearing in new types of roles, the director must keep presenting new types of stories.

An actor or a director who continues to do the same type of work, picture after picture, is standing still, no matter how excellent and expert his work may be in the small circle in which he is revolving.

The public demands new things constantly. That's why they keep running after new screen faces. And the turnover in Hollywood favorites is tremendous, because so many of them strike a popular note, get into a rut, and the public tires of them.

COMMITTEE STARTS WRITING TAX BILL; INDUSTRY AWAITS DECISION

IMPPA Members Agree on Quality And Not Quantity

The members of the newly organized Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association have agreed to discard former methods of hasty story construction and rapid production methods in favor of more attention to selection and preparation of stories than has been the practice heretofore, a statement from the temporary headquarters of the organization in New York indicates.

There is a definite possibility that there will be a shortage of product in independent production. In some instances the number of pictures originally intended for production will be reduced from 25 per cent to 35 per cent, in keeping with the agreement to improve the quality of independent product, at the sacrifice of quantity. All members of the organization are expected shortly to announce their revised production schedules.

The statement points out that a feeling of "friendly rivalry" has been created within the ranks of the new association, and that a spirit of "genuine cooperation" has been engendered.

Keough Secretary For Paramount

Austin C. Keough, general counsel of Paramount Publix, was elected secretary and a member of the board of directors at a meeting of the board on Monday. Keough fills the board vacancy created by the resignation of Sidney R. Kent several weeks ago, and the secretaryship vacated by Elek J. Ludvigh. Keough has been associated with the Paramount legal department for the past 12 years. The vacancy caused by the recent death of William Wrigley, Jr., is still to be filled.

Executives of the company declined to comment on reports that Philip K. Wrigley, son of the late Paramount director, was to become active in Paramount affairs.

Paramount announced the appointment this week of Carl R. Hammer as director of real estate and purchasing of the company. Hammer has been operating vice-president of McCord Radiator and Manufacturing Company of Detroit for the past 12 years. He will be in charge of realty, supply purchases, maintenance and the purchase of insurance.

James C. Bolger, formerly with United Cigar Stores and Schulte, who recently was made head of the realty department, to succeed the late Theodore C. Young, is now in charge of detail work in the realty department.

Details of Measure Will Not Be Made Known Before Mar. 1; Not Intended to Be Retroactive So Haste Is Eliminated

The fate of proposed federal legislation governing the taxation of amusements will not become known for two weeks. With the receipt on Tuesday of revised estimates from the treasury department of the many and divers forms of revenues to be derived from the various taxes on which the recent hearings of the House ways and means committee touched, members of that committee began the writing of the bill in executive session on Wednesday.

Revised estimates of admission tax revenues submitted by Treasury officials to the committee were withheld, nor would the committee make known the extent to which the revisions would influence the admission tax phase of the new bill, which will not be completely written until March 1.

Not To Be Retroactive

With the decision not to make the new taxes retroactive, all need for haste in the drafting of the new measure has been eliminated and leaders of the committee are determined to make a thorough study of all possibilities and to weigh minutely the arguments advanced against amusement taxation, and other forms, before settling upon the final draft by which it is hoped the Administration's deficit and budget will be balanced in two years.

With the work just started, there is little possibility of determining for at least two weeks what attitude will be taken to the treasury department's recommendation that admission tickets over ten cents be taxed on the basis of 10 per cent. It is generally believed, however, that the committee will first devote itself to the new income and inheritance rates and then proceed to a discussion of new taxes from which large sums of money may be expected, including those on gas, electricity, telephones and gasoline. After the rates on such items have been fixed and the amount of revenue therefrom estimated, the committee will "fill up the chinks" as best it can with a view to raising at least two billions in two years.

Seen Only As Last Resort

The consensus on Capitol Hill at Washington, which, however, is likely to change from day to day, is that admission taxes will only be imposed as a last resort and, if adopted, will only affect tickets of more than 50 cents. However, possibilities of an admission tax are seen in revised Treasury figures, according to inside legislative observers, and these figures show that several hundred million dollars less will be derived by the Government from ordinary income sources during this and the next fiscal year than originally was estimated in November, making necessary the provision of a much larger sum in taxation than was at first anticipated.

The treasury department's estimates show also reductions in the revenues to be expected from the various revenues proposed by the Administration when Congress convened in December.

According to dispatches from Washington on Wednesday, taxes must be boosted from the original estimate of $920,000,000 to $1,241,000,000 to carry out the Government's budget-balancing program. This was made known this week by acting Secretary of the Treasury Mills.

The ways and means committee also is considering a general sales tax, as present sources of revenue and those proposed would not provide the needed increases, according to the Washington dispatches.

It is pointed out at Washington that the appointment of Andrew W. Mellon, former secretary of the treasury, as ambassador to England will have no effect upon the administration's tax policy. The administration's program reflects not only the views of Mr. Mellon but also those of the new secretary, Ogden Mills, as well as President Hoover and his advisors.

Organized Labor Protest

Matthew W. Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, emphatically stated in an editorial in the American Photo Engraver this week that organized labor is unalterably opposed to President Hoover's plan to resume wartime ticket taxes. He describes the proposed levy as "foolish" and warranting "swift and overwhelming defeat."

The editorial read in part: "Opposed to every form of sales tax, organized labor opposes with particular vigor and determination the proposal to tax the nation's amusements. Here is in very truth a proposition to 'take the joy out of life' at a time when there is almost no joy to be found for anyone.

"If we had a dictatorship and if the dictatorship had any wisdom the dictator would say in these hours of desperation, 'let the places of amusement be free from all taxation restraint, let them be given all possible encouragement, let the people find it easy to enter.' . . ."

AN IMPRESSIVE WARNER ACHIEVEMENT

A Motion Picture, Not a "Movie," Is "The Man Who Played God," Done With Taste, Feeling

By TERRY RAMSAYE

Again, it seems the Brothers Warner have done something cinematographically impressive and significant. The word has been around a while that "The Man Who Played God" was rather an exceptional piece of production. Word starts that way in this business and gets going, oftentimes with more velocity than provocation. This time the provocation is greater than the velocity.

In sum, this "The Man Who Played God," with Mr. George Arliss, is most importantly a motion picture, as opposed to a movie. It is done with taste, feeling and restraint. It is a story redolent of sentiment, without hokum. If it is hokum then it is the super-hokum of art. It is one of the better utilizations of the talking picture as a medium of record and expression, done with able craftsmanship, and, pleasantly to record, by John Adolfi directing, the same Adolfi who has had ample experience in the great field of better silent production of the years agone. With a story to tell that reposes mostly in words and ideas, he did not forget that dramatic lines may be expressed within the frames of good pictorial composition. So much of picture as there was inherent in the story to tell is presented with pictorial competency. Pictorial competency is rarer than it should be.

The production is from a story by Gouverneur Morris and, with due respect to that author's ample attainments in his medium, its picture version sets one thinking what charming possibilities remain for a like sympathetic treatment to any number of somewhat kindred stories by the late Sydney Porter, better known as O. Henry.

As I write, having within the hour emerged from the Warner projection room, I am minded a moment of a conversation of years agone with that astute student and mistress of screen story telling, Miss Anita Loos, who asserted that he who does not put hokum on the screen has overlooked its only strength. I would like, now that these years and sound and talk have intervened, to talk to Miss Loos again, right after she had seen "The Man Who Played God." Here in this production is evidence indeed in support of a proclamation I ventured, so many years ago I would rather not count the years on my fingers, that the motion picture is the superseding medium, the inheritor and successor of the older arts. In its flambuoyance of youth, in its rash adventurous early years of placer mining success, it gave the neighbors reason to raise eyebrows and hope for the worst. Now, in such glints of attainment as this, the screen is forecasting its larger career.

It may be of no immediate concern to the Brothers Warner, but here is a motion picture worthy of the study of that considerable array of persons who would like to find something on the screen worthy of study. The technique is neither a miracle nor marvelous. If that were true, it might be an accident. What is important here, in that consideration, is sheer competency, a competency with which none of the well known fetishes of Hollywood apparently have been permitted to interfere. Just aside, between the reader and me, the side bet is made that the conferences that preceded the production and shipment of the first print to New York must have been rare dramatic spectacles on their own.

HARRY M. WARNER JACK L. WARNER

. . have done something impressive and significant . .

Primarily, as editor of Motion Picture Herald, I am naturally concerned with what this picture may be worth to the motion picture exhibitor. He chances to be the person for whom I work and write. I will venture the promise to the exhibitor that "The Man Who Played God" will be worth to him not only what his showmanship may directly return at the box office, but also a deal of continuing value to his theatre. The Latins had a phrase for it—"institutional value"—but that is a cliche, a bit threadbare. This is not at all a picture, I should say, to be violently sold, but a picture to be ably and sincerely sold, because it will help keep the motion picture sold.

It is, to be sure, obvious enough that there is an exceptional aspect of this picture, or Motion Picture Herald and I would not be devoting a page to such an outgiving as this. I am genuinely sorry that this picture is as exceptional as it seems to me to be, because it seems entirely possible to make them all competent. But even in a field of fair competency this one would stand out. It is tremendously important as a mark of the capacity of the industry to make a product which will support the institution of the motion picture theatre, with screen wares aimed at a public that wants to be entertained and would prefer to be cleanly entertained.

It just so happens that the motion picture, being as inescapably costly as it is, has to be a mass business first and an art afterward, which fact causes the inclusion of quite a few moral considerations. "The Man Who Played God" offers to the industry in general and the exhibitor in particular an excellent piece of moral defense. The medium which tells this story is a good language, even if some bad boys do tell dirty stories in it.

It would seem that "The Man Who Played God" offers opportunity, not only to entertain the habitual motion picture customers, with considerable assurance of their satisfaction, but also to invite in persons from that marginal public which ought to contain more box office patronage and less disdain.

A word, perhaps, ought to be said for the usual able performance of Mr. Arliss. He does not appear to be acting. And, of a whole cast happily competent, one might also make mention of Bette Davis, Violet Heming, Ivan Simpson and Oscar Apfel, the same Oscar who in other years achieved fame as a director.

It may well be added that, motion picture tradition and practice being what it is, no synopsis of the story is an adequate basis for judgment of the picture or its manner of story telling. Maybe that word manner is the one I have been looking for this last hour. It is a tremendously human story of some decidedly intimate aspects told effectively with good manners.

Kirk L. Russell of the Hays organization addressed the following laudatory communication to H. M. Warner, president of Warner-First National, after viewing "The Man Who Played God," starring George Arliss:

"Dear Mr. Warner:

"'The Man Who Played God' deeply moved me.

"There would be less jumping from forty-second-story windows and 'ending it all' if this picture could be seen first.

"It's great! Great!

"I'm proud of the industry that brings such pictures to the screen. I sincerely hope it is a success and I will do all I can to make it so."

Endorse "Man Who Played God"

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, in its motion picture reviews for February listed Warners' "The Man Who Played God" as "outstanding for adults and young adults." The film, to be generally released February 20, has been recommended also by the American Library Association, headquarters in Cleveland.

"Word Not Final" Loeb Says of New Duties for MPPDA

Edwin J. Loeb, Los Angeles attorney, has issued a formal statement defining his duties as Coast attorney for the Hays organization, in order to correct a misunderstanding which was published by news agencies over the country.

Loeb pointed out that the new duties assigned him by Hays are hardly more than an amplification of the work his law firm has been doing for the producers for some years. The new activities will have to do with arbitration of local contracts between the studios, he indicated.

Loeb made clear that he has no responsibility for the arbitration of any dispute between the companies and employees, those matters going automatically to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and its conciliation committee. "Any talk about my being the arbiter or arbitrator over the western activites of the amusement business is ridiculous, untrue and without foundation in fact," Loeb said. He explained that either party to any dispute into which he is called as arbitrator, has the right of appeal to a committee of the companies' executives. In any such case, he said, "My word is not final."

2,000 Nuns See Arliss Film As Guests of Warner Brothers

Warner Brothers was host to 2,000 Catholic nuns—teachers in parochial schools of the Metropolitan area, including Long Island and New Jersey—at a special preview of George Arliss' "The Man Who Played God," held last Saturday at the Warner theatre on Broadway.

The preview was arranged in conjunction with the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnæ, and with the feature were shown "Washington—the Man and the Capital," a two-reel subject, and newsreel scenes of the Chinese-Japanese conflict. At the conclusion of the performance, Albert Howson of Warners greeted the sisters on behalf of the company. Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau, presented Mrs. Philip E. Brennan, president of the International Federation, and the Reverend Francis Talbot, literary editor of "America," and director of the Bureau.

Hoffman to East to Arrange Five-Year Distribution Plan

M. H. Hoffman, head of Allied Productions, arrives in New York next week to supervise arrangements for the introduction of his "five-year franchise plan" of distribution. The company will release 26 features each year for the next five years.

Hoffman's scheme is the first move in the effort to coordinate the work of independent producers, aiming at the elimination of the "peddling" of production and giving exchanges a reliable source of product. He will take up the matter of the new organization on his arrival in the East.

"Man Who Played God"

Warner Brothers have produced a motion picture which challenges the attention—and the respect—of the industry and the public at large.

The subject is "The Man Who Played God." The star is George Arliss.

Among the legitimately fine productions of the screen this picture, by virtue of its genuineness, assumes a lofty and imposing position.

It is that rare article which will shed an aura of credit and compliment upon its producers and upon the medium of expression and entertainment which has made it possible. To the carping critics, the bigoted meddlers and to all of those who shallowly and cheaply scoff at the motion picture this industry need articulate no better reply than that presented by the motion picture, "The Man Who Played God."

There is in this picture the superb artistry of George Arliss who in his accustomed manner dominates the screen with a compelling mastery of voice and movement. The story treatment which was done from an original short-story, which was dramatized for the stage, is a work of unusual excellence. The direction by John G. Adolfi discloses the competence the high occasion called for. Assisting Mr. Arliss are a group of finished players, each of whom contributes appropriate quota to the final result.

But "The Man Who Played God" is not to be measured alone by the ordinary standards of a good motion picture. It has in it elements of story value, a fineness, a legitimacy, an inspirational import which set it apart and above the ordinary entertainment. This play, done with no sacrifice whatsoever to the clap-trap, is a persuasive document proving not what might be done by some imaginary and idealistic race of people to whom the ranting reformer would turn over the business of producing motion pictures—but what actually can be done by the Hollywood of reality, the production colony that has grown up with the motion picture.

There is an element of timeliness in this production which gives it added importance. At a time when the world is racked with skepticism and distress the telling of this story of the only lasting source of human happiness—as effectively as it is here told and to the millions that it will be told—may, conceivably, accomplish much more than ambitious plans of government and society.

We do not say to exhibitors that "The Man Who Played God" should be presented on account of the credit it reflects upon the industry. No one need go out of his way in any spirit of self-sacrifice to run this picture. It is not that kind of a picture. It needs no ballyhoo of propaganda.

It will make its own way—straight to the heart of the public.

Schulberg Denies Rothacker Will Take Levee's Position

Al Rothacker and Emanuel Cohen arrived on the Coast last Saturday, and were met by B. P. Schulberg, Paramount studio head.

Cohen called his arrival, "a regular visit to Hollywood and my duties are to coordinate east and west activities of Paramount." Schulberg denied that "Rothacker will replace M. C. Levee as studio executive or that he will join Paramount in any capacity."

Television, Inc., Sues 6 Firms For $25,000,000 on Licenses

Television Laboratories, Inc., has been sued in the New York supreme court for $25,000,000 damages by William P. Cox and Television, Inc. Three of the defendant's directors and six other corporations were named in the action.

Television, Inc., charges repudiation of a contract made with the plaintiffs by Television Laboratories for exclusive license for use of television and radio inventions and patents owned or controlled by the Laboratories. Co-defendants are International Telephone and Telegraph Company, Mackay Radio and Telegraph Corporation, Orange Securities Corporation, Radio Corporation of America, Wired Radio, Inc., Philadelphia Storage Battery Company.

RKO QUIETS DOWN AS BROWN RETURNS

RKO President Confers With Sarnoff and Owen D. Young; Kent Leaving for Florida on Vacation of Several Weeks

The hubbub created last week in the affairs of Radio-Keith-Orpheum over the negotiations between David Sarnoff, president of RCA, and Sidney Kent, under which Kent was slated for an important post in RKO, quieted down over the last weekend.

Hiram Brown, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, arrived Saturday from Hollywood where he had been completing a reorganization of the studios.

Sidney R. Kent was scheduled to leave for Florida Thursday to be away for several weeks after an illness which had confined him to his apartment for several days.

Believe Negotiations Suspended

It was generally accepted along Broadway that Sarnoff and Kent had not reached any agreement under which Kent was to join RKO and that the negotiations had been suspended without obligation on either side. Meanwhile reports linked Kent's name with two other companies and it was expected that Kent would reach no decision until his return from Florida.

Immediately after Hiram Brown arrived in New York he held a series of conferences with Sarnoff and Owen D. Young, chairman of General Electric, during which it is reported he defended his administration of the company's affairs over the last three-year period. One of the principal phases of Brown's administration which came in for favorable consideration was the fact that Brown had not permitted RKO to engage in the theatre buying activities of 1929, a development to which have been attributed many of the financial difficulties of some of the companies.

Rogers Move Postponed

Hiram Brown declared that he has not concluded any deal with Charles R. Rogers, whereby RKO would distribute a proposed series of 10 or 12 action melodramas to be produced by Rogers, Brown said on Tuesday. He did not say, however, that such a deal was impossible, but rather that negotiations, reported postponed from an earlier conference on Rogers' previous New York visit, had not yet been re-opened.

Lee Marcus, Radio vice-president, returned this week from the Coast, in company with Ned Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution of RKO and RKO Pathe, and Richard Dix, actor. Marcus will in the future supervise the company with Ned Depinet, vice-president as part of his work between the home office and the Coast. Marcus will be Radio and RKO Pathe studio representative when in New York, and official representative of the sales department when on the Coast.

Four men have been eliminated from the executive ranks of Radio in a move which was described by Hiram Brown as the natural result of the merging of two organizations, in order to eliminate the inefficiency of two men doing the work of one. Those who have left are E. H. Goldstein, T. S. Delehanty, E. W. Ballentyne and John MacAloon. All held posts previously with RKO Pathe.

Frank Kennedy has taken over supervision of RKO field representatives, following Ballentyne's resignation.

Goldstein was personnel director before the merger; Delehanty handled sales abroad. Ballentyne was manager of exchange operations and MacAloon was assistant to Ned Depinet, when the latter handled the western sales division for Radio and RKO Pathe.

Radio has stopped work on "The March of a Nation" to concentrate on an oriental war feature, "The Roar of the Dragon," starring Richard Dix under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Edgar Wallace, Famed Mystery Author, Dead in Beverly Hills

Edgar Wallace, author of mystery stories and under contract to Radio Pictures as a screen writer, died early Wednesday at his home in Beverly Hills, Cal., following a comparatively short period of illness. Double pneumonia, which set in about one week ago, was the direct cause of death.

Wallace, long noted as a writer of widely read detective and mystery fiction, came from England recently to do screen work for Radio on the Coast. His wife, two young daughters and a son survive. Mrs. Wallace had left England earlier in the week on receipt of information that her husband was seriously ill.

Runs Trailer Explaining Protection, Availability

Henry Sommers, manager of the Paramount, Hamilton, Ohio, is runing a daily trailer briefly explaining in substance the operation of protection and availability because many of his patrons inquired why pictures were not shown in Hamilton as soon as in Cincinnati, 20 miles distant.

"We are often asked why we do not show pictures as soon as Cincinnati," the trailer announces. "It is simply a matter of geography," it continues in explanation. "Under an iron-bound trade agreement, pictures cannot be shown in a location like Hamilton until two weeks after they have played the adjacent key center. We assure you that pictures will be shown here at the earliest possible time, and we ask that you see them at this theatre at our regular prices. Among the pictures soon to be presented here, and which we recommend as excellent entertainment are . . ." Then follows a list of features booked.

Barsky, Goldburg to Produce

Bud Barsky and Jesse Goldburg have joined in the production on the Coast of 18 features for the independent market. Goldburg is at the moment in New York, conferring with Sol Lesser and Frank R. Wilson.

Special Patriotic Shows Planned to Honor Washington

Exhibitors of the nation are urged to cooperate with the United States George Washington Bi-Centennial Commission to make an outstanding success of the observance which starts officially February 22. Executives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and members of the organization's Washington convention committee are addressing a special appeal to all theatre men, in line with a general proclamation just issued by President Hoover.

Special shows, with emphasis on the patriotic phase and prominence given to the Bi-Centennial in program and publicity, are proposed by the MPTOA headquarters. To this end President M. A. Lightman and other officers have arranged with Congressman Sol Bloom, director of the commission, to give the theatre owners definite assistance in shaping the patriotic appeal, and letters may be addressed to either the commission at Washington or to the MPTOA at 1600 Broadway, New York.

A special Bi-Centennial program is being arranged for the opening of the MPTOA national convention at the Mayflower hotel in Washington on Monday, March 14. Government officials and commission members will attend. This ceremony, which will be witnessed by theatre men from all parts of the country, will have different phases allotted to the motion picture industry in recognition of the part that the screen can play in promoting public programs.

This observance meeting will be the first move of any industry as a whole in cooperating with the official celebration, which will continue for several months.

Among the suggestions advanced is that theatre men arrange with their city officials, the newspapers, and such patriotic organizations as the Daughters of the American Revolution and the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars in making city-wide events of the celebration.

Crosby to Aid Universal Film

"The Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood," Universal's new Sidney-Murray feature now in production, will have a coast-to-coast radio tieup on Saturday evening, when Bing Crosby, radio crooner, will introduce for the first time on the air "Where Are You (Girl of My Dreams)," one of the songs from the picture.

RE-ARRIVED. (Right) Ethel Clayton today, and still a personage of the films. Favorite of another day, she will be "coming back" in Tiffany's "Hotel Continental."

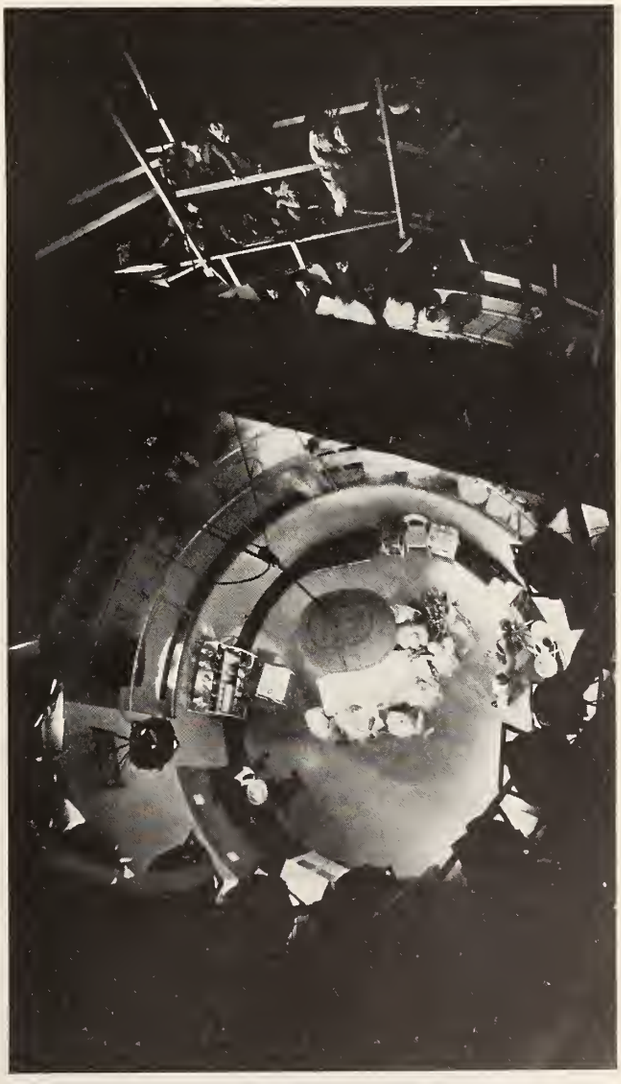
MOTORING IN LILLIPUT. (Left) With a modern Gulliver attending. These tiny people are some of the unconventionally constructed folk who appear in M-G-M's production, "Freaks." Showing them to their car is Tod Browning, the director thereof.

YOUTH. (Right) Perennially so, it seems, for Mary Brian, she having been youth's interpreter on the screen since long before sound. In her latest role, she is opposite Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in Warners' "It's Tough to Be Famous."

MORE HOLLYWOOD SNOW. But not the real stuff that did fall a few weeks ago, much to the discomfort of local chambers of commerce. This snow is much more Hollywoodian. But the setting, though synthetic, serves its purpose—to display Universal's new player, Arletta Duncan.

ALL LIGHTED UP. A corner of the Paramount studio generously endowed with interesting studio equipment, technical and otherwise. Of course you've recognized Lupe Velez sitting among all this wattage. And what wattage! Each burns a 1,000-watt tubular lamp, and if you know what's watt, you can appreciate what Miss Velez' thermal condition was when this picture was snapped.

THE UBIQUITOUS MIKE. (Right) Even the village station, where once the less active natives could wait for No. 10 without shifting a leg, isn't safe any more. For instance: These disturbers are members of Warners "The Famous Ferguson Case" company.



AS SHE IS. (Left) She likes to be tough—on the screen. She does it so well she gets paid to be hard-boiled in Educational's "Hollywood Girl" comedies. But actually, of course, she is quite as you see her here.

THE MUSICIAN. An interpretation by George Arliss of a musical mood. Blues? An eerie voice in minors, surely, coming from an unreal world—and strangely finding a kindred spirit here. An interesting study of a sensitive interpreter of just such moods. This picture shows the Warner Brothers star as in his role in "The Man Who Played God."

AS THE ELECTRICIANS SEE IT. A dynamic shot of a set from the heaven-ward quarters of the studio lighting technicians, taken at the Warner studio by Irving Lippman during the filming of an operating room sequence for Richard Barthelmess' new production, "Alias the Doctor."

FILM CRITICS TALLY WITH RECEIPTS SAYS McCARTHY; NOT SO ON STAGE

Points to Many Outstanding Pictures Correctly Evaluated By Critics in Light of Business Done With the Film

The newspaper critic of the stage has, in general, proved himself a poor judge of the dramatic production from the standpoint of box office return, while the critic of the motion picture has made uniformly correct appraisal of the large majority of outstanding screen achievements. When the film critic has highly praised a picture, the financial result has been, almost without exception, a reflection of that praise. Likewise, when the critic has unfavorably commented on a film, it has failed of response from the public at the box office. This, in a word, is the summation of recollections of J. J. McCarthy, long identified in important capacities with both stage and screen, and William A. Brady, stage producer.

The critic of the motion picture has been at least 90 per cent correct from the standpoint of box office return, in Mr. McCarthy's belief.

Points to Examples

Numerous examples of outstanding films which have been correctly evaluated by motion picture critics in the light of the business done at the box office, were noted by Mr. McCarthy.

"The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East," "The Covered Wagon," "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Common Clay," "Bad Girl," "The Spoilers," "The Christian," "Cabiria," "The Miracle Man," "Two Orphans"; all received excellent notices from the motion picture critics, as Mr. McCarthy recalls; all were great, some tremendous, at the film theatre box offices over the country.

Mr. Brady, called the oldest theatrical manager in the American theatre, recently devoted himself to an idle penthoused half-hour of retrospection. The result, appearing under the dramatic column "byline" of Ward Morehouse, in the New York Sun on December 21 last, was a compilation of some 60 celebrated earlier plays within the intimate memory of Mr. Brady, with the leading players identified, and, most important, the critics' opinion.

Mr. McCarthy, whose early growth was in the "legitimate" field, who graduated to the motion picture, and whose entire life has been spent in the production and presentation of the dramatic effort for the entertainment or amusement of the public, was asked to make a similar record on motion pictures, as his memory serves.

"Birth of a Nation"

On March 13, 1915, Mr. McCarthy opened the play-adaptation "Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty theatre, New York, at a $2 top admission. The several censor boards then in existence and political consideration had dictated the change in title from "The Clansmen." Thomas Dixon, author, received better than $1,000,000 from a 25 per cent interest in the film's gross, which, says Mr. McCarthy, reached $4,000,000 in net profit in three years of roadshowing under his direction. "The Birth of a Nation," then, was the first outstanding American achievement of the new art-industry.

Many films, which today have not attained the success to which they are perhaps entitled, could have been made highly successful as roadshows, in Mr. McCarthy's belief, if they were properly handled. He is convinced of the desirability of that type of exhibition for certain outstanding films.

Abie's Irish Rose		Severely criticized

Research discovers that all but 12 of these 60 plays have at one time or another been adapted for the screen, and possibly some of those 12 under different titles. Also, among the 48 adapted between the years 1915 and 1930, only a handful have attained anything like "celebrity" in film annals, from the standpoint of either critical opinion or financial return.

And here are players later important in motion pictures, who appeared in plays on which the critics pronounced their judgment, as Mr. Brady recalls, the comment being on the play as a whole rather than the work of the player:

George Arliss, "Disraeli," bad; John Barrymore, "The Dictator," bad; Dustin Farnum, "The Virginian," fair; Douglas Fairbanks, "The Cub," bad; H. B. Warner, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," fair; Laurette Taylor, "Peg o' My Heart," bad; Mary Pickford, "Good Little Devil," fair; Richard Bennett, "Damaged Goods," good; Edmund Breese, "The Lion and the Mouse," bad; Ruth Chatterton, "The Rainbow," good.

Ten of the plays, then, found slight favor with the critics of an earlier day, according to Mr. Brady. Five were considered "bad"; three were rated "fair" and only two received a verdict of "good."

Here are Mr. McCarthy's choices of the outstanding achievements of the motion picture, from the "Birth of a Nation" of 1915 to "The Champ" of 1931.

D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," exploited by Mr. McCarthy, turned over to Mr. Griffith net profit of $1,357,000.

At the Criterion Mr. McCarthy opened "The Covered Wagon" for Paramount, or Famous Players. He calls the film a "superwestern," having been adapted from the Emerson Hough story. No stage play had been made. Nine months as a roadshow resulted in a net of $1,600,000, not including the $2,500,000 or so drawn from regular run picture theatres over the country.

"Ben Hur," Stage and Screen

In November, 1925, "The Big Parade," another screen original, was opened. It played the Astor 97 weeks at a $2 top. The net there, Mr. McCarthy recalls, exceeded the cost of the production. As a roadshow, it played approximately 12 months in two seasons to a net of $2,225,000.

Probably the most outstandingly successful of all stage offerings, which also became a superlative success as a motion picture, he said, was "Ben Hur." It opened on Christmas Eve, in 1925. Nine months as a roadshow produced a net of $1,600,000. Mr. McCarthy estimated the probable cost to M-G-M at $3,000,000. It played the Tivoli, in London, for many weeks at a top admission of $2.50.

Several were named in rapid succession. "The Miracle Man," successful on the stage, was one of those he had in mind when he noted the greater possibilities in roadshowing certain types of production. Of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," from the work of Blasco Ibanez, he said, "Such a film must be removed from the ordinary picture organization and exhibition methods." He mentioned "Common Clay" which, as a play, attained great success with Lowell

Sherman, now an outstanding figure of the cinema.

Mr. McCarthy injected a note of opinion at the opportunity offered by "Bad Girl," which, successful in the "legitimate," was a real "winner" on the screen. He challenged the cry of "names" which has been long heard in film production and exhibition, pointing to the success of "Bad Girl" with two then "unknowns," James Dunn and Sally Eilers.

And There Are Others

Mr. McCarthy went on to name others: "Two Orphans," another great Griffith success; "Orphans of the Storm," a fair success on the screen, bigger on the stage; "County Fair," unsuccessful on the stage, as Mr. Brady recalls, but a fair success as adapted to the silent screen; "Disraeli," which the critics in the Brady listing called "bad," a moderate screen success; "Trilby," hardly successful as a silent and only fair, says Mr. McCarthy, in its talking version, "Svengali," "Checkers," which was a successful silent, and is recalled as "great" on the stage by Mr. McCarthy. Mr. Brady remembers the critics saying it was "fair."

Others came to mind: "The Auctioneer," which David Warfield offered on the boards, called "bad" in the critics' opinion recorded by Mr. Brady, and recalled by Mr. McCarthy as unsuccessful on the screen; "Salomy Jane," which Holbrook Blinn made a stage success, but which could not make the grade cinematically; "Arizona," great as a play, only fair as a film offering; "Merely Mary Ann," also a great stage success, not quite reaching that point as a talking film. Mr. McCarthy recalled "Abie's Irish Rose," which Mr. Brady said was "severely panned," and which Mr. McCarthy remembers as an unsuccessful film, notwithstanding its financial gain as a comedy-drama on the "legitimate."

Public Didn't Agree

When John McCormack made "Song o' My Heart" the press almost unanimously acclaimed the production. The picture, says Mr. McCarthy, had definite merit. The public, however, did not agree with the critics at the box office. And it was pointed out that McCormack received the largest remuneration ever paid to a film player for one effort, $500,000.

Following is the selected compilation of Mr. McCarthy. The picture is noted, accompanied by the general press verdict with which, in Mr. McCarthy's memory, it was received. Beside that is indicated, from the same source, the approximate measure of its financial attainment; and lastly, in most cases, the degree of success of the stage offering from which the films were adapted. Those listed are in addition to the films which received specific attention in the foregoing.

Mr. McCarthy sees independent production of pictures and individual management of theatres as the wisest solution to the problems brought in by sound.

"The talking picture producers today," he said, "have departed from the basic human emotions of the drama: humanity, romance, comedy, conflict. There are too many sophisticated pictures today. The market is surfeited with that type of film. The producers do not realize that there is real audience for the sophisticated work only in the 'legitimate.' Not more than 10 per cent of the motion picture audience wants sophisticated pictures," he insisted.

Emphasizing that the producers should build more slowly, Mr. McCarthy said, "The producers today are making pictures for the large city; they are no longer making them for the nation!"

Warner Zone Heads Attend Conference

All zone managers of Warner theatres met on Wednesday at the company offices in Philadelphia, where policies for the coming year were discussed under the direction of Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Theatres. The entire home office executive staff, consisting of I. J. Hoffman, his new assistant; Moe Silver, Dave Weshner, Clayton Bond, Willard Patterson, Jack Cohen and Stewart MacDonald, attended.

This is the second zone meeting under Bernhard's direction, and follows his plan of holding similar sessions in various key cities, attended by all zone managers. The next is scheduled for Pittsburgh in four or five weeks.

Attending the Philadelphia meeting were: William Goldman, Philadelphia; John Payette, Washington; Earl Bell and George Tyson, representing John Harris of Pittsburgh; B. E. Hoffman, New England; Harry Kalmine, New Jersey; Louis Lazar, upstate New York; Jimmy Costum, Chicago; Lee Goldberg, Kentucky and C. J. Latta, Ohio.

MPTO Is Warned of Women's Protest of Double-Billing

Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin, has addressed to all exhibitors in Milwaukee County a copy of the resolution recently carried by the Federated Church Women of Milwaukee County, protesting double-features in film houses.

Meyer suggests that the resolution is "something to think about," since the organization has a membership of 5,000. The resolution, introduced by Mrs. John W. Zipp, read: "Resolved that the Federated Church Women of Milwaukee County protest the double-feature movie program, especially where one feature is not up to standard."

Villages Would Provide Films

A bill seeking to authorize village trustees to provide motion picture shows at public expense has been introduced in the New York state legislature at Albany by Assemblyman Fake. The amount of the shows would not exceed $1,200 a year, according to the measure, and would be raised by village taxation. The bill has been referred to the committee on villages.

GOVERNMENT MAY STEM TIDE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN MUSIC RANKS

Price Slashing Scored by Penn Exhibitor Unit

A vehement denunciation of what is termed the "price slashing evil" is contained in a statement issued this week from the headquarters of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, at Philadelphia. The official communication, which was issued by David Barrist, chairman of the board of managers on behalf of the Pennsylvania exhibitor group, points out that "excepting in special isolated cases no theatre has ever benefited from a slashing of admission prices! Spectacular changes of policy always invite retaliatory measures by competitors. One theatre reduces its admission prices and its competitor is forced to follow suit. A temporary advantage is supplanted by a permanent disadvantage. Where there is no competition, the exhibitor discovers that the temporary increase in attendance following the announcement of cheaper admissions is followed by a lull in interest by his patrons. Soon the customers revert to their former habit of patronizing the good pictures and passing up the ones that are weak, regardless of admission prices!"

"The man who advocates a return to the admission prices of a decade ago as a short-cut to prosperity in the movie theatres should be confined to the psychopathic ward of the nearest institution," the statement went on. "He is a false prophet and as dangerous as he is false. Ten years ago features cost $50,000 to $100,000 to produce. Today they cost five times that. Ten years ago $50,000 would remodel the average theatre. Today—but what's the use!

"The solution lies with the producers. The company that sells pictures on a percentage basis has a right to dictate at what price the entertainment shall be sold to the ultimate consumer. Let the four or five major film companies take a firm stand against the showing of their pictures at cheap prices and the threat of wholesale price slashing will be nipped. The recent price slashing war in Chicago is an indication of what may be expected if this evil becomes widespread."

"Don't let a few peanut-visioned 'showmen' wreck the price structure of the industry!" the exhibitor group warns.

Columbia Sues Hamrick

Columbia Pictures has filed a suit for $25,128 in Seattle against John Hamrick, owner of the Blue Mouse and Music Box theatres, in Portland, Seattle and Tacoma. The suit charges Hamrick showed recent Columbia films at lower admissions than were agreed at the time of signing the contract for the films.

Legislation to Apply Contract Labor Provision to Musicians From Other Countries Reaches Calendar of House

General economic conditions, and the fact that sound in motion picture theatres resulted in the unemployment of thousands of musicians may establish a governmental barrier against the further importation of instrumental musicians.

Legislation to apply the present United States contract labor provision of the national immigration laws to instrumental musicians from overseas has reached the consent calendar of the House at Washington, to be considered when that calendar again is reached.

Under the terms of the proposed legislation, ordinary musicians would be made subject to the contract labor law, but no barrier would be raised to the entry of musicians of such ability as to be considered artists if their professional engagements in this country are of a character requiring superior talent. It is pointed out in the Immigration Committee's report on the bill, which was introduced by Representative Johnson (Wash.), chairman of the committee, that there are some 150,000 American musicians now without employment while large numbers of foreign musicians are brought here yearly "because they will accept inferior conditions of labor and wages and can be had more cheaply than our own musicians."

"At this time," the report continued, "there is distressing unemployment among American musicians, not alone because of the general economic situation, but also because of radical changes in the music employment field. The American musician has had to adjust himself to many adverse conditions precipitated upon him. The legitimate theatre is in decline; motion pictures are generally adopting sound and dispensing with orchestras, so that where some 23,000 musicians were employed in motion pictures a year or so ago, only about half of that number are employed now."

Olivier, Jill Esmond to Leave Country; Alien Permits Expire

Laurence Olivier and his wife, Jill Esmond, English actors who have appeared in Radio films, must leave the United States, since their permits to remain here have expired. The permits lapsed on December 1, but were extended until January 1, on petition of RKO.

The understanding with the labor department at the time of the permit extension was that the players were not to remain in the country after January 1, and that no request for a further stay would be granted.

Sales Meetings Not Moved Up By Product Shortage

The shortage of product apparently is not regarded by the larger distributors as being of a nature serious enough to require the advancement of new season selling this year. Likewise, there is no indication among those distributors that present sales volume cannot be sustained, so that, in consequence, few if any new product sales campaigns will be opened prior to May 1 as a required business stimulus.

Substantiating this is the fact that only one of the leading distributing companies has had any discussion of plans for this year's sales convention, and few such discussions are in prospect for the immediate future. Fox has settled on May 1 as the date for its national convention, and Columbia, according to Lou Metzger, general sales manager, will formulate its convention plans within the next week or ten days. No other of the larger distributors have discussed convention plans at all, and incline to the belief that few conventions will be scheduled for earlier than May 1.

Among the sales executives who hold to this belief are Andy Smith, Warner Bros.; Felix Feist, MGM; William Saal, Tiffany; Phil Reisman, Universal; Ned Depinet, RKO Radio; Budd Rogers, Educational, and Ed Grainger, Fox.

Paramount Studio Club Feeds 200 Jobless Coast Workers

The Paramount studio club relief fund, on the Coast, is daily feeding 200 unemployed studio workers and their families. All donations are voluntary and are in either cash or food, according to M. C. Levee, president of the club.

The commissaries are maintained on the lot, in the electrical and carpentry departments. A committee of five members of the studio club handles all details of collection and distribution. Committee members are: Frank Brandon, chairman; William P. White, treasurer; Earl Miller, Clarence Slater and Joe Robbins.

Dickson Plans a National Circuit of Independents

Dick Dickson, formerly associated with Hughes-Franklin Theatres as purchasing agent, plans the establishment of a national circuit of independent theatres. Dickson has founded Bonded Theatres, Inc., for that purpose, with headquarters in Los Angeles.

Representatives will be appointed in every state. A low membership rate is to be charged for members of the combine and for group buying and more efficient operation in all directions, according to the backers of the plan.

U. S. FILMS FACE NEW BRITISH TAX IF TARIFFS COMMITTEE SO DECREES

Developments Point Again to Need of Reciprocity Gesture From America, Says Mooring; Further Levy Last Straw

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Commodities taxes under the McKenna duties, including films, are exempted in the new taxation to be laid before Parliament to establish a revenue on imports of up to 10 per cent. The British Government, after agreeing to differ upon the proposals after wrangling severely over the question of tariffs since it went into office four months ago, did finally decide to exempt commodities already covered in the McKenna list.

But—and here's the catch—a tariffs committee is appointed with powers to impose ad valorem duties up to 100 per cent. Special consideration will be given to so-called luxury and non-essential imports. Countries discriminating against British products certainly are subject to retaliatory taxation fixable by the tariffs committee, in collaboration with the treasury.

Point to Reciprocity Need

These new developments point again to the need of definite gestures by the motion picture industry in the United States looking toward reciprocity. Selection of a foremost leader now, to represent the trade in working toward that end, and establishment of a policy to give British-made productions a better opportunity in the field in America, might avoid taxation or at least lessen the severity of it.

The new tax will affect a major portion of Britain's total imports of manufactured goods, and will have as its principal object the raising of revenue rather than that of protecting British industries.

It is hoped to apply such extra revenue as may accrue to the relief of income tax for the year ending next April. At the moment it is manifest that the recently imposed burden of additional income tax has had a crippling effect upon the whole community and has so seriously impaired the public spending power as to still further depress British industries.

Would Be Last Straw

The imposition at this stage of an imports tax of 10 per cent on American films probably would prove the last straw as far as the British theatre owner is concerned. Unless the American producers are prepared to suffer a still further loss of revenue from this market, and meet the whole of such an additional tax out of their own pockets, it is certain that hundreds of the smaller theatres, and maybe some of the larger ones, will slip out of the list of profit-making concerns. Scores will have to close immediately if film rentals are raised in the slightest degree. In fact, with truth, many are claiming, as a necessity to their continued existence, a reduction rather than an increase on present levels.

There is a much greater supply of British product than ever before, but there clearly is not enough to go around, unless the whole industry is able to beat out a new policy of fewer releases and longer general runs. Subject to a slowing down in the tempo of theatre competition something in this way might be found workable, though not ideally so. It is certain that terms would harden against the exhibitor. That tendency has been proved to follow the imposition of a similar tax in the Irish Free State.

Maxwell Proposes 33 1/3% Tax

John Maxwell, chief of the British International Company, commenting favorably on the suggestion of an imports tariff on American films as a means of solving some of the problems of the British films industry, argued recently that an ad valorem tax of 33⅓ per cent on American film imports would represent an ideal form of taxation which could not be passed on to the British exhibitor.

But several Irish exhibitors challenged that view and pointed out that when recently the Irish Free State Government imposed an ad valorem duty of 2d per foot on all films imported to that state, the renters immediately put 15 per cent on all film rentals, explaining that they "did not wish to make a profit at the expense of the exhibitor," but clearly implying that they did propose that he should pay the tax.

In point of fact, the exhibitors of the state now allege that that 15 per cent yields enough on city first-runs to meet the whole of the extra tax and the renters therefore must be making a profit out of the tax.

Insist Exhibitors Carry Burdens

Mr. Maxwell's own distributing organizations insist upon this extra burden being borne by exhibitors, and when challenged on the point he offered no response.

There is little doubt that economically the exhibitor will be expected to reimburse the industry in respect of any extra tax that may be imposed on film imports. And at the moment he is financially anemic and wholly unable to stand up to further strain.

For that reason I foresee that there would be strenuous exhibitor as well as renter opposition to any extension of the new revenue tax to embrace film imports.

Irish Censor Saw 6 Million Feet of Film During 1931

The Irish Free State censor board in 1931 reviewed 6,269,538 feet of film, an increase of only about 2,000 feet over the previous year, according to the report recently issued. Films of drama and variety constituted three-fourths of those shown.

There was a large increase in the number of long dramas and topical pictures, the report noted. Twenty-nine educational films were included. There were 1,161 features passed, three less than in 1930. The appeal board upheld the censor's verdict in 40 cases.

Brook Fears Trip Abroad Too Costly

A war of reciprocity between the United States and Great Britain is imminent and is worrying many English actors, said Clive Brook last week during a short stop in Kansas City on his way to New York.

Brook, who was accompanied by his wife, said he was planning a trip to England but feared he would not be allowed re-entry into the United States. This country so far has taken no retaliatory steps for the expulsion of American performers from England, Brook said, but added he had heard reports such steps are planned. This will likely affect all foreign actors, he said.

"They've been throwing a lot of American actors out of London lately," declared Brook, "on the ground they were keeping English performers out of work. I'm hoping the United States doesn't decide to pay us back in our own coin. That would be more than a '12-pound-look' for a lot of Britishers, like myself, who have been exhibiting themselves this side of the water.

"As a matter of fact, I believe there are more British performers making their living in Hollywood and New York than there are Americans in London, in spite of the popularity of American plays."

Means Succeeds Burkey, Who Resigns as Exhibitor Leader

Jay Means, independent owner of three Kansas City suburban houses, has been elected president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas, succeeding Charles H. Burkey, resigned because of ill health.

Burkey was presented with a watch on his retirement, as a mark of appreciation. He had led the Kansas exhibitors in their struggle against adverse legislation and in handling other problems for the past 20 years.

CINEMA PATENTS TO APPEAL CRAFT RULING

Siegel Protests Decision Craft Did Not Exceed Gaumont License in Repairing Machines With Own Replacement Parts

Appeal from the decision absolving Craft Film Laboratories, New York, of patent infringements will be filed by Cinema Patents Company, Inc., New York, M. J. Siegel, president of Cinema Patents, said this week. Craft Film was charged with having exceeded its Gaumont license provisions in making repairs on its 26 Gaumont machines with its own replacement parts. Federal Judge John P. Fields in district court at Wilmington, Del., ruled this week that the Craft Laboratories had only made repairs, and that its license under the Gaumont Patents would continue.

Expects to Appeal

"We expect to appeal from this part of the decision," said Siegel.

In making its decision against Cinema Patents Company, the court held that "the case reduced itself to the question of whether the defendant in replacing wornout parts was within the well-recognized rule that a purchaser of a patented machine is entitled to replace wornout parts so long as the identity of the machine is not destroyed.

"The machines were purchased from the owner and were thus released from the monopoly of the patent," the court held. "The purchaser acquired an unqualified and unrestricted right to their use. I conclude that the machines in question at no time were beyond repair and that the defendant did not infringe on the patents in question by rebuilding of the machines."

Contended License Violated

The replacements were made by Craft Laboratories on its 26 Gaumont machines for developing, fixing, toning and drying motion picture films.

"Craft Film," said Siegel, "paid tribute to the Gaumont Patent, owned by Cinema Patents Company, by acknowledging its validity and arguing in defense of the infringement suit brought against it in Delaware, that it had a license under these patents.

"We contended that Craft had gone beyond the license by reconstructing their developing machines, but Judge Fields ruled that the defendant had only made repairs and that its license would continue."

Validity Established: Menken

In further discussing the decision made last week regarding the Cinema Patents suit against Warner Brothers, H. D. Menken, on behalf of Cinema Patents, issued the following statement:

"The validity of the Gaumont film processing and apparatus patents, owned by Cinema Patents Co., is definitely established by the recent decision of Federal Judge Campbell, Eastern District of New York, in the infringement suits brought by Cinema against Warner Bros. and Duplex Motion Picture Industries.

"In commenting on this, M. J. Siegel, president of Cinema Patents Company, said:

"'As our most important object has been to obtain a judgment sustaining the validity of our patents, we consider this a substantial victory. While Judge Campbell also held that Warner Bros. and Duplex do not infringe, an immediate appeal will be taken by Cinema from this part of the decision.'"

St. Louis Amusement Company Gets Writ in Receiver Suit

The Missouri supreme court has issued an alternative writ of mandamus returnable on February 16 to the St. Louis Amusement Company, which operates 24 theatres in St. Louis, in its fight to compel circuit Judge Nortoni of St. Louis to reduce the appeal bond asked of the company from $400,000 to $150,000.

A temporary receivership for the company was issued last November. The company has appealed from the ruling. When it posts an appeal bond approved by the court the property will be turned back to the officers of the company pending a final decision in the receivership suit. In the meantime Henri Chouteau, the receiver appointed by Circuit Judge Hogan, is in charge.

New Projection Organization Established in New Orleans

The International Association of Projectionists and Sound Engineers of North America was recently incorporated in Louisiana, with headquarters in New Orleans. The organization was formed "to meet the present requirements of projectionists, sound engineers and telephone technicians."

The officers are: John Tessero, international president; M. E. Clark, executive vice president; J. R. Jordan, international business agent; A. Booksh, general secretary-treasurer.

Julian H. Saenger, Builder of Great Circuit, Is Dead

Julian Henri Saenger, head of one of the most important theatre circuits in the country, Saenger Theatres, Inc., died in New Orleans, for years his center of operation, in an ambulance on the way to a hospital last Saturday after being stricken at dinner with a heart attack. Ill for some time from the complaint, Saenger was 50 when he died.

Saenger was president of the strong southern circuit which bears his name until 1929, when the company was absorbed by Paramount-Publix, and he assumed the position of chairman of the board of directors, which post he held at the time of his death. When he retired as president of the company, the circuit comprised 200 theatres located in 50 southern cities, Central America, Panama and Cuba. A high spot in the history of the circuit was reached when the marquee of the Saenger theatre was lighted in 1927.

Saenger, born in Norfolk, Va., and the son of a rabbi, opened a drug store in Shreveport, La., after graduation from Johns Hopkins University. His first motion picture theatre was opened in Shreveport 21 years ago after the Saenger Amusement Company had been formed by Julian, his brother, Abe, and L. M. Ash and E. V. Richards, Jr., who is now company president. Saenger opened the Strand in New Orleans in 1917, and it was then recognized as the finest motion picture theatre in the south. In Shreveport, the Saengers bought out Erlich Brothers, a competitor, clearing the field in that city; and in New Orleans the Herman Fichtenberg interests, and later the Eugene Pierce theatres, giving the Saenger organization control of the downtown section.

Saenger was long recognized as a philanthropist and one of the leading figures in New Orleans, his last large single donation being a gift of $35,000 to the Hope Haven School for Boys. Surviving him are his widow, the former Marjorie Kent of New Orleans, whom he married in 1929; an adopted son, 18 months old; two sisters, Mrs. L. M. Ash of New Orleans and Mrs. E. Rosenberg of Joplin, Mo.; and his brother, Abe.

Prospect Press Reproducing Stars' Photos for Exhibitors

Prospect Press, of New York, printers to many national motion picture concerns, has closed deals with Columbia, Fox, Universal and Educational to supply these organizations with eight by ten-inch halftone photographic reproductions of important stars of each company. The photos are available for use at theatres and for disposal of stars in answering fan mail. They are autographed. Negotiations are understood to be under way with other companies.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

IT WAS Saturday noon. The great shopping crowds in Tampa's busiest thoroughfare halted as fire trucks went tearing through the streets and stopped beside the 12-story Citizens bank building. A ladder was quickly raised to the third floor. Screams were heard, and high up at the twelfth floor the figure of a man was seen swaying from a window. The firemen quickly spread a net. The figure wavered and then hurled head first into the waiting net below.

Women screamed and at least half a dozen fainted. An ambulance dashed up and attendants carried the figure to the car. Upon the sides of the ambulance were banners, and from the twelfth floor window another immense banner was unrolled, each bearing the information that "The Man I Killed" was being shown now at the Tampa theatre, just around the corner.

It was a great stunt, but like many other stunts, it "backfired," for immediately the city officials began receiving protests. However the theatre had staged the stunt following receipt of the mayor's permission; the fire department had cooperated and the entire program was run off according to schedule.

"Of course we realize now that the figure was only a dummy," said one of the spectators, "but the thing was too darn realistic."

Warner home office executives will make every effort to keep tickets for "The Man Who Played God" away from ticket speculators during the current Broadway run—a move which is commendable in view of the present activities of certain questionable ticket handlers. Of course, reputable agencies are not included in the warning sounded this week for the benefit of the "'gyps' who are endeavoring, thus far it is hoped with little success, to secure large blocks of tickets," according to Warner Brothers.

Collins forwarded the desired information to R. A. Gausman at Universal City, and with it he submitted a suggestion that Universal forsake California and send its South Sea unit to Florida, where they could have not only all the coral needed, but also a natural south sea island setting and tropical atmosphere included.

Little things in the lives of the great sometimes are big things in the lives of those who are not so great, as evidenced by the following communication from one Elbert Luck, of Frankfort, Kentucky, to the editor of the Courier-Journal at Louisville:

"This little bit of news may be of interest to you. I am manager of the Standard Oil service station here, and last Saturday, who should stop at my station but Greta Garbo, the famous movie star. She was in company with her manager, her maid and chauffeur. They were driving a 16-cylinder car and were on their way to Lexington and a tour through the Bluegrass section of Kentucky.

"As they returned this way Monday, they again paid me the honor of stopping at my station for gas and oil. Miss Garbo is very, very beautiful and easy to talk with. She wore a black cloth coat with luxurious fur collar and close-fitting hat.

"Of course, Editor, this news will not thrill you like it did me and it may not even be important enough to be printed, but Miss Garbo is one of my favorite movie stars and I feel very proud that I had the opportunity of seeing her personally."

In view of all that has been written about Miss Garbo's so-called aloofness, Mr. Luck's notation that she is "easy to talk with" appears mighty interesting.

On the basis of figures compiled by Carl Dreher, sound supervisor for RKO at Hollywood, approximately 125,000,000 feet of positive stock are used yearly by Coast producers.

Dreher reported to David Selznick, production chief, that the company used 10,000,000 feet during 1931, of which 4,500,000 were used for sound purposes. The percentage wasted in recording was reduced to 7.89 per cent from 8.48, and the ratio of re-recording to total production footage increased from 15.3 per cent in 1930 to 28.8 per cent in 1931. The change upwards, Dreher indicated, reflected the marked increase in the economic importance of re-recording.

The practice of making buzz tracks by usual recording methods was abandoned in favor of the negative loop method, which saved the studio $5,800 for the year. Other savings, averaging $500 to $6,000 a year, were brought about by the adoption of other new recording methods.

TRI-ERGON'S PATENT TRIAL IS UNDERWAY

Action Brought Against General Talking Pictures and De Forest Phonofilm Seeks Grant to Three German Scientists

Trial of the patent infringement suit brought by Tri-Ergon against General Talking Pictures and DeForest Phonofilm, both of New York, opened this week before Federal Judge John P. Nields in U. S. District Court at Wilmington. The suit brought Dr. Lee DeForest, sound-on-film inventor and a veteran of several patent actions at Wilmington, back into district court as a defendant in the litigation.

The Tri-Ergon suit seeks to compel the U. S. Commissioner of patents to grant patents to three German scientists, Drs. Joseph Engel, Joseph Massolle and Hans Vogt, of Berlin, for asserted improvements for sound recording by photographs. The scientists filed application for patents in June, 1919, and the following summer Dr. DeForest applied for a patent on a similar invention. This was granted by the Commissioner of Patents, who held the patent application of the Germans was erroneous.

De Forest Drawing Introduced

Subsequently the Tri-Ergon Corporation obtained the rights to the German invention and in June, 1930, applied for a court order compelling the commissioner to issue them a patent as applied for in 1919 by the three Germans. It is believed that on the outcome of this trial depends American Tri-Ergon's claims to basic recording patents.

Samuel E. Darby, Jr., New York, attorney for DeForest, introduced as evidence this week a postcard containing a drawing by DeForest of his method of photographically recording sound. The sketch, DeForest claims, was made aboard the S. S. Carmania, October 12, 1918, while DeForest was en route to England with trench radios for the American Army. The sketch, he said, was shown to Darby, also aboard the ship. DeForest returned to America in January, 1919, it was testified, and immediately went to work on his idea, filing his application for a patent late in the year, and approximately eight months after the German inventors claim to have filed their applications in Germany.

Tri-Ergon's chief contention is that there was an act of Congress during the war which provided that because of difficulty in transportation and communication during hostilities all applications filed abroad might be later filed in Washington as of the filing date abroad. The defendants claim that DeForest had priority because of the sketch he made aboard ship.

Suits Planned, Says Schlesinger

M. A. Schlesinger, president of General Talking Pictures, which controls the DeForest patents, described the Tri-Ergon action as being "in the nature of an appeal" from earlier decisions of the Patent Office and patent board of appeal denying Tri-Ergon's petitions for issuance of patents to the German inventors.

"All other sources of appeal except the Federal courts have been exhausted by American Tri-Ergon in its efforts to obtain patents for the German inventions," said Schlesinger. "The current court action is in the nature of an appeal to a higher authority. We are confident that our prior right to the patent will be established in this action as in others."

Schlesinger said further that, on the settlement of several patent suits now pending, General Talking Pictures would institute a series of patent actions against numerous producers who, he said, are believed to be infringing on DeForest patents for photograph recording of sound. An accounting will be asked in each instance, he said.

American Seating Shows Loss in Year

The American Seating Company reports a net loss of $706,589 for the year ended December 31, 1931, after depreciation, interest, inventory readjustment, extraordinary losses on investments and accounts amounting to $544,993 and other charges.

World Conference On Patents Likely, Declares Otterson

Dissatisfaction with results obtained at European patent conferences may lead to the holding of an international patent meeting in New York similar to the one held in Paris during 1929 when American and German electrics reached their agreement to split world markets on sound equipment and royalties. Decision to hold such a meeting depends on the reports of the meeting which was terminated in Paris on Monday of this week, said John E. Otterson, president of Erpi.

The result of the first patent conference is said to have been the drawing up of working agreements between manufacturers, but these agreements were never incorporated in a legal form. Representatives of Tobis and other important manufacturers are now seeking new conferences. This week's Paris meetings were described as "informal" in nature, although it was reported that American and German sound equipment manufacturers had agreed to reduce royalties now paid by French producers by 25 per cent.

Cabled reports of the meeting had representatives of both Erpi and RCA Photophone charging German manufacturers with bad faith by offering French producers royalty stipulations declared to be one-half of terms reached by agreement in 1929.

A denial was made by P. L. Palmerton, export manager of Erpi, who said no royalty reduction agreement concerning recording apparatus was reached at the conference.

ALLIED TO DISCUSS LEGISLATION, ZONING, CONTRACT AT MEETING

Steffes Will Invite Leaders of All Exhibitor Associations Having Independents Among Members to Detroit Sessions

The status, scope and possibilities of pending legislative matters affecting the industry will be fully outlined to delegates attending the forthcoming annual convention of Allied States Association by Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel. The convention is to be held at Detroit March 8, 9 and 10.

President W. A. Steffes will invite leaders of all exhibitor associations having independent owners in their ranks to head delegations to the convention, even though these units are not formally affiliated with Allied.

In discussing the proposal to invite unaffiliated independents to the Allied convention, an official statement from headquarters, issued this week, disclosed the fact that Allied's invitation will "point out that the convention will include subjects which can not and dare not be discussed in any other meeting. This will give such independent leaders as participate "an opportunity to demonstrate the depth of their professed devotion to the independent exhibitors."

Says Several Such Have Accepted

Leaders of several associations not formally affiliated with Allied have indicated their willingness to attend the Allied meeting, according to the statement, which does not reveal their names.

The discussion of legislative matters involving the interests of independent theatre owners which is expected to predominate at Allied's Detroit meeting will revolve around the following topics, according to the official statement:

"It is believed that the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives will have reported on the proposed admission tax" by convention time "and the theatre owners will plan their future policy on that subject.

Discussion of Copyright Law

"Also hearings on the socalled Vestal Bill for revising the Copyright Law will have been concluded and there will be a report and discussion on that measure.

"Present indications are that a proposal for a Congressional investigation of the industry will have been made and it will be of the highest importance that independent exhibitors decide at that time what their attitude towards the inquiry will be. A number of theatre owners have indicated that they would welcome such investigation as a means of developing the facts and forcing reforms on such matters as salacious pictures, block booking, zoning, protection, copyright abuses, etc.

"The Brookhart anti-block booking bill which now has the endorsement of parent-teachers associations, church organizations and women's clubs all over the country, doubtless will have been reintroduced in revised form in both houses and will call for consideration by the convention."

Answers "Radicalism" Charge

Under the caption: "Allied Economics," the current communication discusses the association's "alleged radicalism," as follows:

"Allied leaders are never complacent but they can not resist pointing out that time has proved that their alleged radicalism really was sound economics and that had their policies prevailed during the last five years the motion picture industry would be a lot better off.

"In other words, they feel that the producers must be convinced that they made a serious mistake in grabbing off a large number of theatres that they did not need and in needlessly driving many independent theatres out of business, thus narrowing the market for films.

"Allied will reassert her fundamental policies in resolution form at the forthcoming convention and, instead of appearing radical, they will be just good business sense. Also they will be proclaimed with a reasonable prospect that they will prevail, time having played into our hands."

Defer 5-5-5 Action to Detroit

One of the most important phases of discussion scheduled for the Detroit meeting centers around contractual relations with distributors. "Allied leaders for some time have had under advisement a suggestion that they join in a statement with other organization leaders and a representative of the producers to proclaim the 5-5-5 contract for use during the 1932-33 selling season," it is stated in the official communication, which raises the question "whether during the 18 months that the matter has been pigeonholed by the producers, conditions have not so changed as to make desirable, or at least, questionable, a blanket reaffirmation of the contract without consulting the exhibitors themselves."

Accordingly, "in the absence of unanimity on this point, it was deemed advisable to defer taking final action until after the Detroit convention, at which time the matter will be fully reported to the independent exhibitors. Discussion will be had and conclusions will be reached and announced at the convention."

The 5-5-5 contract between theatres and distributors was originally set to become effective beginning with the new sales season which starts on April 1.

Points to Litigation Cases

"The field of litigation" also will form an important part of discussions at the March meeting. According to the pre-convention outline sent out by Allied this week, "Great interest is being displayed in the various proceedings in different parts of the country involving protection. Suits arousing the greatest interest are the Youngclaus case in Nebraska, the Loew case in Massachusetts, the suit brought by the independent exhibitors in Cleveland and the investigation by state officials in Wisconsin.

"A careful summary of these proceedings, together with an estimate of their importance to the independent theatre owners in the definition of their rights in the matter of zoning and protection, will be submitted to the convention. After discussion the independent theatre owners will adopt resolutions defining their attitude towards these proceedings and pledging cooperation, if, in their judgment, the same is merited.

"Every theatre owner who has a protection problem (and who hasn't?) owes it to himself and to his business to be present and participate in these vital discussions and lend his aid in arriving at correct decisions."

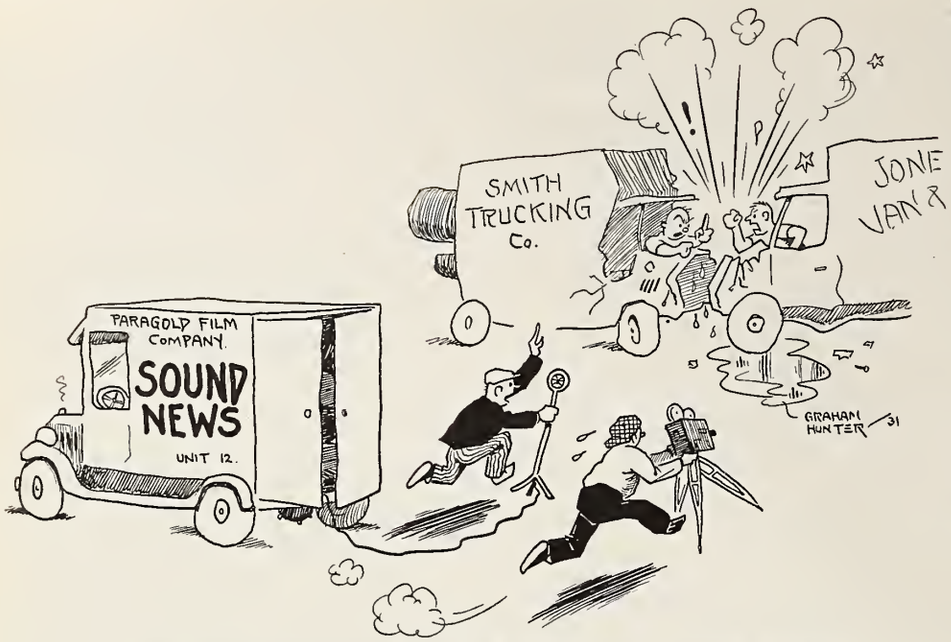
Steffes Sees Death of Zoning

In a second statement issued independently by National President Steffes, exhibitors of the country are urged to immediately join either Allied or the MPTOA, "and help fight these battles" of zoning, protection, legislation, taxation, and so forth.



"Without the Allied organization," said Steffes, "80 per cent of the independent theatres in the United States would have been out of business before this."

In the opinion of Steffes, "zoning and protection—the thing that producers are trying to use as a club to put independents out of business—within the next year will be as dead as the old standard arbitration clause is. Law suits have been started in various parts of the United States that have the backing of Allied and of course you know the only place they are started is in Allied territory. In my opinion, the only way show business is going to get back to normal is when producers get out of the exhibition business, and keep both eyes focused on production and not try to divide them by having one eye on the box office of their own theatres and the other eye on production. The quicker the producers get out of the exhibition business the sooner things are going to come back to normal. Block booking, of course, is still in vogue by most of the companies and unless a real concentrated fight is put up by Allied it is going to stay in the industry.

Urges Organization Need

"All of these things can be accomplished through organization and through organization only. I think the time is here that every theatre owner in the United States should make a choice; that he should belong to one organization, either MPTO of A., which organization is partly financed by producers and distributors and chain operators, or Allied, which organization is entirely financed by independent theatre owners of the country. Make your choice and pay your dues.

"If you are not a member of either organization, for Heaven's sake get busy and join one of them and help fight these battles."

"Start your dialogue over again, will you, boys? We just arrived."

NEW ENGLAND ALLIED HEARS MYERS ON TAX

Only 325 to 375 Pictures Are Available to Independents, Boston Convention Is Told by Samuelson; Yamins Presides

Only 325 to 375 pictures are available to independent exhibitors, Sidney Samuelson, head of the New Jersey Allied unit and a vice president of the national Allied association, declared before the 100 theatre men attending the first convention of the Independent Exhibitors of New England, held last week at the Hotel Statler in Boston.

Samuelson, who participated in the hearing before the House Ways and Means committee at Washington at which representatives of the industry voiced protests against the proposed 10 per cent tax on admissions above a dime, challenged the statement made before the committee that 700 films were available. He also said that 20,000 theatres were wired for sound but many had been forced to close.

Myers Calls Protection Unfair

Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of Allied, expressed appreciation of the interest shown by Congressmen McCormack and Rainey at the hearing.

He charged that unfair protection methods of producer-owned theatres are causing much hardship to subsequent-runs. Myers also attacked block booking and percentage selling, and discussed the music tax and the copyright law.

There would be many more deluxe theatres owned by independents had not the producers invaded the field, he said.

The reception given Myers at the end of his address bespoke the confidence of the exhibitors in his judgment and ability to guide the destinies of the national association.

Elect Officers February 16

After President Nathan Yamins called the New Englanders' meeting to order, Walter Littlefield of Boston, vice president, read a report of the Washington hearing and called attention to apparent discrepancies in the statements of witnesses.

George M. A. Fecke, general manager of the New England independents, arranged details of the meeting, which opened with a buffet luncheon.

The next gathering of the organization will be held February 16 to elect officers for the ensuing year. The nominating committee consists of Ed Anson, Phil Smith and E. M. Loew.

The New England association is planning to send a strong delegation to the national convention of Allied States in Detroit March 8, 9 and 10.

Harry C. Arthur in New York

Harry C. Arthur, general manager of Fox Theatres, has arrived in New York from the Coast. Conferences with Spyros Skouras immediately followed his arrival. Arthur is said to be in New York in connection with the recent deals whereby Skouras assumes operation of Fox West Coast, Midland and Midwesco theatres February 15.

Dispenses With Vaudeville

The RKO Capitol, Winnipeg, Canada, has changed from a film and vaudeville policy to double-featuring of pictures only. Winnipeg, in consequence, is at the moment without a stage show.

Copyright Hearings Close This Month

With every effort being made to expedite the copyright legislation now before the House patents committee, Representative Sirovich, New York, chairman of the committee, expressed the hope this week that hearings on the measures would be completed this month and enactment of amended legislation obtained prior to the adjournment of Congress next June.

Two additional hearings on copyright legislation are scheduled for this month. Music publishers and others opposed to the legislation were scheduled to be heard Friday, February 12, while representatives of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are to appear February 26. These hearings are expected to bring to a close the preliminary discussions of the legislation. Representatives of the Authors League of America had their inning before the committee last week, and urged passage of the Hebert bill as amended by the Senate committee on patents in the closing days of the last session.

The Hebert bill, its proponents say, offers motion picture producers and exhibitors greater protection and benefits than any copyright legislation heretofore introduced. The bill reputedly reduces damages for copyright infringements to a new minimum, stipulates a total maximum damage recoverable for infringements, distinguishes between "innocent" and "guilty" infringement, removes arbitrary penalties for infringements and stipulates that all penalties shall be in accordance with "a fair and reasonable license value."

Shores Replaces Bailey as Casting Director at Radio

The executive personnel of Radio has been reorganized with the installation of a "dual-control" system, under David O. Selznick. G. Rex Bailey becomes casting department manager, occupying a business and financial position, and Lynn Shores has replaced Bailey as casting director.

Shores recently returned from New York, where he was looking over talent for RKO's motion picture stock company. Selznick described the change as a move to relieve the casting director of business burdens.

Dave Weshner Named Aid to Hoffman in Warner Change

David E. (Skip) Weshner, formerly in charge of advertising and publicity for Warner Theatres, has returned to theatre operation as assistant to I. J. Hoffman, recently named operator for the eastern division of the circuit.

Mort Blumenstock, formerly in charge of advertising and publicity for the Warner Broadway houses, assumes Weshner's old place, while Lou Goldberg, formerly with Publix, succeeds Blumenstock.

Miss Logan, Hornblow at AMPA

Jacqueline Logan, former star now directing for British International in England, and Arthur Hornblow, Jr., production executive for Samuel Goldwyn, were scheduled as honor guests at the weekly meeting of the AMPA on Thursday.

ONLY $1.69 OF EACH $100 SPENT IN ATTENDING THEATRE, CLUB TOLD

And Bulk of Receipts in Town of 10,000 to 30,000 Population Is Expended in Home City, Says Manager Reuter

Only $1.69 of each $100 spent on necessities and luxuries in a town of 10,000 to 30,000 population goes for admissions to motion picture theatres, Arthur Reuter, manager of the Regent theatre at Norwalk, Conn., said in addressing the Woman's City Club and the Mothers' Club of Norwalk. Reuter, who said that the bulk of the money taken in at the Regent theatre box office is spent right in Norwalk, quoted from the results of surveys, in his talk on "Motion Pictures and Their Educational Influence."

"I have been reproached by people in Norwalk who contend that the movies are profiting at the expense of other necessary businesses, that people are spending money at picture shows that should be spent in the payment of necessary bills; I do not believe that," Mr. Reuter said, and referred to one phase of the surveys, based upon the recent United States census and taken from a group of towns of 10,000 to 30,000 population.

Bulk of Money Stays "Home"

"It shows," he said, "that out of every $100 spent in town, $23.87 is spent for automobiles and accessories, $20.56 for food, $14.37 for general merchandise, $8.90 for wearing apparel, $8.65 for lumber and building supplies, $3.55 for restaurants and eating places, $3.52 for furniture and household goods, $14.39 in other stores, and $1.69 for admission to motion picture theatres—total $100.

"The bulk of the money taken in at the theatre box office is spent right here in town. I have gone over the figures at the Regent Theatre box office for the past year. Let me point out the result. Of our total receipts, 64 per cent are spent on local expenses—30 per cent is spent for film, while a mere 6 per cent, including administration, sound equipment inspection and repair and insurance, leaves Norwalk. There are few businesses, even those entirely owned and controlled by local residents, which are as valuable to the town economically, since there are but few in which local overhead plays so large a part."

15 Per Cent Juveniles

Mr. Reuter traced the educational influences of motion pictures—in travel, in music, in literature, in history. He said that two billions of dollars are invested in the industry, that the pictures shown annually cost 200 millions; that 290,000 are employed, 30,000 in the studios, 10,000 in distribution, 250,000 in theatres; that annual attendance totals 100 millions.

Mr. Reuter said that 15 per cent of total attendance consists of children under 17 years, according to a survey now being made by the psychology group of Columbia University.

"This percentage varies from about 3 per cent at the largest metropolitan houses to 30 per cent at rural theatres in the backwoods. The percentages are also affected by the type of picture shown.

"Child attendance at the Regent varies from 12 per cent to 25 per cent. Pictures of special interest to children draw larger crowds of them. We have had especially large groups of children to see pictures based on the Zane Grey novels and for such pictures as 'Tom Sawyer' and 'Huckleberry Finn.' Children shop for pictures, much as adults do.

Cites Herald Department

"Of course, even pictures intended entirely for adult appreciation may have certain educational value for children. Indeed, it is a rare picture that does not contain some instructive points for all of us. The national trade periodical, the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has a department called the 'School and Screen,' of which you may have heard. It is conducted by Rita C. McGoldrick. Mrs. McGoldrick is endeavoring to analyze pictures for schools in order that children may be helped to obtain the most value from the pictures they see.

"A child will grasp the significance of a picture of a cow long before it can spell c-o-w," the speaker said. And of the effect of socalled gang pictures on the child mind he added; "Certainly the endings of pictures are more conducive than the spectacle our daily lives offer of unpunished criminals."

Education is the remedy for the failure of the public to turn into big money-makers such pictures as "Alexander Hamilton" and "Skippy," he said, and civic organizations "can do splendid work in impressing upon the public mind the value of worthy pictures."

A REAL BREAK!

When Uncle Sam deviates from an iron-clad rule and cooperates in theatre advertising to the extent of displaying a large sign on a key city postoffice, that's news. Max Halperin, division manager, and Bill Danziger, publicity chief for RKO, Cincinnati, effected just that tieup in connection with Borrah Minevitch, leading the stage show at the RKO Albee. Immediately below a small electric sign on the Cincinnati postoffice building diagonally facing the Albee, announcing that Cincinnati air mail service is four years old, RKO has placed a ten-foot sign prominently lettered:

AIR MAIL SPEED SAVES THE SHOW FOR BORRAH MINEVITCH RKO ALBEE STAR.

Thursday, St. Louis . . . a missing trunk . . . 8 precious harmonicas lost . . . Without them Cincinnati performances are impossible. A night letter to New York . . . Harmonicas rushed to the flying field . . . The air mail takes off . . . The instruments are delivered in Cincinnati . . . and the show goes on.

THE AIR MAIL CAN SERVE YOU. STAGE STAR OR MERCHANT

Harold McCracken Is Named Raspin Publicity Director

Edwin B. Raschbaum, president of Raspin Productions, which produced "Explorers of the World," has named Harold McCracken, explorer and author, as new publicity director; Larry Jacobs, formerly with United Artists, director of advertising and exploitation; George Jacobs, sales manager; Lou Schnitzer, formerly with RKO, special representative.

The organization plans further release of similar features of the exploration type. As yet none has been set for release.

P. K. Thomajan, former publicity and advertising director, has resigned the post, and is negotiating with several major companies.

Censor Dismissed, Reinstated

Mayor Michael J. O'Hara of Worcester, Mass., dismissed the local censor board when he learned that each of its large membership, representing 25 local bodies, was receiving at least two free admissions to every film theatre. The body raised such a storm of protest over the dismissal, however, that the major decided discretion was the better part of valor, and reinstated it.

ACADEMY SPEEDS UP ITS "SUPREME COURT"

Complaints Now Can Be Heard Within Three Days; Conciliation Committee Increased to Fifteen; 23 Invited to Join

Increase of the membership of the conciliation committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to fifteen and a speeding up of action so that any complaint against an individual or company can be heard within three days by the Academy branch having jurisdiction, are two decisions of the Academy officers and board which are expected to make more effective the work of the organization. Membership invitations also were extended to 23 individuals.

Five members will be added to the conciliation committee, which functions as a "supreme court" on economic relations disputes, and five of the panel of fifteen will be appointed each year.

Executive Committee "Grand Jury"

The executive committee of each of the five branches—directing, acting, writing, production and technical—acts as a "grand jury" to determine whether a complaint merits hearing.

The present membership of the conciliation committee includes:

Chairman J. T. Reed of the technicians branch, with Nathan Levinson, alternate; Actor, Lawrence Grant, alternate Conrad Nagel; Director, Reginald Barker, alternate, Mervyn LeRoy; Writer, Percy Heath, alternate, John Goodrich; Producer, J. I. Schnitzer, alternate, Louis B. Mayer. Since Schnitzer's new duties with RKO Radio demand his presence in the East, Al Kaufman, executive assistant to B. P. Schulberg at the Paramount Publix studios, has been selected to succeed him as the new producer member of the committee.

Invitations to membership in the Academy were extended to Henry B. Walthall, actor, Frank Murphy, Fred Gage and Harris N. Ensign, technicians, and Norman Z. McLeod, director, as Academy members; and Associate membership invitations were tendered to: George M. Arthur, Harvey Johnston, Otho Lovering, Ralph Dietrich, George Nichols, Melville Brown, William Seiter, P. J. Faulkner, James Z. Flaster, Joseph Mankiewicz, Hugh McDowell, Jr., Gene Merritt, Wallace S. Nickum, and William F. Rudulph.

Research Directors Invited

Inclusion of studio research department directors in the technicians branch, under the art director section, also was decided upon, and invitations to membership were extended to Gladys Percy, Bessie McGaffey, Frances Richardson and Maude Bowman.

Another change in the membership classification was the inclusion of accredited publicity men as associate members in the producers branch. Howard Strickling, Barrett Kiesling and Arch Reeve were transtested for ability and intelligence in advance ducers branch as associate members. It was further decided that film editors would be admitted in the technicians branch.

It was announced that the total membership of the Academy now stands at 720, an increase of 119 since Jan. 1, 1931.

More than 200 meetings of boards, branches, committees, subcommittees and other special groups were held, with increased activities planned for 1932.

A report from Treasurer Frank Lloyd showed the institution's financial status satisfactory.

Officers of the Academy, who met with the board are: President, M. C. Levee; vice president, Conrad Nagel; treasurer, Frank Lloyd; secretary, Fred Niblo; and executive secretary, Lester Cowan. The board is composed of M. C. Levee, Conrad Nagel, Frank Lloyd, Jean Hersholt, Lawrence Grant, Donald Crisp, Frank Capra, Irving G. Thalberg, Joseph Johnson, Karl Struss, Nugent H. Slaughter, Max Ree, Waldemar Young, Al Cohn and Benjamin Glazer.

Horwitz Offers Plan to Sell Notes For City's Budget

A plan to raise $800,000 for the city of Houston, Texas, by the sale of municipally-secured notes to theatre patrons has been proposed by Will Horwitz, independent exhibitor. Local bankers have refused to advance the city operating expenses, it is said.

Horwitz's plan, which the Houston mayor had asked him to submit for consideration, involves the sale of personal notes of denominations of from $1 to $100 bearing 4 per cent interest and guaranteed by city securities bearing 4 per cent interest. Horwitz claims he could sell $800,000 in notes to the 86,000 patrons of his three theatres in one week. The plan would forestall issuance of script by the city, it is claimed.

Novelist to Adapt His Story

Paul Green will arrive in Hollywood February 15, to adapt his recent novel, "The Cabin in the Cotton," for Richard Barthelmess at the Warner plant. Preston Foster left the cast of a Broadway play for the Coast, to appear in support of Edward G. Robinson in "Two Seconds," a First National production.

Oscar Hanson, head of Ideal Pictures, Ltd., Toronto, will open branch exchanges in Canada for distribution of Action Pictures and state rights product. Hanson continues as general manager of Associated Theatres, Ltd., comprising 70 independent exhibitors.

Rome Joins Maryland MPTO

J. Louis Rome has been named chairman of the board of the newly formed Associated Theatre Owners of Maryland. He recently resigned from the MPTO of Maryland, Inc. New members are Joseph Brodie and Isadore M. Rappaport, the latter also named a member of the board.

Erpi Testing Films Among 2,538 Pupils

In line with current efforts of motion picture companies and manufacturers of sound equipment to "break open" and develop the field of non-theatrical films, 16 public schools in New York and New Jersey have been selected by Electrical Research Products, for laboratories in which to test the effectiveness of visual education by motion pictures, H. M. Devereux, director of Erpi's visual education department, announced this week. The results of the tests are expected to have an important effect on installations of non-theatrical equipment, particularly in educational institutions, this year.

The tests are to start next Monday and will continue for eight weeks, during which there wil be twenty instruction periods of 30 minutes each. A total of 2,538 pupils and 64 teachers will participate in the tests, which will be made in New York, Schenectady, Camden, Elizabeth, and Baltimore. Four pictures designed for use in courses in music appreciation and four in nature study will be used. One group of pupils will be taught with the aid of pictures and one without and the results attained by the two groups will be compared at the end of the test period. Teachers and pupils will be tested for ability and intelligence in advance so that proper allowance may be made for those factors.

New Producer Completes Film

A synchronized sound version of "Yiskor," Yiddish picture, has been completed by Gloria Films, Inc., new producing company, at the Atlas Studios, New York. The new version features Maurice Schwartz. It was directed by George Roland, who also wrote the script and supervised synchronization. Roland, who has prepared numerous foreign versions for RKO, recently completed an American adaptation of the Amkino production, "The Road to Life."

Trend To Action Is Seen by Hirst

Radio is anticipating an increased interest in locations in the belief that the current popular trend is toward stories with authentic locales.

Herbert Hirst, location manager at the Coast plant, sees the necessity of selecting locales in proximity to power lines for sound purposes, good roads for trucking and a center of fresh food supplies.

A location, he points out, to merit consideration, must also provide a source of relaxation for the technical and acting personnel when work is finished. Consequently, a location that is near a large town is the most desirable. The factor of economy enters when transportation costs are considered.

Lichtman Denies Sales Agreement With Columbia

Rumors, circulated for several weeks, to the effect that United Artists and Columbia are negotiating a working agreement, with the former corporation handling releases for both concerns, were denied this week by Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of distribution of United Artists in an official statement which said:

"The rumors were started shortly after the first of the year, and are believed to have been the result of a new contract signed by U. A. and Columbia for the distribution in certain foreign markets of Columbia product. On December 31, United Artists completed one full year of handling Columbia pictures in England, and this contract worked out so well that it was renewed and extended to Spain and some South American countries."

"Broken Lullaby" New Title

Paramount has again changed the title of "The Man I Killed," this time to "Broken Lullaby." A previous change had titled the Ernst Lubitsch film, "The Fifth Commandment." Erroneous impressions fostered by the original title are said to have dictated the changes.

Film Stunt Flier Killed

Leo Nomis, 38, stunt flier in film work, and one of a famous foursome, including Frank Clark, Roy Wilson and Dick Grace, who supplied air thrills in pictures, was killed at Van Nuys, Calif., last week, in attempting a stunt for the Paramount picture, "Sky Brides."

Top Music for Club Ball

Three well known bands, those of Abe Lyman, Harold Stern and Claude Hopkins, will furnish the dance music at the Motion Picture Club ball, set for the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, February 20. Other musical organizations will appear as guest orchestras. Mayor James J. Walker will head the list of honor guests.

"Scar on Nation" Release Set

Howard Hughes has set March 1 as the national release date for "The Scar on the Nation," formerly titled "Scarface," called an indictment of gangdom. Howard Hawks directed the adaptation of the novel.

NEW REGIME STARTS WORK AT COLUMBIA

Board Under Harry Cohn's Leadership Ratifies Executives, Declares Preferred Dividend, Decides Royalty Basis

The new regime at Columbia Pictures this week set about to further develop and more strongly entrench the structure of the organization under the leadership of Harry Cohn.

Ratification of the election of new executives, declaration of a dividend on preferred stock, acquisition of an important story, "Washington Merry-Go-Round," and the decision to effect royalty payments for studio talent were all accomplished quickly.

Charles Schwartz Assistant Secretary

At the initial board meeting of the new regime, directors ratified the election of Harry Cohn to the presidency and also ratified the elections of Jack Cohn and Walter Wanger to vice presidencies. Charles Schwartz, who is associated with the law firm of Nathan Burkan, is assistant secretary. No decision has as yet been made with regards the selection of a treasurer.

When Harry Cohn and Walter Wanger meet at the Hollywood studios in about three weeks, they will set in motion the machinery for Columbia's schedule for 1932-33. Cohn leaves New York late this week and Wanger will follow in three weeks, at which time final decision will be made regarding the workings of a royalty system of payment for players, writers and directors. Not all of Columbia's workers will be placed on a royalty basis, but only those outstanding personalities whose efforts and drawing appeal aid in merchandising pictures.

Wanger to Acquire Stories and Talent

Harry Cohn will continue in charge of production executives in addition to assuming presidential duties; Jack Cohn will concentrate on distribution and general administration activities, and Wanger will acquire stories and talent and have important executive duties. Wanger has already acquired "Washington Merry-Go-Round," an anonymously written book on current political affairs and personages at Washington, where the vehicle has been the subject of wide discussion.

At the board meeting, directors declared the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on preferred stock, payable on March 2, to preferred holders of record on February 19.

In the meantime, Joe Brandt, who resigned last week as president, simultaneously announcing his retirement from the lengthy tri-cornered Columbia partnership, continues preparations for a long vacation, which is scheduled to commence next month.

"Night Club" Title Shifted

Universal has re-titled "Night Club" to "Night World," because of prior use on the former. "Steady Company" is being released instead of "Marriage Interlude," which will be postponed too long for this season's program.

National Board Lists 947 Films

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has prepared its 1931-32 seventeenth annual catalog of recommended pictures, in which are listed 947 pictures selected from the 1,515 pictures which the review committees of the board saw in 1931. Of the 947 selected, 594 are shorts in appropriate classifications.

All pictures are rated according to audience suitability, as follows: mature audience, pictures recommended for the mature audience—18 years up; family audience, pictures recommended for family use—12 years up; junior group, pictures suitable for special showings to children under 12.

The National Board offers these selections, it claims, with the slogan, "Selection —Not Censorship—The Solution" as the motivating idea behind the reviewing and appraisal of pictures of all types.

Loew, Roach Claim Air Record During South American Tour

Arthur Loew, MGM foreign chief, and Hal Roach, comedy producer, at present touring South America by air, claim they have broken records in flying for the territory they have covered.

In 10 days they claim to have touched Mexico, Guatemala, San Salvador, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Ecuador, Uruguay, Chile, and Argentina, having stopped at all MGM branches in every country. From Rio de Janeiro, they left for the north and this country.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THERE is a high note of good news this week! The motion picture industry is not an ailing institution! It has learned the lesson of tightening its girth for the race. But the tightening up is a good thing. It means new efficiency, power and determined accomplishment.

When this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD comes into your hands there will be three screen masterpieces playing concurrently on Broadway. There is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Hell Divers," true classic of the air, which we have reviewed for you with a good deal of enthusiasm. And there is Paramount's "Broken Lullaby," formerly called "The Man I Killed." This to every lover of cinematic art is a gem among motion pictures, with its exquisite directing, its subtlety, restraints and delicate nuances.

"The Man Who Played God"

The third of a tremendous triumvirate is Warner Brothers' outstanding and magnificent production, "The Man Who Played God," in which George Arliss, with superb artistry, has reached a new pinacle in motion picture making. It is the story of the great musician who plays for a king and who, because of the throwing of a bomb, becomes deaf. His life work is wiped out. His music is stripped from him. He seems to have been deserted by God. In a passion of rebellion he turns his back on life. He scoffs at the God who could work this cruelty upon him. But gradually, out of the depths of his misery, light comes. He suddenly discovers that there are other suffering people in the world and that it is perhaps a greater art to help fellow human beings in their wretchedness than to play music for them on the concert platform.

To Warner Brothers must go the credit for one of the most magnificent and inspiring pictures that have ever come to the screen. "The Man Who Played God" has brought to the screen a new finesse.

This is a picture that must go on the highways and byways lifting people up. The brilliance of its production, the charm of its settings, the masterly presentation of George Arliss as the musician, make this picture a delight.

It is not often that Broadway offers so strong a combination of remarkable pictures. These are box office attractions! They should be an encouragement to every one connected with motion pictures that good times or bad times will not hamper the creation of great product. An industry capable of releasing three pictures such as these in the same month is fundamentally a strong and healthy and growing institution.

Washington's Birthday

In this year of the George Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration every public school, club and organized group is interested in films that commemorate Washington, the Man. Warner Brothers has filled this need in a particular way with its excellent short subject, "Washington: the Man and the Capital," a two-reel feature which has been made with specific care and artistic detail. Clarence Whitehill, a baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company who, because of his striking resemblance to the first president, was selected for the role of George Washington. He re-enacts in the picture the historical scenes that took place at Mount Vernon, paricularly during those days when Alexander Hamilton was pressing upon Washington the need of his acceptance of the first presidency of the New Republic.

For these two noteworthy contributions to the screen we are deeply indebted to Warner Brothers. Pictures of this type lend a new dignity and importance to the entertainment screen.

A Patriotic Program

Washington's Birthday anniversary this year offers an exceptional opportunity to the exhibitor to win local school and club interest. It is a day of very special significance in the history of the nation and should be exploited in motion picture houses. This is an appropriate day to feature children's amateur performances. Every school in the land has prepared a pageant, a song, recitations or costumed tableaux in commemoration of the Anniversary. Many schools would appreciate having their children presented to a wider audience. A courteous letter addressed to the principals of the schools in your locality would, without doubt, bring an assurance of appreciation and an offer of co-operation.

Guests of honor might include:

1. Representatives from Daughters of the American Revolution.
2. Colonial Dames.
3. Daughters of the American Colonists.
4. National Society of New England Women.
5. Judges, history teachers or librarians.

Suitable pictures for the day are:

FEATURES:

"Evangeline," United Artists, 9 reels.
"Great Meadow," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 7,243 feet.

SHORTS:

"Washington" (FitzPatrick Holiday Short), all-star.
"Frontier Romance" (1777), Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.
"Hats Off" (Origin of Flag), Fox.

Buffalo Bill Anniversary

(For Saturday, February 27)

WILLIAM FREDERICK CODY—Birthday, February 26, 1845-1917. Frontiersman and scout, familiarly known as "Buffalo Bill." One of the first riders of the Pony Express. Government scout and guide during the Civil War.

There is no doubt about it, the Western picture is a dominant attraction in screen entertainment. All of us who have something of the small boy in our souls love the fast riding, the gallant horses, the prairies, the cannon, the foiled plot and the heroics. Like the fairy tales, it is not easy to get over one's youthful preference for the heroes of the plains.

FEATURES:

1. "Santa Fe Trail" (Richard Arlen), Paramount, 6,142 ft.
2. "Big Trail" (pioneer epic), Fox, 11,116 ft.
3. "Fighting Caravans" (pioneers), Paramount, 8,566 ft.
4. "Covered Wagon Trail" (Bob Custer), State rights, 4,617 ft.
5. "Red Fork Range" (Wally Wales), Big 4, 5,490 ft.
6. "Conquering Horde" (Richard Arlen), Paramount, 6,869 ft.

SHORTS:

1. "Little Covered Wagon" (Chimpanzee comedy), Tiffany, 2 reels.
2. "Let 'Er Buck" (Sportlight-Wyoming Rodeo), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.
3. "The Little Trail" (Cartoon of Wild West), Columbia, 1 reel.
4. "My West" (Bruce Scenic), Paramount, 1 reel.
5. "Paleface Pup" (Fable), RKO Pathe, 1 reel.
6. "Pioneer Days" (Mickey Mouse cartoon), Columbia, 1 reel.
7. "Pony Express Kid," Universal.

Longfellow's Birthday

(Saturday, February 27)

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW—Birthday, February 27, 1807-1882. Poet, professor of modern languages and belles-lettres at Harvard. No American poet is more widely known and beloved.

Guests of honor:

1. Writers.
2. Representatives from New England Women.
3. Chairman of literature departments of women's organizations.

Invite primary teacher or librarian to tell the life story of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

FEATURES:

1. "Evangeline," United Artists, 9 reels.
2. "Rip Van Winkle" (In Southern California, obtained through Ward Lascelles, Los Angeles, Crestview 4886.)

SHORTS:

1. "Tide Rises" (Longfellow's poem-Scenic) Paramount.
2. "Booklovers," Paramount, 1 reel.
3. "Holiday in Storyland," Warner, 1 reel.
4. "Story Book Parade," Paramount, 1 reel.

This is an excellent occasion on which to offer a prize for an essay on Longfellow. Invite a committee of school people to act as judges. Have the winning essay read from the stage, and the young author presented to the audience. A framed picture of Longfellow, or a well bound copy of his poems, would be a suitable reward.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"THE SILENT WITNESS" is another mystery picture that ought to click in most spots, deluxe or otherwise. Sell the picture on its merits. Lionel Atwill, a grand actor from the socalled legitimate stage, is the central figure in this unique story that holds the interest right through until it is solved.

The title, like most mystery titles, must be capitalized to its greatest possibilities. Don't be afraid to sell that title as strong as you can. It will deliver for you after you entice the customers into your theatre. Make it as mysterious as you can and lay it on thick. A preview will open up many angles of thought in this connection, but lacking that opportunity you must draw upon your imagination and the press book to make up the difference.

In "audience value" we doubt whether any class of audience will fail to appreciate the fine entertainment, directing and acting that have been put into this picture. The element of "who really killed the girl" constantly pops up in your mind as the story unreels, but until it is almost finished you probably will be as poor a guesser as we were.

Lionel Atwill gives a marvelous performance and will find instant favor in the better class houses and elsewhere he will be accepted as OK also. If, by chance, he has made a stage appearance somewhere close to your city then you can elaborate on that fact, otherwise your selling angle for him is his reputation as one of the finest actors on the stage today; maybe, with smart show-selling you can make that sufficiently impressive to help your other merchandising angles.

Spotted mid-week, backed up with a strong mystery selling campaign, and aided by a little sensible exploitation, you ought to make this one count for above average receipts.

"THE GREEKS HAD A WORD FOR THEM" is indeed a title to play around with. Just how far you can go depends to a great extent upon the community in which your theatre is located and the class of patronage you draw from. The picture is good fun and carries enough laughs to place it in the class of superior screen fare.

The only marquee names you can sell are Ina Claire (if known or liked in your town), Madge Evans, who can be tied to her many MGM pictures, and Joan Blondell of "Blonde Crazy," "Union Depot" and other recent releases. But we have an idea that the most successful selling will be via the title above everything else.

It can certainly be built up to big box office proportions by showmen who know how to take a money title and get the most out of it. If the gold-digging slant appeals to your town, sell it that way; if any of the picture's other slants appeal, then take your cue accordingly. But by all means make that title bring them to the box office in large numbers; if you don't, then you have been guilty of neglect somewhere along the line.

In "audience value" you will be best able to judge for yourself at the very first show. The howls of laughter that will be almost continuous ought to be the best answer. The risque portions from the stage show (which was considered something of a success here in New York last season) have been handled most delicately and will not offend. Just a case of three good looking girls out for a good time and—fun.

While hardly suitable for kids or Sundays it is still an outstanding picture and should bring your receipts up accordingly. But you must understand that even though that title possesses some grand possibilities it is still "just a title" if you fail to back it up with the kind of a show-selling campaign to make them want to see it. So get busy as soon as your dates are set and see what you can do with a darned fine picture.

"PRESTIGE" will be found very satisfactory entertainment regardless of what you think your particular audience likes or dislikes. Don't draw hasty or premature opinions from merely reading of the story or what it is about. It is loaded with fine entertainment plus performances of unusual merit by the important members of the cast.

The b.o. appeal will depend on several different slants: first, the marquee strength of the names, and here you have Ann Harding, Melvyn Douglas and Adolphe Menjou; second, the type of merchandising you decide upon for selling an attraction like this in your community; third, your combining the first two in a campaign worthy of the picture.

In "audience value" we predict complete satisfaction. The story is well told; all the old baloney about the jungle and the heat has been left out except what is most essential. Characters handle their parts in a fine way and the direction leaves little to be desired.

It is sometimes difficult to convey the proper thoughts while writing a review of this sort and here I must stop long enough to point out that while the foregoing may sound too enthusiastic and bordering on the "epic" style, it is far from that. But if passed on to the many men in the field as "just another picture" it would be doing it a great injustice. That is why I want to keep enthusiastic and at the same time be honest enough to say that it is not the greatest picture of the year.

But you can make money with it providing you back it up with the same amount of enthusiasm and make it reflect in your advertising and other methods of merchandising. It's worthy of such treatment and can count for some added revenue if you sell it as it should be sold.

While there is nothing objectionable for the kids, its jungle and native slants are the only parts that would interest them. So perhaps it would be best to spot it elsewhere than on their best days. OK for Sunday if you want it there badly enough.

CHARLES E. LEWIS

The Silent Witness

(Fox)

Detective Drama

Fox offers an adaptation of a play by Jack DeLeon and Jack Celestin, centering about the heartbreaking efforts made by an English gentleman to save his son from the consequence of the murder he thought he had committed by taking upon himself the burden of the guilt after it is proved that his son's name must be brought out.

A goodly portion of the footage is devoted to a long court trial, the length of which is cleverly relieved by the injection of humor which found unmistakable favor with a large audience at the New York Roxy. Herbert Mundin plays the cockney cab driver, whose manner and conversation on the witness stand kept the patrons in a state of almost continuous laughter.

Lionel Atwill assumes, in excellent style, it was thought, the role of the father, doing perhaps his best dramatic work on the witness stand, when the prosecutor smashes his defensive story and he makes frantic mental effort to salvage his elaborate tale from complete destruction.

In chief support are Greta Nissen, attractive and blonde Swedish player, who, as the paramour of the son, is the victim of the murder, of which young Bramwell Fletcher thought himself guilty until the confession of another of Miss Nissen's lovers, in hiding in her apartment, reveals an ex-husband as the murderer. During the course of this confession, retold in the inspector's office at Scotland Yard following the pseudo confession of Atwill, flashbacks re-enact the story he recounts.

Able performances were thought to have been given by Weldon Heyburn as the dandified former husband and murderer; Billy Bevan as the "silent witness"; Wyndham Standing as the defense attorney and Alan Mowbray as the prosecutor. There is rather a singular absence of the English accent in certain cases, despite the fact that the entire scene is set in London and all the characters meant to be strictly English. This, however, did not noticeably detract from the performances.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Marcel Varnel and R. L. Hough. From the play by Jack De Leon and Jack Celestin. Screen play by Douglas Doty. Cameraman, Joseph August. Sound, Albert Protzman. Release date, February 7, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Lady With a Past

(RKO Pathe)

Drama

RKO-Pathe's presentation of "Lady With a Past" establishes two milestones in the annals of Hollywood's motion picture history. One is that it is the final picture made under the Charles R. Rogers-Pathe regime, and the other is the fact that Constance Bennett relaxes throughout the production. In doing so she plays a larger hand of moods and mannerisms heretofore kept in the background because in no other film have they been brought to the front.

In presenting a new Constance Bennett to the screen equal credit should go to Charles R. Rogers for selecting the proper story, to Edward H. Griffith for his excellent direction, and to Horace Jackson for a screen play that detours from the beaten path of motion picture themes by presenting a problem that every one will understand, as the solution is logically and entertainingly worked out. That problem is centered around a young society debutante suffering from an inferiority complex, but who finally realizes she must have a "past" to qualify for a position of equality in her particular set and also command the devotion of the man she loves.

The quest for a past without resorting to the usual bedroom or compromising formula is cleverly worked out with the aid of a well-balanced cast and by the shifting of scenes between America and Paris. The picture is a bit slow in getting under way, but from the time Miss Bennett arrives in Paris and meets Ben Lyon, it picks up momentum by force of a rapid succession of clever situations and barrage of smart lines coming so fast that it becomes impossible to time them for laughs. It is here that Lyon becomes as important as Miss Bennett to the story and gives one of his best performances in portraying the young American playboy who condescends to become a gigolo. Next to Lyon for honorable mention is David Manners, who gets the most that can be had out of his part under a great handicap of being established in the early part of the story as an unsympathetic hero. Next come Albert Conti, Blanche Frederici, Astrid Allwyn, Merna Kennedy, Don Alvarado, Cornelius Keefe and the balance of the cast. All blend well with the general feeling of the story.

The title of the picture might influence prudish parents against permitting their children to see it, but, on the contrary, it is one of the cleanest bills of screen fare presented under the Constance Bennett banner. The lines may be a trifle too fast and sophisticated for Saturday morning audiences, but as a whole it should be generally appreciated by those looking for light sophisticated comedy, beautiful gowns, gorgeous settings and a glimpse of Paris, all clearly defined by expert photography.

Produced and distributed by RKO-Pathe. Directed by Edward H. Griffith. Screen play by Horace Jackson. Photographed by Hal Mohr. Edited by Charles Craft. Release date, February 19, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Hatchet Man

(First National)

Oriental Drama

Edward G. Robinson offers here a new, and different characterization, that of the hatchet man, or official executioner of a powerful tong. As an oriental, Robinson was conceded to be unquestionably effective. Standing crowds at the Warner Winter Garden in New York attested undeniably to the popularity of the star, and their close attention throughout to the definite entertainment qualities of the highly melodramatic film offering, adapted from the stage play "The Honorable Mr. Wong," by Achmed Abdullah and the late David Belasco.

The scene shifts from China, where Robinson, in his official capacity, does his duty by sending an old friend to his venerable ancestors, via the hatchet, to San Francisco's Chinatown, where Robinson, a respected merchant and influential tong member, is guardian to the daughter of his victim years before.

A tong war breaks out and young Chinese gunmen are imported as bodyguards for the tong leaders. Among them is Leslie Fenton, who becomes the lover of Loretta Young, first the ward, now the wife of Robinson. Conciliation proposed by Robinson with the rival tong fails, and when Robinson's secretary is found murdered, he settles the trouble quietly with his resurrected hatchet, by disposing of the American gangster who is leading the opposition tong.

His return to San Francisco brings the discovery of his wife in Fenton's arms. He sends them away instead of killing Fenton, and as a result, is ostracized by the tong. Everything lost, he turns farm-hand, until the receipt of a letter from Miss Young, who has been deported with Fenton and is a servant girl in a sing-house in Hangkow. Robinson follows, hatchet in sleeve, finds the girl, and when the madame shows opposition, demonstrates his claim to being a hatchetman. The hatchet which he throws into the wall, lodges in the back of the head of Fenton who had been leaning against it from the opposite side. The sharp climax, quite unexpected, drew gasps from the audience.

The cast was called uniformly strong. The work of Dudley Digges as the chief of the tong was thought to have been the best Chinese characterization among the support.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by William A. Wellman. From the stage play, "The Honorable Mr. Wong," by David Belasco and Achmed Abdullah. Adapted by J. Grubb Alexander. Editor, Owen Marks. Cameraman, Sid Hickox. Release date, February 6, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Cross Examination

(Artclass Pictures)

Courtroom Drama

H. B. Warner here offers the role of a defense attorney at a murder trial, counsel for Donald Dillaway, accused of murdering his father, a wealthy and very close-pursed eccentric, played by William V. Mong. The action takes place almost in its entirety in the courtroom, with flashbacks re-enacting the testimony of the various material witnesses, including Dillaway, immediately preceding and just following the actual murder.

Acting honors were thought unquestionably to have been divided between Warner and Edmund Breese as the prosecutor. It is to a certain extent unusual to confine the action entirely to the courtroom on the one hand and to use the flashback throughout to convey the sequence of the action. At the same time, however, it was thought to have been successful, in that it sustained interest.

The trial brings to light the hidden woman in the life of the victim, an old servant by whom Mong had the child, who later was to be the defendant in a first degree murder trial. The woman, played by Sarah Padden, offers the climax when she rises suddenly in the courtroom and, called to the witness stand, gives the evidence which breaks the back of the chain of circumstantial evidence built by Breese to convict the boy. The film depends for its effect on dialogue and characterization rather than on action.

Sally Blane plays the fiancee of Dillaway, planning to marry him after the two succeed in getting a divorce from her husband, B. Wayne LaMont, who affords a bit of amusement on the stand. Among the witnesses are Niles Welch, Nita Cavalier, Margaret Fealy and Alexander Pollard as the murdered man's attorney and three servants, respectively. Natalie Moorhead plays the victim's wife, whose affair with Welch is brought to light by Warner's questioning.

Produced by Supreme Features, Inc. Distributed by Weiss Brothers, Artclass Pictures. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Story, continuity, dialogue by Arthur Hoerl, Cameraman, A. Anderson. Sound, Mack Dalgleish. Running time, 72 minutes.

Three Wise Girls

(Columbia)

Drama

Jean Harlow, Marie Prevost and Mae Clark are the three wise girls, who, rather than being wise originally, gain their wisdom after a few experiences, which have been often recounted in the song and story of the modern mode.

Jean Harlow moves from the small town soda fountain to the models' quarters in a fashionable New York dress establishment when her friend Miss Clark gives evidence of her prosperity by showering gifts upon her mother. Miss Harlow, living with plump, unsophisticated Miss Prevost, is introduced and becomes a remarkably apt pupil in the art of dressing. Underwear is not neglected in the ensemble.

Miss Harlow chances to meet Walter Byron, rich and with much time on his hands. Their friendship ripens in the expected fashion, though Miss Clark warns her not to permit it to go too far, for she is deeply in love with Jameson Thomas, wealthy and married, and she sees nothing ahead. Miss Harlow suddenly discovers that Byron is married to Natalie Moorhead, who has refused to grant the divorce Byron wants. They break off and both are definitely miserable, we are given to understand. About to be reconciled, Miss Harlow is called by Miss Clark, but arrives too late. Miss Clark had read of her lover's reconciliation with his wife, and the iodine bottle is already empty.

Miss Harlow packs up and returns to the soda fountain, and misery, where Byron, now divorced, finds her. Miss Prevost had incidentally married Byron's chaffeur, played by Andy Devine.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by William Beaudine. Story by Wilson Collison. Adaptation by Agnes C. Johnson. Dialogue, Robert Riskin. Cameraman, Teddy Tetzlaff. Editor, Jack Dennis. Release date, January 11, 1932. Running time, 68 minutes.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

career; his vitality is amazing, and might be emulated by some of the younger men in British pictures.

Throughout the story is developed on the lightest and brightest of comedy lines, and Monty Banks, who directed, has made the most of a cast in which players of the smallest parts are artists of proved stellar status. The ingenious story exploits all the humorous possibilities of two Mr. Cheddars—one a millionaire and the other a roulette-ruined refugee from Monte Carlo—in a situation of mistaken identity. Innocently enough the Cheddar without the means is received at the Dorchester Hotel, London (haven of visiting film stars), and is feted as the millionaire. Equally innocently he gets into a big push of Australian gold shares, and just when he discovers that through his unwitting instrumentality these shares have leaped to a thousand per cent premium, he recalls that he accepted at Monte Carlo a few thousand shares in lieu of I. O. U. He discovers that, among other unexpected complications, he is rich enough to return to Monte Carlo and pay the hotel bill, before which he had to flee. There is a love interest, and a mild conspiracy in which Sir Henry Blossom (Edmund Gwenn) and his daughter, Joan Blossom (Betty Stockfield) engage for financial considerations. But although the course of true love does not run as smoothly as the share-pushing business, there is a happy fade-out, so it doesn't matter.

Funny situations abound, and the satire employed by Monty Banks makes cunning use of the servility which millionaires can command. In one scene, he has probably gone too far unless he knows something, for in depicting a vain and patriarchal author who delights in giving autographs to feminine admirers, he has drawn a life-like representation of G. Bernard Shaw. Hicks has good supporting players in Henry Wenman, as the real Cheddar, Donald Calthrop as the servile hotel manager, and Renee Gadd, as a "lidy's maid." Betty Stockfield will have to take a little of the honeyed vinegar out of her accent before she is likely to appeal much to American audiences, though in this film she is true to type as a conceited society girl. This is really Seymour Hicks' best film so far.

Produced and distributed by British International. Directed by Monty Banks. Story by Seymour Hicks. Scenario by Walter Mycroft and Victor Kendall. Running time, 73 minutes.

SHORTS

The Imperfect Lover
(Vitaphone)
Fairly Amusing

Jack Haley makes a fairly amusing effort as the eye-glassed, stupid-acting young inventor, who is shy to the point of annoyance in the eyes of his sweetheart. He attempts to show her objecting father his inventions, with catastrophic results to the latter. Treatment for feminine-shyness from a feminine doctor works wonders in one session; the result, triplets and a baby carriage. A few laughs.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Nickel Nurser
(MGM)
Many Laughs

Charlie Chase at his best in the sort of comedy performance he knows best how to handle. He is hired as an efficiency expert by the father of three attractive young things, and is supposed to remain in the household to teach the girls habits more closely approaching economy. One of the daughters, Thelma Todd, changes places with the maid, wife of the butler, and then things begin to happen. Charlie becomes mixed in boudoirs, bath rooms, pools and the like in his own slapstick manner. Hardly intellectual but they should laugh a great deal and have an enjoyable time. Directed by Warren Doane.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Bitter Half
(Vitaphone)
Fair Comedy

Ann Codde is the wife of a circus strong man, who loses his memory, and disappears for a matter of 10 years. He returns to find her married again, to Frank Orth. Strong man, meanwhile, has married the bearded lady. Miss Codde has spent most of her time telling her husband what a model man her first husband had been, using it whenever an argument developed. Imagine her surprise when the strong man suddenly walks in, arm in arm with the bearded lady.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Any Old Port
By All Means

This time, if you please, the ever-amusing Laurel and Hardy are a pair of salt sea tars, and what they go through and the way they go through it should make any audience laugh long and loud. The fun begins when they attempt to break up the wedding of a tough lad and a timid girl. Then the comedic pair jump from one mixup to another, including a boxing match. It is Laurel vs. the would-be groom and enormously funny. James Horne directed, with Walter Long and Jacqueline Wells in the support. Don't miss it.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Naggers at the Opera
(Vitaphone)
Only Fair

The henpecking couple, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, as the Naggers, decide to attend the opera after she thinks she would like to. First it is found that his tuxedo is both moth-eaten and badly shrunken, then the car stalls on the way and her gown looks it after she has to assist in pushing the car. Of course they arrive at the opera in time to see the resplendent audience filing out. The audience at the New York Strand gave evidence of being fairly well entertained.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Arabian Shrieks
(Paramount)
Amusing Enough

Smith and Dale save the day for the Foreign Legion in their own peculiar, and rather amusing manner. They are funny on the desert, in a tented harem at the oasis, and of course, save the day quite by accident and through no fault of their own. The audience at the Rialto, on Broadway, extracted numerous laughs from their comedic effort. Direction was handled by Aubrey Scotto.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Free Eats
(MGM)
Innumerable Laughs

The Our Gang youngsters, under the supervision of Hal Roach, offer here a treat for the children and a good deal of enjoyment in the laugh-vein for the adults. Two midgets, not members in good standing of the Gang, themselves take a number of the laughs. The two attend a social and succeed in getting away with all the jewelry discernible as well as the contents of a wall safe, before they are discovered. Raymond McCarey directed. Running time, 20 minutes.

The Beach Party
(Columbia)
Novel, Amusing

This one runs ahead, in cleverness, entertainment and amusement, of the usual Walt Disney output. Mr. and Mrs. Horse go to the beach and Micky, Minnie and the slab-sided hound accompany them. An octopus comes up out of the sea and chases the dog, with results that will make any audience anywhere sit up, laugh and be vastly entertained.

Sport Slants
(Vitaphone)
Interesting

Ted Husing touches on a few spots, rather diversified in type, in this, number five of his series. Instruction in backgammon, the excitement of a ski race in Switzerland, champions at their bowling and various methods in the art of wrestling are included in the short, which possesses a definite interest.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Censor Recants After Cutting 600 Ft. from "The Guardsman"

An order for elimination of 600 feet of the M-G-M film, "The Guardsman," was rescinded when the film played the Melba in Dallas this week. The controversy was precipitated when Paul Short, manager, announced he would run the film with the gap left by the censor cuts, and LeRoy Bickel said he would not release the film from the M-G-M exchange unless it were to be shown completely.

Some 300 inquiries sent out to Melba patrons are said to have influenced the censor decision, since it was claimed that only two of the 100 who answered desired the cutting of the film.

Cohen, Hutchinson Producing

Milton Cohen, veteran in foreign distribution, and Charles Hutchinson have entered production under the name, Empire Pictures Productions. "At the Stroke of 12," first of a series of four, has already been completed on the Coast.

Warners Buy Play

Warners has bought "Doctor X," stage play of last season by Howard Comstock and Allen Miller, which will go into production shortly. No cast has been selected.

22 in Month at Vitaphone

The Vitaphone Brooklyn studios, production center of Warner shorts, broke all records in January when 22 one and two-reel films were turned out, including four two-reelers and 18 one-reelers.

Tiffany Preparing Two

Tiffany, at the Coast plant, is preparing the adaptation of "Lena Rivers," novel and "Strangers of the Evening." "Whistlin' Dan" replaces "Border Renegades" as the title of the second Ken Maynard western.

See First Mexican Film

Officials of many leading film companies were among the distinguished audience which last week viewed "The Soul of Mexico," first full-length feature ever made on Mexican soil. The screening was at Roerich Hall, Riverside Drive, New York.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Total receipts from 182 houses in 30 key cities for the calendar week ended February 6 showed a decrease of $68,160 from the total recorded for the previous calendar week, ended January 30, when the aggregate figure reached $2,301,831 for 184 theatres in 30 cities. The figure for the latter week was $2,233,371. During that week only one new high individual theatre record figure was established, at the RKO Albee, in Providence, playing "Prestige," while 11 new low individual figures were recorded. This compares with eight new "highs" and six new "lows" during the preceding week.

The CRITICS Have A Word For Them— "PRAISE!"

"One of the most entertaining film productions The Rialto has housed in some months, offering a snappily concocted, splendidly enacted, fast-moving romantic farce . . . holds interest through every foot of its unreeling. And it is hereby recommended as a diverting movie . . . The clothes the women in "THE GREEKS HAD A WORD FOR THEM" wear are something to write home about. It will hand you hilarious surprises. Beautifully mounted film, with Sherman supplying the masculine touch of sophistication, as well as taking the directorial bows."
—N. Y. Evening Graphic

"The exquisite Chanel creations and the stunning Richard Day sets certainly make it worth your while seeing "THE GREEKS HAD A WORD FOR THEM". But that's not all! Zoe Akins is a wiz at writing gold-digger plays, and Sidney Howard is as fine a movie adapter as the talkies boast. He has turned out a . . . flicker which should give the folks plenty much eyeful and earful during its run . . . smooth, polished, finished. Eighty minutes worth of celluloid that is a pleasure to behold and joyful to hear . . . You won't want to miss this picture."
—N. Y. Daily News

Gloriously Presented by

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

who gave you "WHOOPEE", "PALMY DAYS" "STREET SCENE" and "ARROWSMITH"

Directed by LOWELL SHERMAN

"Ina Claire contributes a sparkling performance . . . she puts it over with her superb comedy sense . . . Joan Blondell is grand as Schatze . . . It's smart comedy, replete with clever lines and consistently diverting. Fast-moving tempo. You'll enjoy it." —N. Y. Evening Journal

"Zestfully acted, cleverly directed, handsomely mounted . . . Miss Evans plays her role with charm, creates sympathy for the character . . . Ina Claire plays with impertinence and skill. Joan Blondell most appealing, genuinely amusing. The girls' clothes, designed by Chanel, are lovely and interesting . . . This is first rate fun."
—N. Y. Daily Mirror

"The Chanel clad version of Broadway's glorification of gay golddiggers proves ace entertainment as brought to the screen in Sam Goldwyn's handsome production... Miss Claire coquettes exquisitely through the major portion of the footage and the other girls share histrionic honors... The costuming is the last word." —N. Y. American

"A riot of fun emanates from the screen shadows. There is beauty, too, lavish settings and good acting . . . Miss Evans is pretty and capable. Miss Blondell and Miss Claire keep the merriment bright. Mr. Sherman gives a smooth performance and Mr. Smally adds to the general gayety of the piece."

Behind the badge stand the forces of law, matching wits with the cunning of a mad man!

Behind the mask lurk the forces of diabolical evil!

When these two forces meet through the medium of the screen, the result is a "shocker" which will jar your box-office out of that slump and send it whirling into wealth!

GENERAL MOTORS BUILDING · NEW YORK CITY

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Aaron Saperstein had hardly gotten comfortably settled in one of Hot Springs' hot baths before rumors cropped up along the Row. Whatever may develop in the future, these rumors, purporting to indicate dissension in the local Allied ranks, are finding no champions as these lines are written. Apparently those responsible for them are content to stay well concealed—and shoot from ambush.

The Row had a mystery on its hands last week. It involved the stench bombing of a half dozen or more theatres. Four bombings were verified by this department. The mystery lies in the fact that no reason for the unpleasantness could be ascribed by the afflicted houses.

The local Universal branch is being completely remodeled and redecorated, new furniture will be installed and when the job is completed it will place the Chicago office on a par with the finest of the company's exchanges in the country.

Five bandits pulled a daring holdup of the Berwyn theatre while a show was under way, but the raid netted them only $25—indicating that business must be off, or the management mighty clever in concealing the receipts.

Irving Lipnick is now manager of the Halfield theatre.

The many friends of Del Goodman, Fox representative in China, were glad to receive word that Goodman and his wife have thus far managed to avoid contact with any of the shootings in the troubled area.

The Webster theatre, which has been operated by George Koesetkia, has been closed.

Irving Mack, head of the Filmack Company, is all set for a dash to Broadway's big lights. Irving will spend a week on his trip, making a number of stops en route back to Chicago.

Oscar Florine has joined the sales staff of the United Artists office.

The Grandale theatre on West Grand avenue, closed for some time, has been reopened.

HOLQUIST

Arthur Dent En Route to U. S.

Arthur Dent, of British International and Wardour Pictures, London, will sail for New York on the S.S. Bremen on Saturday to study the BIP organization in the United States and also to buy suitable American product for distribution in Great Britain.

Chase to Make Appearances

Charlie Chase, MGM-Hal Roach comedy player, opened a personal appearance tour on February 5 at the Balaban and Katz Oriental, Chicago. Subsequent engagements have not been announced.

Fred Wehrenberg Recovering

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri, is recovering from an attack of pneumonia, and is convalescing at his St. Louis home. He has been confined for the past six weeks.

Educational to Release Eight One, Two-Reelers in March

Educational will release four one-reelers and four two-reel comedies during March. They include: "Hollywood Luck," "The Lost Race," March 18; "Billboard Girl," 20; "Mother's Day," 20; "The Flirty Sleepwalker," "It's a Cinch," 27; "Play Ball," 6; second Terry-Toon, 20.

"Hubby's Last Chance," new Sennett comedy, has been completed. Harry Barris has been signed by Al Christie for another Vanity comedy.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Hollywood, Cal.

We note that outside of the movie stars in Beverly Hills, the most of the millionaires have settled either in Pasadena or Santa Barbara. The balance of the folks are just milling around with the common herd. That's why we feel so at home here in Hollywood.

A boy down in Tennessee confessed to the killing of a farmer for which he was paid five dollars, a new shirt and a suit of underwear. This would seem to be a reasonable compensation during these times, although it is much less than the $50 minimum paid in Chicago for like services, but then, Chicago always did try to bull the market.

Some more stars we would like to interview:

Sue Carol. Sue says that Nancy should eat more pickles and less starchy foods, and Nancy says Sue should get her a boy friend who could drive with one hand on the wheel. They are both correct.

Jack Okie. We saw Jack directing the orchestra in a scene on the Paramount lot. Jack was cutting up monkey shines to the delight of the company and no doubt they will be a delight to his admirers. Jack will be just "Jack" wherever you find him.

Myrna Loy. We wouldn't want to say that Myrna gets handsomer every day, that might cause trouble at home, but she makes delicious soda biscuits and says she can't tell the difference between a Lucky and a Chesterfield. Some girls can't.

Chic Sale. Chic says he has never had the heart to chew horseshoe tobacco since Fanny, the old family mare, died with the heaves. Chic has always been kinda chicken-hearted that way.

Conrad Nagel. The director said to Conrad: "Conrad, do you know Lincoln's Gettysburg Address?" And Conrad thought for a moment and then replied, "Yes, sir, it is 427 South 10th Street." And the director said: "Well, well, well, what a memory some people have!" They just can't stick that Conrad no way they try to fix it.

Irene Rich. Irene claims the distinction of being one movie star whom Will Rogers never tried to kiss. We can't understand Will's negligence.

Buster Keaton. When a boy, Buster decided he wanted to be a railroad engineer but he later gave that up and decided to become a preacher until he was caught shooting craps with a bunch of film salesmen, and now look at him.

An actress was offered one hundred dollars to indorse a certain brand of cigarets but refused. Another actress, hearing of it, said: "Gee whiz, I'd indorse chewing tobacco for that money." Yes, and we'd indorse Punkerino for half that amount; there's nothing expensive about us.

Article XVI of the League covenant says: "If any member of the League resorts to war it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the League." We wonder what the League will say to Japan about that. It looks like it was up to the League to either drink or get away from the trough.

And now Mussolini r'ars up and demands that the United States cancel all war debts. If Uncle Sam does this we are going to wire our wife to cancel all grocery and coal bills and place our home on a nontaxable basis. We don't propose to let any foreign country get the best of us.

We note that the Democrats are holding some "Victory Dinners." Well, that's a wise thing to do. They have been holding such functions now for a long time on the theory that it is best to hold them previous to election. We are heartily in favor of this because after election those durn greedy Republicans may cheat us out of 'em.

Did you know that China had prohibition twenty-five hundred years ago? Well, she did, and any one caught with liquor was sent to prison for life and any bootlegger caught selling liquor was beheaded. Prohibition prohibited in those days. That kind of enforcement now would be tough on several cities I could mention.

Phil Rand of Salmon, Idaho, that old wheel-horse, formerly known as one of the original "Four Horsemen" of the HERALD, certainly penned a convincing reply to Samuel Goldwyn in the issue of January 9 of this household necessity. Mr. Goldwyn, like many other heads of producing companies, placed the cart before the horse when he said that "theatres must adjust themselves to supply and not to demand." The facts are that "supply" must adjust itself to the "demands" of the theatre or this business will go haywire.

We are certainly doing our bit toward helping the orange growers of California. We eat an average of nine before going to bed and seven before breakfast, and with this habit well formed, we can see that it is going to cost us a lot of dough when we get back to Nebraska. California could well afford to have us locate here, but what would Nebraska say about that? Jevver think of that?

Well, for the lova Mike, whatja know about that? On the lawn across from our room some kids built a snow man four feet high. Maybe the next thing will be "Snow-kissed oranges." What a poser that was for those "Sunny California" press agents.

Don't tune out yet, we are not through. Bad titles to pictures have kept more people away from the theatres than smallpox, seven year itch, peewee golf and political conventions combined. Let's trade the gravel train, boys, for some title writers.

Down at the Criterian we saw Marie Dressler in "Emma" and, oh, boy, what a picture! They can place this one as No. 1 in the next "Fifteen Box Office Champions." We could say more but we couldn't say less.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE
INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE,

Dear "J. C.":

Now that you and your faithful playmate, "April Shower," have finally and reluctantly left Hollywood and are now in memory living over again the happy times you spent among the celebrities of the motion picture capital, no doubt you soon will be renewing old acquaintences and making new friends on your trek through Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. It is in connection with a recent big contract in Texas that I offer the following suggestion. You see, it was like this: The Board of Control of the state of Texas decided to install sound motion picture reproducing equipment in twelve institutions under its jurisdiction, and proposals from the various manufacturers of sound apparatus were invited. As you may imagine, competition was exceptionally keen. However, when the bids were opened and the specifications carefully considered, the contract was awarded to RCA Photophone. The contract calls for the installation of eleven Special Size and one Standard Size equipments in the state schools at Austin, Gatesville, and Gainesville; state hospitals at San Antonio, Abilene, Rusk, Wichita Falls, Terrell, and Austin; the home for neglected and dependent children at Waco; the orphans' home at Corsicana and the state tuberculosis sanitorium at Sanitorium. Now, that's quite a contract, "J. C.", and it certainly speaks well for RCA Photophone equipment. But it's the same old story, "J. C." Texas wanted the best sound reproducing equipment that could be bought, and it was quite natural, specifications and reputation considered, for the board of control to award the contract to RCA Photophone, Inc. When you drop into Austin, look up Burt King, our district manager. He'll tell you all about it.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

WORK AND LEARN!

JUST as the business itself has passed through many different sorts of changes, so are the men within it readjusting themselves, their methods and their ideas to suit present-day requirements of manpower.

Yesterday it seemed perfectly all right for a manager to open and close his theatre, check the receipts and cashier, send his ad to the newspaper office and in other ways function "just to keep things going."

Yesterday it was O.K. for that same manager to know that he had a piano in the pit, or possibly an organ; projection machines up in the booth; an exhaust fan somewhere up under the roof, and a furnace down in the cellar.

Yesterday the manager was a peaceful, unassuming citizen who went merrily on his way with hardly a single worry to wrinkle his smooth and intelligent (sometimes) brow. An unusually hard day would consist of having to look over his ticket supply or booth necessities and send out an order through the mail for replenishing these supplies. Or perhaps the lavatories needed a plumber's attention. Much more than that would hardly ever occur in any one day. And if he sneaked off for an afternoon of fishing or to take the family for a drive, no one seemed to care an awful lot about it, even the boss. The house was running along, business was O.K., and everything was "jake."

But yesterday is gone. Tomorrow is always on our neck.

The showman of today is an entirely different individual. He has changed from the happy-go-lucky, who-cares sort of a chap into a business man of intelligence, a student of public psychology, of advertising, of good-will promotion—an efficient theatre operator with a knowledge and insight into all of the intricacies that make up the modern talking-picture theatre.

He has learned that the booth contains something more than "just a couple of machines"; he has found out that scientific regulation of ventilating apparatus is of vital importance for the comfort and health of his patrons; that expensive sound reproduction equipment must be carefully taken care of and thoroughly understood not only by the projectionists but by the manager as well.

In other words, yesterday's theatre manager has become today's showman and theatre expert. He has found how imperative it is to acquire an education into everything pertaining to present-day theatre operation and he is determined to learn about every phase of his theatre's equipment, stopping at nothing to gain that knowledge.

So he's going to school. Going to school in the sense of the word that he is carefully reading up on what makes all those wheels go round; what might cause a breakdown of his sound equipment; what must be done to properly handle that new and different ventilating system; what more than shoveling coal is necessary to heat the building economically and comfortably; what sort of wear and tear is costing him expensive repairs and replacements in the projection equipment, the seats, the carpets, and so on all along the line.

Those showmen who are better known as hangovers from yesterday must rapidly change their perspective and go back to school or find themselves left by the wayside. No aggressive man will want to find himself in that class. He will recognize today's needs for knowledge and education and set about to acquire that knowledge and education.

No longer can the theatre manager write off trouble and mismanagement with ignorance and alibis. He is expected, and rightly so, to know why there was trouble, what caused it, and whether it could have been avoided. Lacking the right answers to those three queries, or depending on others—who may be saving their own necks—for the answers is merely another way of admitting ignorance. And there is no reason for it.

We wonder how many members and readers of the Round Table pages closely follow the various other departments in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and the Better Theatres section? We wonder how many of them realize the wealth of technical knowledge and information set forth in those various departments week in and week out—knowledge and information phrased in language that anyone can read and understand.

The really smart showman doesn't miss a trick. He can discuss any subject pertaining to theatre operation with ease and in plain, understandable English; when anything goes wrong, he must know the reason for it and know how to check up on those who are offering the all too ready explanations.

Forget yesterday's take-it-easy methods and brush up on today's problems. Go back to school and get some education or you're going to end up seated on a high bench with the dunce's cap on your head.

DOUGLAS GEORGE IS STILL HITTING FAST PACE IN PORTSMOUTH

Another example of clever advertising done by Douglas George, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, was turned out by this enterprising showman in connection with showings of "Spirit of Notre Dame."

There is an organization of National League Football players in Portsmouth known as "The Spartans," and George arranged for the entire squad to witness a preview showing of the film. In return for this privilege the secretary of the organization wrote a letter of appreciation which was reproduced as part of a large ad. Every member of the squad affixed his signature to the letter. The assembly made a very striking display.

We also have before us a copy of "The Silver Sheet," an attractively mimeographed house organ with catchline, "Mo' Silver for Moe Silver," and featuring an "all star cast of theatre employees." This particular copy announced a change in price policy at the Columbia and LaRoy theatres, carried other interesting items concerning house and employees and the whole make-up is another good example of what can be done with the modern mimeograph in the turning out of house organs, programs, letter-heads, etc. Incidentally, distribution of this one for all three Warner houses in the city was made at no cost to theatre, credit being given by a small line on back cover to the firm who did the job.

George's activities in show-business are always interesting to us and his fellow Round Tablers and we're glad to present the above evidence that this member is hitting his usual pace.

CREW AT THE STRAND THEATRE IN NEW YORK DOING SOME FINE WORK

The advertising and exploitation men down at the Strand Theatre, New York City, have been putting over some neat campaigns of late, not the least of which was a stunt engineered in connection with showings of "Blonde Crazy."

Some one, presumably Mort Blumenstock, Zeb Epstein or Hal Salzman, thought it would be a great idea to have James Cagney make a personal appearance during the engagement. Then the same trio masterminded the gag of giving away 50 passes to the first 50 blondes who came to the opening performance. Both plans went into effect, with the result that even a downpour of rain failed to keep a large crowd from gathering in front of the theatre. Police had to be called to control traffic.

More power to these enterprising showmen for putting over their stunt and we're passing it along for other Club members to use on this particular picture, or any other that has to do with blondes.

PRESS BROKE HOUSE RECORDS FOR A DAY WITH BENEFIT SHOW

To further a plan sponsored by the local Rotary Club to provide a pint of milk a day to undernourished school children, Mat Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Hattiesburg, Miss., arranged a benefit show that broke all existing one-day records for the house.

The Parents-Teachers Association sponsored the event, the president stating that the organization had made special arrangements for sharing the proceeds of a special program, composed entirely of motion pictures.

Press started publicity on this stunt nine days in advance and the local papers were most generous with front page stories. This is another one of the good-will builders he puts across at intervals in his town and public reaction was most gratifying. On account of the usually large gate the box-office got by with a clean bill of health.

CASSADY'S ATTRACTIVE POSTER WORK

Herewith a few samples of poster work turned out by C. C. Cassady, poster artist for Zaring's Egyptian Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

The head of the "Frankenstein" monster in the center of the group of photos on this page was six feet high and was used in the foyer. Done in greens, yellows and black with a green spot playing on it, the head presented a striking appearance. When in use all other foyer lights were turned off. The eyes were cutout with red lights behind, a flasher being used to give a "dead and alive" effect.

The head described above is flanked on either side with posters made for "Local Boy Makes Good," portraying Joe E. Brown in character and cartoon. Both were effectively used when this picture was sold. One of the shots is rather faint, owing to a cloudy snapshot, but we trust it will serve to carry out the idea.

This not the first time we've presented examples of Cassady's work and hope that this instance is far from being the last. He has been an important factor in the advertising end of show selling at the Egyptian for quite some time and his Club will look forward to seeing further evidence of his ability to turn out attractive posters.

SOLOMON PUT OVER EXTRA ACTIVITIES FOR XMAS HOLIDAYS

Reviewing some of the work done over the holiday season by S. S. Solomon, city manager for Publix in Youngstown, Ohio, it is a safe conclusion that he was a very busy showman during that time.

His flourishing Mickey Mouse club received renewed impetus during weeks preceding Xmas through a tie-up with a department store, which paid all expenses covering special awards, etc. Doors of the theatre were thrown open Saturday mornings at 9 o'clock, with special show starting at 9:30. Endorsed by the superintendent of schools, service clubs, women's clubs, etc., the first meeting of the club yielded 750 paid kiddie members. Over 2,250 are enrolled and each receives a birthday card, besides other marked attention.

Every Friday evening auditions of amateur acts are heard at a nearby dance hall, averaging around 40 acts. Every Wednesday six of these acts are presented at the theatre, with Solomon acting as M. C. Four awards are listed and the final girl and boy winners after the eighth week receive free transportation to and from Chicago, plus an entire outfit and possibly seven days' stay at a Chicago hotel. Both newspapers lend cooperation and the acts are arranged same as on a vaude bill, with no conflict and a pleasing variety of singing, dancing and snappy comedy.

Good Will performance and special midnight shows also came in for a share of attention during the month. Sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars the underprivileged children of the neighborhood were entertained following a parade by a kiddie unit. Candy, printing for the occasion and all other expenses attached were promoted free of charge. A special New Year's show featured an auction sale.

When "Jekyll and Hyde" was shown a session in the darkened theatre, attended by a local reporter and the fire chief, the stunt was good for a big story and cut of one patron getting a heart test after the "ordeal." A photo of a bally is also pictured on this page.

We're glad to hear from Solomon again and to know that his Mickey Mouse Club is going along so well. Judging from the large amount of response already in this organization should be a real, going concern by this time. His amateur night gag is also highly interesting and we'll look forward to hearing how both these innovations eventually turn out.

SCREEN STAR GIVEN ROUSING RECEPTION BY STANLEY SHOWMEN

Although somewhat belated as a piece of news, it's not amiss to mention that good work was done by the publicity staff of the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., on occasion of a personal appearance made there by the screen star Alice White. No credits are mentioned on photo or data at hand, but we take it for granted that Burton Hoffman had a heavy hand in the job.

Miss White arrived in town on Friday and was escorted by motor-cycle police to a reception awaiting her at the theatre. As you will note by the photo, she was officially greeted by the City Commissioners, interviewed by reporters, and sound pictures were taken of the event. The reception was broadcast over a local station, and photos of the meeting appeared in the paper.

The following Monday she took a trip through the plant of "The Journal," which resulted in a published photo of the star at editor's desk. Later on in the day she paid a visit to a home for crippled children. On Tuesday she was the guest of honor at the Lion's Club.

Advertising included distribution of 45,000 heralds house-to-house, in factories, etc., and a large street banner. A new, late model auto was promoted for Miss White's use while in the city. Her appearance there was made in conjunction with the showing of "Local Boy Makes Good."

Quite a bit of fuss we should say over Miss White. And it all goes to show what publicity can be attained when a popular star makes a personal appearance. Still going under the assumption that Burton Hoffman engineered the job, we'll again state that he was apparently on his toes.

Breuninger in Deal

Following acquisition by Fox of the well-known Jayhawk Theatre, Salina, Kan., on a 13-year lease, Lawrence Breuninger, owner of the house, has been placed in charge of all Fox theatres in that city. He replaces Forest McPhail, who, after taking a well earned vacation, will follow other plans. It is thought that McPhail will go with E. C. Rhoden.

Under the new regime, William R. Scott, assistant manager under McPhail, is replaced by Ed Dorrell, a brother-in-law of Breuninger's, and who has been identified with management of the Jayhawk.

A MOVING DISPLAY DRAWS ATTENTION!

HERE IS THE FINISHED BARREL IN USE

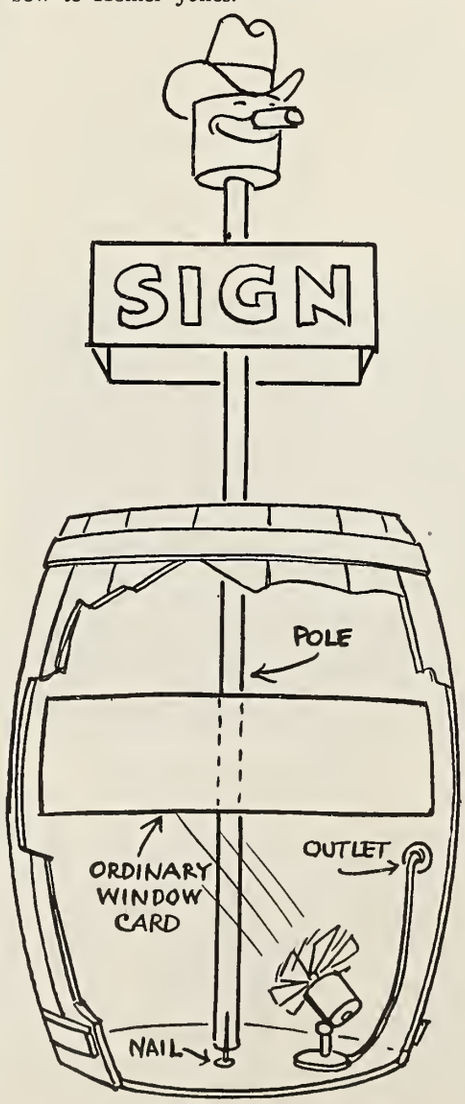
NEW Club members bring in New ideas, as in the case of Homer C. Jones, owner and manager of the Jones Amusement Company, Alva, Okla. Only a week or so ago we recorded the fact that his application for membership in this organization was at hand. And here he is with a simple and inexpensive idea for a moving display, which may be placed in your lobby, a window and various other places wherever there may be a nearby electric connection.

The line cut on this page should be sufficient to illustrate how this contraption may be made. The other photo will give an idea of the amount of advertising display possible with this trick barrel.

An Ordinary Barrel!

In this instance an ordinary coco-cola barrel was used, painted dark brown with letters made by cutawl in yellow. The top of the barrel was drilled for insertion of a round pole, such as a broomstick, and in the center of the bottom part of the barrel was placed a nail on which the pole rode. Air current from the electric fan in the bottom of the barrel was directed against the two window cards tacked to pole just underneath top and furnished power to make the pole revolve at the rate of 30 to 40 R.P.M.

On the occasion of its use with the Four Marx Bros. note that the same barrel carried a cut-out head of each brother, for reason that all four sides were utilized to carry a head and message. Both lower and upper portions of the pole above top of barrel are used for this purpose.



Credit Hollis Herod!

The above gag was perpetrated by Hollis Herod, advertising man and artist for the Jones Amusement Co., and to all appearances is an original one. We have pictured and described it to the best of our ability and if any of you Round Tablers want to construct a replica, why just hop right to it with Jones' and Herod's best wishes. That's why they sent it along, and we'll hope that the future will bring forth many other practical ideas from these two enterprising showmen out in Oklahoma.

Jones has been in the game since starting in with his father down in Texas in 1918. His dad sold out to R & R about that time and the two of them migrated to Oklahoma. Incidentally, his dad is still with him at Alva, and to him, his son and Herod, we tender our very best wishes for a prosperous New Year in show-business.

The illustration below shows the Round Table artist's conception of Jones' animated display and it is to be hoped that details will be clear for those who may wish to construct one of these unique contraptions.

Only one window card shows in the diagram but the description sent by Jones states that two were tacked to the pole, possibly re-inforcement or to supply additional air surface. A little experimentation will prove this point one way or the other. So go to it boys, and if you like the idea, make your bow to Homer Jones.

NOTRE DAME COACH MADE APPEARANCE TO HELP GEORGE O'BRIEN

This little sidelight on the show-selling ability of George O'Brien, manager of Alger's Hub Theatre, Rochelle, Ill., may be somewhat belated as to its news value but we venture it will suffice to point out that this Round Tabler is on his job.

When he played "Spirit of Notre Dame" he had no less a personage on the stage than "Hunk" Anderson himself, the football coach of Notre Dame. Not only did "Hunk" appear at all three performances to tell the audience all they wished to know about the late Rockne and the Notre Dame football squad, but it was arranged to hold a big banquet for him at one of the town's institutions. The local newspaper played up the occasion with a two-column lead story, and O'Brien took most of the paper's back page to tell Rochelle communities that this particular picture and many others could be seen at the Hub. Incidentally, O'Brien is a former Notre Dame man. And that, of course, helped.

That was indeed a great piece of work, George, and we're sure you are in line for congratulations from the entire Club for obtaining the services of such a luminary in football. We note in your large ad that you recently held quite a deluxe give-away. Why not tell us something about how you promoted gifts for this occasion, or any other activity that has engaged your recent attention.

COEFFLE CASHED IN ON HOME TOWN ANGLE WHEN PLUGGING FILM

Full advantage was taken of the fact that Crawfordsville, Ind., was the home town of the author of Ben Hur by W. Carroll Coeffle, manager of the Strand Theatre in that city, when the revised sound version of the picture of that title was being shown.

The Wallace estate loaned him the original manuscript for display in the theatre lobby and donated 800 catalogues giving information on the story for distribution about town.

Heads of schools in town and in the County granted permission for the posting of special letters from the theatre, stating that there would be a special matinee for children at a special price. In addition, the Superintendent of Schools sent out an order to all teachers to mention the picture and playdate.

Past contributions to this department from Coeffle are not recalled at this writing, but now that the ice has been broken we hope that he will become an active member of this Club. Maybe he got a break as far as the above is concerned, but there's no getting away from the fact that he was on the job to reap whatever benefit that might result from the coincidence.

Atlanta Transfers

Carter Barron, formerly manager of the Fox Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has won a promotion to a Washington, D. C. house. Roy Youngblood, former manager of the Grand Theatre, a Loew house, succeeds to Barron's job. Louis White, who acted as treasurer of the Fox, has been chosen to fill Youngblood's place at the Grand.

DON'T DIE FROM STARVATION— ADVERTISING WILL SUSTAIN YOU!

By NAT HOLT

Wichita Fox Theatres

Nat Holt is city manager for Fox Theatres in Wichita, Kansas, and one of the best known showmen in the mid-west. His outstanding newspaper advertising has been a source of inspiration to many other showmen. Naturally, his views on this series: "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary," are most welcome.

Incidentally we want to acknowledge at this time Nat Holt's fine co-operation in furnishing the Club pages with examples of his many recent activities. They are always interesting and helpful to other showmen.

"IS ADVERTISING and exploitation necessary for the successful operation of a theatre?"

Rather a funny question to put to a dyed-in-the-wool showman.

As well ask if a fish, constituted as he is, needs water to keep on living.

Still, the question should be answered for the benefit of the new and inexperienced man, or to refute the arguments of those who think otherwise.

The yokel who made mousetraps in the woods may have made a success as a mousetrap builder, but I'm afraid the path to his door would have been weed-grown had he been running a sylvan movie theatre.

The day of a theatre having a following is past. Time was when a theatre could count on a certain gross business through consistent excellence in program and service rendered.

No theatre can be consistent today in the excellence of its offerings, because there are not enough "hit" pictures being made to keep it open.

HIGHLY competitive conditions plus a public over-fed with amusements have made shoppers out of theatre patrons—and shoppers notably choose their fare. How else can they be dragged up to your box office than through advertising and exploitation?

When I say over-fed with amusements I mean just that. Competition has led theatres into a suicidal race to see which can give the most for the money, with the foregone result that the appetite of their patrons is more than satiated; like that of an overstuffed boy on Thanksgiving Day. Double feature programs, or a feature, news, comedy, organ solo, personal appearance, presentation, all on the same bill; a cutthroat battle with the public walking away from the fight.

ANOTHER thing, star value seems to be a thing of the past. A new meteor flashes across the sky, glitters in passage and dies without leaving a spark. Used to be a star's name was all that was necessary to pack 'em in. And that name was good for season after season. Count the stars today that really shine—whose names are box office. They are mighty few; and they won't last more than three changes of the moon. Some of the producers still think, of course, that their contract players are the real McCoy. The exhibitors know different—and the exhibitors are the boys who are trying to suit the public's fickle taste.

NOW and then, of course, a picture comes along that requires only a bare announcement, but these naturals are few and far between. How are you going to keep your theatre out of the red between times? There's only one known method—advertising and exploitation. The desire must be created in the public mind that this or that picture must be seen, and that desire must be engendered by every method known to the astute showman: catchy newspaper campaigns, billboards, heralds, trailers, and stunts that fit the occasion.

Sure, these campaigns sometimes result in waste of money. But here's where a man shows his value as a showman and a psychologist of public taste. The smart man knows how much he must spend to get results and where to spend it to bring the proper return.

Even with the theatre with a fixed clientele—if such a theatre exists—would soon find its patrons drifting away if they were not constantly told of the excellence of the fare they were being served.

EVERYBODY chews Wrigley's gum. They got that way by Wrigley's methods of advertising and exploitation. Let Mr. Wrigley stop advertising and the gum chewers would soon turn to paraffine.

I'll admit that some of the methods used in theatrical advertising today are shopworn; while amusements have been improving advertising has remained static. There is a need for originality, for something new. But in its absence, advertising and exploitation of the time-and-tried kind are still the first essential to success in theatre operation. The guy that hides his light under a bushel will die of starvation.

HAS IT EVER HAPPENED TO YOU?

COSGROVE STEPPING ALONG AT FAST PACE AT SCRANTON THEATRE

Excellent campaigns on two pictures and promotion of a number of attractive give-aways were included among recent activities of William J. Cosgrove, manager of the Strand Theatre in Scranton, Pa.

For "Platinum Blonde" he tied-up with the proprietress of a beauty shop, who set up a fully equipped beauty parlor in the lounging room of the theatre. This was installed on opening day and remained there throughout the run of picture.

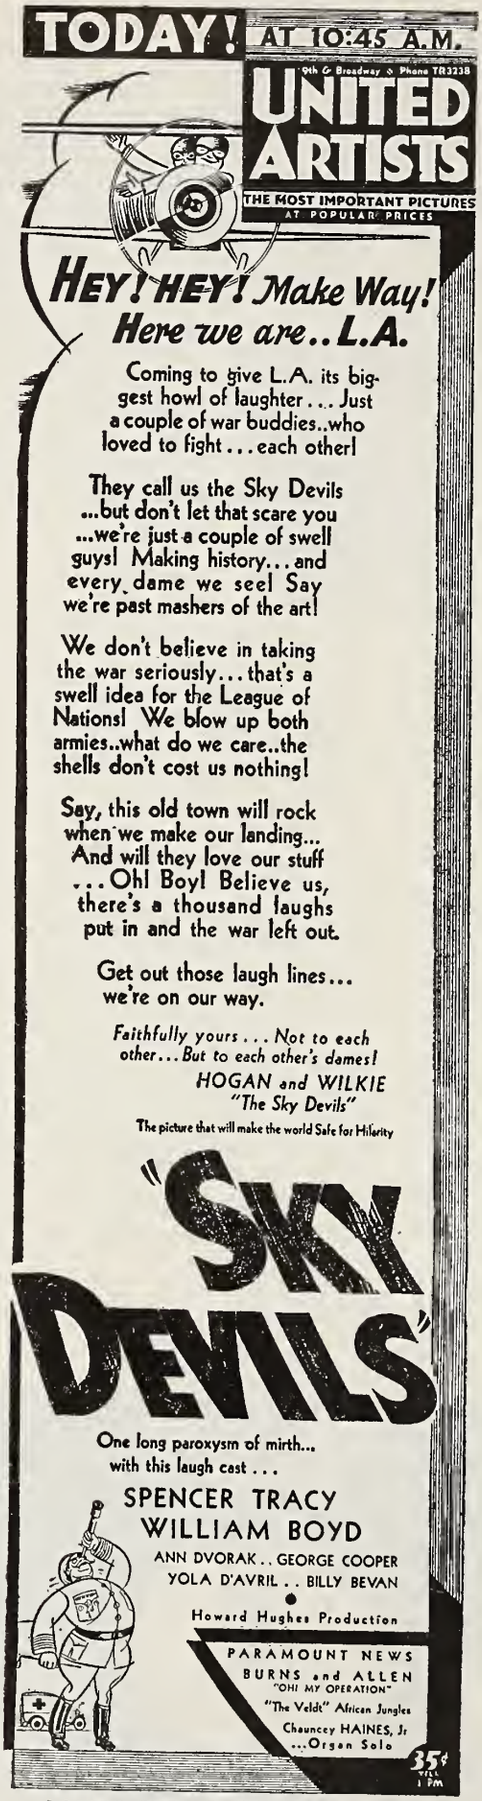
Twenty-five free finger waves were given to ladies attending the matinees, and an equal number to those attending the evening shows during the week. The beauty operators wore "platinum blonde" wigs furnished at no cost to theatre. These wigs were also provided for the cashiers. In addition, the Madame furnished wigs to girls she employed to distribute cards on the streets, the cards carrying cooperative copy about picture and shop.

Fifteen inches of advertising, using a three column mat of "Platinum Blonde," were used on three different days and paid for by the beauty shop. All carried cooperative copy.

An Attractive Blonde!

Another stunt that attracted a lot of attention was the live bally of an attractive blonde young lady in a prominent window location. The art department outlined in heavy black pencil on white cardboard in large letters, copy reading, "The Platinum Blonde"—Strand—Starting Saturday"—The girl was hired to fill in the letters during the busy hours of the day, two days before opening of picture. She was instructed to work slowly so as not to finish before opening.

Other stunts included the placing of ten 3′ x 18″ linoleum mats on street corners and in front of stores with oil-painted copy reading, "Platinum Blonde—Strand—Now." The mats were purchased at a second hand store, and were taken up each evening, Cards with photo of Jean Harlow bearing copy calling attention to that lady's preference for Lucky Strikes were placed in cigar stores, restaurants and at soda fountains, with playdates of picture.



A dollar bill gag was also used for a lobby set piece, showing one new bill, one worn and one of the old variety used a couple of years ago. Copy read, 10 To 1 You Can't Pick The Wothless Bill"—and underneath, "But 100 To 1 You'll Enjoy every moment of Platinum Blonde, the Love Story of a Brunette." This display was removed to a drug store during run of picture.

Spooky Stuff!

In connection with his campaign of "Frankenstein" some spooky ballyhoos were arranged. For one a wax figure was borrowed from a department store and a head made similar to Frankenstein's. This was placed on an operating table in a prominent window and during the busy hours wheeled around by a matron dressed as a nurse. The wax figure was covered with a white sheet with only head and hair showing. Signs were placed on this reading, "Frankenstein Will Bring This Monster To Life at the Strand Theatre, Saturday Morning."

Another creepy gag consisted of borrowing a skeleton from a local hospital, placing

HERE'S THE AD THAT STARTED THE "SKY DEVILS" ON THEIR MERRY chase for dollars in Los Angeles. If you like the style, keep it handy until you date it in. It can be worked out by any smart manager with mats and a fairly good composing room at his local newspaper.

SPARKS DARED LOCAL WOMAN TO SEE FILM IN DARKENED HOUSE

The local interest angle was injected in a stunt used to exploit the spookish theme of "Frankenstein" by Robert Sparks, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Temple, Texas, and it was also tied in with a local charity drive.

He advertised for a woman to agree to sit all alone in the darkened theatre at an advance showing of the picture and offered an award to any one who would do it. Eighty-five women made application for the privilege, but it was granted to one who stated that she would donate the award to the Community Chest Fund. As a result of this the local newspaper gave the stunt a two-column front-page story.

A salient feature of the selling campaign on the above picture has been stress on the squeamish sequences—a dare to the public, in other words. Club members will note that Sparks played up this angle.

same in a vacant store window on a white sheet. Green lights played on the skeleton, with card reading, "From Parts of the Dead Frankenstein Created His Monster and Gave It Life—A Life That Knew But One Purpose—Destruction of All Other Lives—See Frankenstein at the Strand Beginning—."

For a walking bally a man was made up to look like the "monster" and walked about the streets in the business section with sign on front and back reading, "I am Looking for My Master, Frankenstein, at the Strand Theatre. This was used Thursday and Friday prior to opening.

Other effort included distribution of 2,000 small envelopes containing a candy capsule with imprinted copy reading, "If You Are Afraid To See Frankenstein Now Playing at the Strand Theatre. Take the Capsule in this Envelope! It will Give You Courage To Face Frankenstein and All of His Mad Horrors! "Skeleton heads were also borrowed from doctors and placed in special cabinets loaned by a medical equipment supply company. These were placed in vacant store windows with stills and copy reading, "With Skulls Similar To This, Frankenstein Created His Monster—See Frankenstein at the Strand Now."

A Good Promoter!

Cosgrove's promotional activities included the give-away of a four-piece living room suite; a five tube baby grand radio; a new ABC electric washer, value $69.50; a $250 fur coat; two $100 diamond rings, and 50 large dolls valued at $10 each. All give-aways were promoted at no cost to theatre and handled in the usual fashion.

It's easy to see that this Round Tabler took full advantage of the "horror" angle to exploit "Frankenstein" and there can be no doubt that his stunts attracted attention. This picture has been successfully sold along the "dare" angle—in other words a challenge to a patrons' ability to sit through a performance. His campaign on "Platinum Blonde" also appears to have been a most comprehensive affair, and so we're passing both along for the benefit of other members. Further evidence that Cosgrove has been on the job is testified to by his success with the promotion of attractive give-aways, which did their share to build up a most satisfactory gross during the month of December.

AWARD OF MERIT WAS BUILDER OF GOOD WILL FOR LAWRENCE WATERS

An arrangement made with the superintendent of schools for distribution of "Award of Merit" cards among deserving pupils has gone over big as a good will builder for Lawrence Waters, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Newport, Kas.

These cards are given out to the five highest grades made in each department and on occasion of the first award the superintendent made a fifteen minute speech before the assembly of pupils. The local paper kicked in with advance stories and also published a list of the winners. The card entitled the holder to one week's amusement (excluding Sunday) or four shows in the month following award. Copy at top of card read: "Award of Merit," followed by —"As a reward for your ability and hard work in your scholastic duties the Capitol Theatre extends the courtesy of one week's amusement, etc." Space was also reserved for name, school, grade, awarded by, and signed by theatre manager and teacher.

We also note that Waters used forms of subpoenas and a summons when exploiting "Peach O' Reno" and "Star Witness." In both cases this little gag aided materially at the box office.

Award of the merit cards to school children proved a source of much word o' mouth comment among students and families at very small expense to theatre and has been the means of building additional good will. A number of gags somewhat similar to this one have been used to excellent results by many other Round Tablers and so we're passing this one along, with Water's compliments.

Maxwell In Spokane!

Floyd Maxwell, former managing director of the Paramount Theatre in Portland, Ore., and also in charge of the Rialto and Castle theatres in Vancouver, Wash., is now located in Spokane as head of the new Fox theatre. The change was announced by Robert Frost, Fox-Northwest division manager.

EASTER POSSIBILITIES!

Despite the fact that business generally falls off just prior to Easter Week, we can cite the activities and preparations of many real showmen, the country over, proving that unlimited angles present themselves which can be tied right in with this "slump" season.

You should be well started RIGHT NOW towards Bunny Matinees, Colored Easter Egg Shows, Novelty Matinees and dozens of other corking ideas which tie right in with the spirit of the season and, in almost every case, increase the box office receipts for this usually dull period.

The suggestions incorporated above constitute only a few of the money-making ideas which have appeared on the Club pages in the past. Special stories pertaining to Easter activities will be published each week starting next week. Your attention is directed to these articles as a guide in fashioning your own plans for this season of the year.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of 23 years Frederick E. Johnson, after completing his education, concluded that the theatre business was a lucrative field and started in to learn the business as an usher in the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, Mass.

Frederick E. Johnson

From usher he rose to the post of Service Instructor, Class B, graduated to an assistant manager's job at Uphams Corners Strand Theatre, Dorchester, and later acted in a similar capacity at the Paramount Theatre in Newton. In 1929 he attended the Managers' Training School and, after completing this course, was assigned as assistant at the Strand and State theatres in Portland, Me. He has acted as relief manager at the Maine Theatre, Portland, and at the Greater Boston, and at this time is holding down the job of manager at the Jamaica, Jamaica Plains, Mass.

He has never been connected with any other circuit than Publix and has no thought of ever leaving this field unless a much better opportunity arises in another. He is a Mason and a member of the University Club of Boston.

KISLINGBURY MADE SPLENDID DISPLAY AND A GOOD TIEUP

The campaign made on "Sin of Madelon Claudet" by F. F. Kislingbury, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., included a splendid advance lobby display showing Helen Hayes in the evolution of her role; a special preview a week in advance; and a special announcement (personal endorsement by manager) over the theatre's public address system.

In addition to the above, Kislingbury effected a tie-up with the Chevrolet Co. which was extremely valuable to him. He allowed the agency to display one of its new cars in the lobby of the Paramount Theatre. In turn, the agency bought 117 inches of advertising space in the Plainfield Courier-News. Kislingbury wrote the "Chevrolet ads." However, Chevrolet in three large ads was given only a small box at the very bottom of each ad. Kislingbury prepared the ads with a great deal of care, and they gave every appearance of being theatre ads.

Kislingbury proved in this instance that if a stunt of this kind is properly handled by a theatre manager, the free "cooperative" newspaper space can be made to sell many tickets for the theatre; whereas if stunts of this kind are handled carelessly, as they are by some, such cooperative ads have very little value either for the theatre or the cooperating merchant.

BURGUM CONTACTED 25 MERCHANTS WHEN PROMOTING CO-OP AD

Twenty-five merchants kicked in to make up a double truck co-operative ad for Dan Burgum, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Greenville, Miss., when he advertised his New Year's Eve Frolic and Stage Show.

The theatre ad was set in the center of the spread with merchants' ads on all sides. The theatre portion not only featured the New Year's Show but as well called attention to coming attractions. In order to make the pages more effective readers were offered an opportunity to exercise their ability in the writing of slogans. Awards and guest tickets were offered to authors of the most appropriately worded slogans for various merchants. Neatness and originality were stressed.

What could be a sweeter send-off for a show than a good display right in the middle of two full pages of ads and a banner line across the top, we ask you? And the slogan gag injected the interest angle to insure wholesale reading of the many messages sent forth by the merchants. Burgum is apparently on the job with both newspaper and merchants in his town.

CO-OPERATIVES THAT SOLD!

Harry Stearn Promoted Five In One Month That Gave His Theatre a Splendid Break

Not very long ago we informed our readers that Harry D. Stearn was at the helm of the Capitol Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., and had apparently effected a complete understanding with newspaper men and merchants. At this writing it is almost unnecessary to go into further detail regarding this matter; instead we direct your glance to reproductions of newspaper ads on this page engineered by Stearn during the past few weeks.

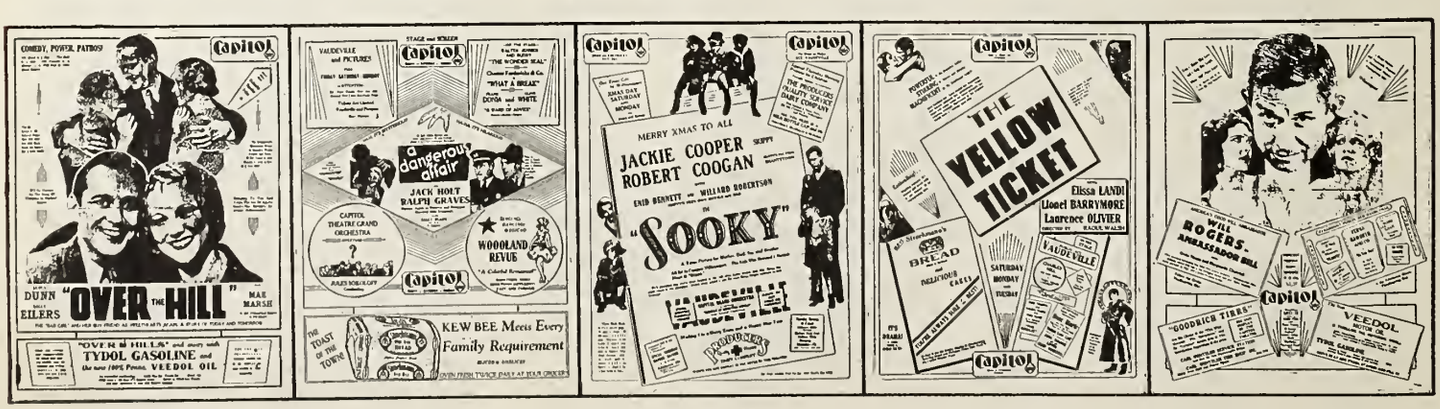
At the bottom of the page are a series of five ads he promoted over the period of one month. Not one of those ads cost the theatre a cent of expense beyond Stearn's time to sell them and make up copy. Is that getting away with something like murder in most any degree you want? We ask you! Just note the breaks for the theatre in all five and then tell us whether it's exaggeration when we state that it's a corking piece of work for any one manager to turn out. Even the boxes devoted to the dealer's or merchant's share of the page were so placed to virtually melt into the general scheme, giving at first glance the effect of an entire ad for theatre.

Next, turn your eye to the smaller ad reproduction which is a sample of a series of Gift Co-operative ads he promoted through a tie-up with the classified department of the newspaper. These ran all during the month of December, featuring the patron's name gag in several of the ads, and on each page the theatre received valuable free mention. In order to convey an idea of the ground covered by this newspaper-merchant-theatre each page carried an average of 65 to 70 box ads of stores featuring a wide variety of Xmas gifts. Many of the pages were illustrated with mats on some current attraction at the theatre.

We are also informed that Stearn put over a couple of excellent campaigns on "Frankenstein" and "Sooky" at very small cost to theatre. Above is a small photo of a walking bally he used on the former. This man was six feet ten inches tall and weighed around two hundred and twenty-five pounds. He wore a black mask, blue pair of trousers, a coat with short sleeves and a big pair of boots. His face was greased with white grease paint and black rubbed into his cheeks and forehead to give that hollow look. His hands were also treated with white grease paint, streaked with black. A placard on his back read, "I am looking for Frankenstein at the Capitol Theatre." He walked very slow, paused now and then and gave out printed cards. All the bally cost the house was a few passes.

Regarding the cards given out by the walking bally, 30,000 were promoted free from a local printer. In size the cards ran about half size or a little better than half size of a merchant's business card and each carried a variety of catch line copy.

The "horror" angle in "Frankenstein" was played up in every possible manner. One week in advance the artist made up twenty signs about two feet high, using three different illustrations. One was a hand, another a foot and the third a head, all carrying copy to effect that these were parts of the Monster built by Frankenstein. The signs were placed in prominent locations in the lobby, foyer and other noticeable spots.



Other stunts included the planting of a young girl in the balcony to let out a squeal when an unusually exciting happening was shown; a classified tie-up; an attractive front that featured a huge cutout of the monster; use of a big exchange banner; cutout display with green lights in eyes of monster in lobby; twenty displays in vacant stores; window tie-up on book with book store; a 27-foot flash marquee sign, featuring names of players and monster's head lighted by green flood; window cards in all locations; announcement over radio; a trailer one week in advance, and stills of Boles and Clive in haberdashery stores.

The pictorial twenty-four sheet from the exchange was also put to excellent effect. A cutout was made from the monster, green lights placed in the eyes and wires hooked into light sockets back stage. Prior to trailer going on a special trailer announced: "Warning—Hideous Monster At Large. The patrons of this theatre are warned of the escape of an inhuman monster with the form and strength of a giant man. He possesses animal instinct but no brain. This beast is hiding in the vicinity of this theatre. Ready to spring out and kill!"

At this point the usher carried the cutout on the stage, eyes lit and a green spot hit it from the booth. Coincident with the making of weird noises by a stage hand, the booth flashed the following trailer: "Beware! He's in the theatre now! Look! Look! He's here! Right in the corner!" All lights were turned out while the above was going on, lending a mystifying effect to the entire stunt. The regular trailer followed and there was audible comment to effect that people intended to see the attraction when it was presented.

Well, that's about all we can tell you about Stearn's show selling at this time. Next we'll tell you about a campaign he made on "Sooky." Regarding his co-operative ads, we believe that he put over an outstanding piece of work when he promoted five such striking ads in one short month. We state this not only because of value of accomplishment, but in view of the fact that he has been in Williamsport only for a short time. You will recall that Stearn was last in Pittston. We also believe that his fellow showmen will agree that the "Frankenstein" campaign was a thorough one in every respect and that many of his suggestions will prove helpful to other members. Others will be forthcoming and in the meantime we'll wish this Round Tabler continued success.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

You can't blame Cartoonist Jones for turning out this one. Once before, the industry was swamped with "Hell" attractions and titles and now after a brief lapse we're back at it again, Yes, Guy, this IS the hell of it.

BLANCHARD NETTED LARGE AMOUNT OF SPACE FOR TIE-UP

Over three hundred inches of free newspaper space was recently netted by J. M. Blanchard, manager of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., through a tie-up made with a milk products company on "Local Boy Makes Good."

The tie-up was for a special children's matinee. Each child was admitted with a milk bottle cap plus 10 cents. The milk company carried 168 inches of space in one issue and followed it up two days later with the same amount of space—advertising the children's matinee, etc. The milk company also bannered its 20 delivery trucks which carried co-operative copy regarding special matinee, theatre and milk company.

It is also noted that Blanchard took upon himself the privilege of laying out those full-page ads, thus assuring a good break for his end of the deal. In this event it is often possible for the theatre manager to arrange copy, on an equable basis, of course, which will appear greatly in favor of the theatre when set up. According to our observations, smart showmen always take advantage of such an opportunity.

MARCHAND INJECTED FUN ANGLE ON GIFT NIGHT THAT CLICKED

In connection with Gift Nights, J. Harry Marchand, manager of the Crown Theatre, Mobile, Ala., has worked up a little gag that has created both fun and comment.

On the evening when the gifts were awarded he announced that there was another surprise in store for patrons. They were told there were approximately 25 tickets under as many seats that would be good for admission the following Monday night. Somewhat reluctant at first to fish around for the tickets, most everyone began a search when it was discovered that some had been found. Actually there were less than the stated number of tickets under the seats.

Regarding the Gift Nights, these are plugged by the merchants tied-in with the deal by the insertion of cards in all packages wrapped at the stores. The cards carry copy in detail about the Gift Night as well as listing names of the merchants. The theatre also distributes the cards.

Marchand also has a "glassware" night every Wednesday, when a piece of a set of glassware is given away to feminine patrons. It is helping materially to boost patronage on this particular night because it is necessary to attend regularly to obtain a full set.

That ticket-underneath-the-seat gag of Marchand's is going over in great shape, according to reports, and so we're passing it along to other members of this outfit. He is another showman to fall in line for giveaway nights and to all appearances is making out well with them. In his case, with the exception of a few free passes, it is a costless means of boosting patronage.

Burke Gets Maryland

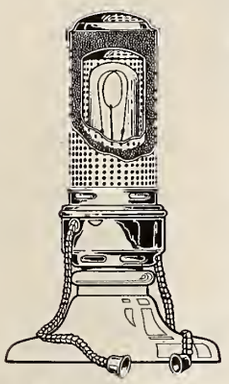
Following a receivership of several months past, Thomas H. Burke, operator of the Liberty Theatre, Cumberland, Md., has assumed control of the Liberty Theatre, and will rename it the Burke. Burke and his three sons, Dan, James and Hugh, will reopen the house after complete remodeling.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Having received so much favorable comment on Herb Simpson's first contributions we were naturally gratified to receive several more from him.

These two struck us as being particularly impressive as to attractiveness and faithful likeness of the stars. Held at arm's length or more from your eyes and they are still more faithful. Try it.

Keep in mind when projecting these two posters for tracing that the letters need not be copied. Text and type of lettering are always a matter of individual taste and according to the house for which the poster is being made.



Devote most of your space to the heads. In proper colors against a contrasting background they will stand out like a beacon light and attract no end of attention to your front. If used for advance advertising in the lobby this type of poster should be framed in a simple frame and placed on an easel under the concealed lighting from a baby spot.

More from Herb later. Other contributions to the series, since started by Benton L. James, have been coming along great and we are now getting them via originals and photos so clean-cut that reproduction onto our pages is a simple matter.

15 POINTS IN GOOD THEATRE MANAGEMENT!

(From Publix Opinion)

Drawing on his long experience as a showman, Division Director William K. Jenkins lists 15 tips on theatre management for men of his division. Read them over and digest them thoroughly. They're worth it.

MAKE YOUR THEATRE BRIGHT AND CHEERFUL. Let's not have any gloomy looking theatres. Let's keep the fronts in good condition with bright colors, proper lighting, etc., and when possible promote flowers . . . they often go a long way in developing desired atmosphere.

HAPPY EMPLOYES. Regardless of troubles and cares that "infest the day," please make certain everyone in your organization reflects cheerfulness, friendliness and politeness, and encourage your cashiers, doorman and others to say "Thank You" as though they really meant it, and not in a stilted, mechanical way.

KEEP GLAMOUR AND ROMANCE OF YOUR THEATRE. Whatever you do, do not destroy the glamour and romance of your theatre. Keep it mysterious. We make a mistake in attempting to unfold all the tricks of our operation.

KEEP OUT OF YOUR OFFICE. A sucessful Manager should so organize and schedule his work that he will have time to be on the floor much of his time so as to observe the many details of operation, extend friendly greetings and be available in case a patron should want him.

MAKE CERTAIN YOUR PROJECTION IS GOOD. Keep your machines and screen in good condition; see that change-overs are properly handled; eliminate foreign lights from your screen, etc.

KEEP CLOSE CHECK ON YOUR SOUND. This will be but one of the advantages you gain by being on the floor. See that all booth, street noises, etc., are excluded anad proper volume always maintained.

BE A GOOD JANITOR by keeping your house in a "spick and span" condition as though prepared for an inspection.

HAVE PERFECT MAINTENANCE. CONSTANT inspection and following up through your local force, and "doing a good maintenance turn daily" will accomplish wonderful results.

MAKE YOUR OPERATION SAFE by providing safeguards to prevent accident, fires, holdup, etc. Safety in every department is certainly the part of good management.

EXTRA PRECAUTIONS IN HANDLING MONEY are advisable at this time, so be sure unnecessary amounts are not exposed in box-office and that proper care is exercised in transporting money, and that deposits are made promptly in order to reduce time of your responsibility for funds.

KEEP PASSES AT A MINIMUM, making certain full value to the Company is received for each pass issued.

LIVE WITHIN YOUR BUDGETS. A budget is nothing more than a plan and you must not only develop a plan, but, once developed, you must work it; so live by your budget or, in other words, live by your plan.

BE A GOOD CITIZEN where you serve, not hesitating frequently to entertain charity institutions and in other ways contribute what you can without the gift of money.

BUILD UP THE ENTERTAINMENT VALUE OF YOUR PROGRAM by making certain your screen attractions are presented in the most attractive way and also by adding occasional stage shows worked out through local organizations without cost.

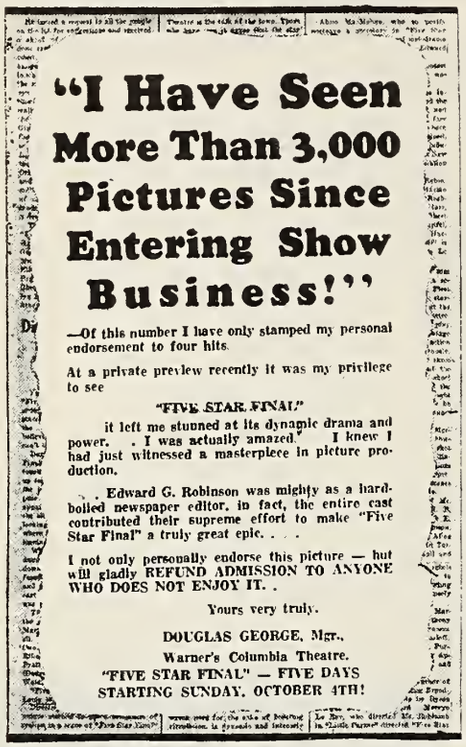
And last but not least EXERT GREATER SELLING EFFORT by using costless and cost-little methods and directing these methods along the most effective lines developed after a careful analysis of your attraction and your community. And don't forget to sell your admission price during hours and in the theatres where this is one of the big advantages.

THAMES CARRIES ON DESPITE HIGH WATER AROUND HIS VILLAGE

Despite a time of the year when disastrous floodwaters of the Mississippi are raising havoc with his section of the country and doing everything but focus minds of citizens upon a theatre, J. P. Thames, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Greenwood, Miss., continues to put forth efforts to let patrons know that there's a good show in town.

The photo reproduced here shows how he played up his stage show in conjunction with the showing of "Fanny Foley Herself." The four piece orchestra and a crooner with a megaphone did their bit and made announcements from a flat-bed truck. The vehicle covered the entire city as well as several neighboring towns.

Thames also constructed an attractive atmospheric front when exploiting "East of Borneo" that helped put that picture over. An art board in the center of the display showed many stills from the picture and each side was flanked with three-sheet cutouts carrying title and cast of picture. Cutout letters spelling title were strung across the lobby. Moss, palms and shrubbery were effectively used for jungle atmosphere.



By the time this is read in Mississippi it is to be hoped that conditions there will be more favorable to show-business. Bringing in patrons is difficult enough these days without nature coming along with an additional obstacle. However, good showmen carry on under all conditions, and this is what a number of Round Tablers are doing down in the flooded section. Thames has been doing his share of the good work.

VAN HOOK SECURED DOUBLE TRUCK WHEN SELLING NEW SOUND

The fact that a theatre has installed new sound equipment may not be much of an event in some of the big towns, but it carried enough weight out in Morrilton, Ark., to warrant promotion of a double truck co-op by R. C. Van Hook, manager of the Rialto Theatre in that city.

This showman not only got a fine break for his theatre on this occasion but deserves a lot of credit for obtaining such ready response to a co-op based on a change of equipment. It merely shows what can be done when a fellow goes out and really put his shoulder to the wheel. More power to you, Van, and let's hear some more about what you are doing to put the Rialto on the map.

PERSONAL ENDORSEMENT AD USED BY GEORGE!

"I Have Seen More Than 3,000 Pictures Since Entering Show Business!"

—Of this number I have only stamped my personal endorsement to four hits.

At a private preview recently it was my privilege to see it left me stunned at its dynamic drama and power. . I was actually amazed." I knew I had just witnessed a masterpiece in picture production.

"FIVE STAR FINAL"

. . Edward G. Robinson was mighty as a hard-boiled newspaper editor, in fact, the entire cast contributed their supreme effort to make "Five Star Final" a truly great epic. . . .

I not only personally endorse this picture — but will gladly REFUND ADMISSION TO ANYONE WHO DOES NOT ENJOY IT. .

Yours very truly.

DOUGLAS GEORGE, Mgr.,
Warner's Columbia Theatre.
"FIVE STAR FINAL" — FIVE DAYS STARTING SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4TH!

Here is an example of the "personal endorsement" ad recently used to good effect by Douglas George, manager of Warner's Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Although this type of ad has been mentioned many other times in this department, we are again bringing up the subject for reason that when not overdone it is an excellent means of catching the public eye. Note that George makes a plain, unvarnished statement, boiling down the patron's chance to lose to nothing. Also note in copy that his personal endorsement has been confined to but four pictures over an extended period.

We also like the ragged edge effect surrounding the copy, which is in keeping with the atmosphere of this particular picture. As you can see, copy is set in what appears a three-column portion of a newspaper page.

George is a well known member of the Round Table Club and this is not by any means the first time we've had occasion to display a sample of his advertising. It has been noted that he never uses the same style over an extended period, invariably breaking in with some new slant to get away from the stereotyped method.

ENOCH AND BARRETT WORKING HARD DOWN AT VIRGINIA THEATRE

Business may not be up to par down in Parkersburg, West Va., like in many other sections of the country, but general conditions there as regards show-business are not so tough either, due to the enterprise of P. W. Barrett and his able assistant, Bob Enoch.

Recently this pair had "Freckles," one of the "Our Gang" boys booked for a personal appearance, and one week in advance Enoch went out and promoted a full page co-op ad. It took some hard plugging to put the page over, but he did it and the stunt went a long way toward producing the excellent results obtained at the box office. We have a tear sheet before us and can testify that the page was not only well made up typographically but gave a fine break to the theatre. A milk concern, tied in with the stunt, furnished distribution of many bottle hangers.

Appearance of the young player was also an occasion for getting under way a Kiddie club, with "Freckles" as Honarary President. Membership cards were printed with appropriate copy and a picture of the Our Gang boy, and his signature was affixed to every one. Four days in advance a telegram supposedly coming from "Freckles" to Manager Barrett was reproduced and published in the paper.

When the youngster arrived a local auto dealer furnished a car for transportation while he was in the city. A picture of the player and the Mayor, taken in the official car, also received a good break, along with other stories, in the newspaper. The accompanying photo shows a shot taken of the "Gangster," the car and two other gentlemen. Lack of a caption leads us to believe that the latter might be Enoch and Barrett, and as far as we know that's okay.

It's been some little time since we've heard what Barrett and Enoch have been doing at the Strand and we're glad to get a line on both of them again. Despite slow business conditions, Enoch certainly produced results on the occasion of the personal appearance. Keep up the good work, Bob, and let's hear from you often.

Watch This Angle

Managers who contemplate any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissable to the mails in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, guessing contests, lucky number contests, etc., and should submit to their local postmaster details and full particulars of such schemes in order to avoid violation of the lottery laws.

WHEELER ORGANIZED MICKEY MOUSE CLUB AND SOLD CO-OP AD

Just to let you all know that J. R. Wheeler, city manager of the Palace Theatre, Marion, Ohio, is still carrying on in show-business, we'll present a few facts in reference to a recently formed Mickey Mouse Club and the promotion of a full-page co-op ad.

J. R. Wheeler

With assistance from police, firemen and boy scouts, Wheeler opened his Mouse Club a few weeks ago to an assembly of 2,200 "Mice" and there were mighty few folk around Marion who did not know what was going on. A local department store sponsored the move and on opening day the kiddies paraded through the main streets carrying banners with copy stating that "Kline's Mickey Mouse Club was on the way to the Palace Theatre."

The campaign was started with an advance teaser on screen and in store three weeks before the first meeting. Children enrolled each day at the store and were given membership buttons. A contact made with the School Board brought permission to give passes to honor students and the local Parents-Teachers' Association issued public approval of the club.

A Peppy Opening!

At the opening session the kids heard a speech by the department store manager; had their officers installed; pledged allegiance to the American flag; sang "America"; were led through the Mickey Mouse "Yell" by their cheer leader; heard a talk on "Safety" by the local Chief of Police, and listened to an address made by the P. T. A. president. The balance of the program was made up of a dance band, dancing school revue, a Mickey Mouse cartoon, with theme song, and the feature picture. The whole stunt did not set the house back one cent. From week to week the store will continue to donate awards for the kids.

Wheeler promoted the co-op page on strength of the appearance of "Gene and Glenn," two well known radio personalities in that section of the country. A telephone number gag for guest tickets was featured among the several ads promoted among a variety of local merchants. Names of theatre and attractions were given a splendid break in the top portion of the page.

Try It Yourself!

We're sure Wheeler's plan of organization for the Mickey Mouse Club will meet with approval from members who are planning a similar move. The gag of getting a chain store outfit to sponsor the club is an excellent one, to our way of thinking, and should do much to help keep interest in the organization alive. Obtaining approval from the school board was another fine move.

Regarding the small photo of Wheeler above we are forced to advise that all authorities on ballys for "Frankenstein" turned it down as unfit, and therefore we're using it to let others see what this Round Tabler looks like. Not a bad looking guy, what?

PERSONALITIES

THOMAS PHELAN, well known showman of Long Branch, N. J., is the proud father of a baby boy, Robert James, born Jan. 25, '32. In honor of the occasion Thomas issued a card headed, "It's a Boy! —Depression Sez You!" Once a showman, always one. Felicitations to Mrs. Phelan, also.

BIGGER AND BETTER EVERY WEEK!

LOUIS A. RONDINA has the job of assisting L. H. Ullfers with the management of the Wakefield Theatre, Bronx, New York City. His boss states that Rondina is one of the best helpers he ever had in show-business, and that unless he is dead wrong, will continue to the top of the ladder. And what do you suppose his last job was, before entering this field? A member of the staff of a publishing house, no less. At any rate, Rondina is 22 years of age and has been with the Wakefield for 2½ years. We will certainly keep an eye on this new member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. J. BRISARD manages the Palace Theatre over in South Berwick, Maine, and we are taking this opportunity to acknowledge this showman's application for membership in the Round Table Club. We're glad to have you with us, Brisard, and just remember one thing in this respect. You're in the army now and that means that you're obligated to tell the rest of the gang all about the successful stunts employed to boost patronage at your house. So pass the good word along. We'll do our part.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK VAN BORSSUM is the manager of the Savoy Theatre out in Terre Haute, Ind., and unless we're very much mistaken, also owns the house. He operates a 300 seater and is equipped to present a first class show. The official Club welcome is also extended to this new member and he may be sure that we are more than glad to have him with us. Send us some information about yourself and theatre, Jack, so we can tell your fellow members about your methods of conducting show-business.

LEONARD CAMARATA has the interesting job of assisting Managing Director Fred Schmuff at the State Theatre in Baltimore, Md., who has also sponsored this new member's application. Sponsorship by Schmuff means that we can count on Camarata as an important acquisition for this organization, so we'll be looking forward to hearing what this recently-elected Round Tabler is doing to help his boss put the State over the top.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROY E. HARROLD has charge of the Princess Theatre in Rushville, Minn., and at this writing he, also, becomes officially registered as a full-fledged member of this great organization of showmen. Harrold operates a 600 seat house, independent of chain or circuit, and is equipped to give his patrons the best in pictures. It is a pleasure to list his name on the Club roster and we hope that he will do full share in the way of making interesting contributions.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. W. EBERHARD manages the Ready Theatre, Miles, Mich., and we are also in receipt of his application for Club membership. Meet the rest of the gang, Eberhard, and on behalf of all we'll state that they're glad to know you've at last obeyed the impulse to join up with the fastest stepping bunch of showmen in the world. You can help the good work along by telling us what you are doing in show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MORRIS D. RAUER is located over in New Jersey where he manages the Victoria Theatre at Westville. Morris is a live-wire showman and we believe he can be depended upon to help keep the ball a-rolling in this organization. Welcome to this large family, Morris, and keep in close touch with Club headquarters. Let the rest of the gang know about that last good stunt you put over to the tune of the Merry Cash Register.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK JOHANNSEN hails from 'way down South in Augusta, Ga., where he manages the Imperial Theatre. The spirit has moved Jack to aid his brother showmen, and now that he is a member of this great army of Round Tablers, we'll be looking for some dope on his shows that are sold in his town. So shoot along some of your ideas, Johannsen, and headquarters will see that your fellow members are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. P. "DOC" MORSE operates the Royal Theatre in Mionk, Ill., and according to information at hand he's an independent operator. His house is an up-to-date 400 seater, equipped to present the best in picture entertainment. We are glad to introduce "Doc" to the rest of the gang and hope he'll do his share toward keeping these pages full of interesting slants on show-selling activities in his town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SHERIDAN E. STOKES, JR., is located out in Ramsey, Ill., where he operates the Midway Theatre. He's another new member of the fastest growing association of showmen in the whole world and we're glad to have him with us. We and his fellow Round Tablers will look forward to hearing about how business is going along in his town. What was that last stunt that brought in ace business, Stokes? Let the gang in on it.

DEWITT HALEY is another Texan to become a member of the Round Table, and he hails from San Angelo, where he manages the Ritz Theatre. An enclosed snapshot shows that he uses a white painted Ford commercial for a general utility car and to ballyhoo his attractions, and we therefore know that Dewitt has ideas about how shows should be sold down his way. When we next hear from him perhaps he'll send along further details concerning show-business in his town. We'll be awaiting that letter, Haley, so unbend that writing arm.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. E. COWAN has charge of Schine's Piqua Theatre, Piqua, Ohio, a house under the district supervision of Sid Laurence. We've often had occasion to inform our members about show-selling in Piqua when Laurence was on the direct firing line in that city, and now that Cowan has joined the Club we'll expect a lot more information. So come through, Round Tabler, and tell the boys what's taking place in show-business in your busy town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. J. CHANDLER is the manager of the Strand Theatre, located on the Main Stem of Kendalsville, Ind., and this new member's house is a unit of Hudson Enterprises, Inc. It's a 700-seater, and is equipped with all that is necessary to present ace-high entertainment. Chandler is another showman to start the New Year in the right way, with an application for membership in this organization, and we sincerely hope he will endeavor to do his very best to contribute some live-wire ideas on show-selling for the benefit of his fellow Round Tablers.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAMILTON R. KUPPER manages the Leonia Theatre, Leonia, N. J., and his present post is the result of a promotion. He was formerly an assistant manager at the Fox-Capitol Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., and now he's been moved another step up the ladder. The next time his associates in show-business see him he'll be wearing one of the Club emblems, for we note one attached to his membership application. We're glad to have you with us, Kupper. Let us know what's doing in the show line in that attractive little town of your's.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. N. LUCKETT hails from French Lick, Indiana, where he operates the Dream Theatre. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in this ever-increasing army of showmen and this is the occasion for introducing him to his fellow Round Tablers. Luckett is in charge of a 300 seat house, independent of chain affiliation, so there's nothing to stop him from telling all he knows about show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY C. SETTLEMOIR is the skipper of the Cozy Theatre, an independently operated house in Vienna, Ill., and we are also mighty glad to extend the Club welcome to this new member. Now that you're one of us, Harry, take a little time off and tell us what's doing in show-business out your way. The other boys will want to know. Reach in that desk pigeon-hole and break out data on that last live-wire stunt that filled every seat in the house. Then send it to us so we can pass it along.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 111

Bluebook School Question No. 111 was: "(A) Upon what principle does the automatic arc control depend for its action? (B) In a projection light source circuit, name all the various items offering resistance to current flow. (C) When current is forced across from one electrode (carbon) to the other, something is consumed. What is it? (D) Is more than one thing used up or consumed in an electric arc? (E) Were you able to answer all these questions 'right off the bat,' without some thought and perhaps a reference to your Bluebook?"

And now, before we go further, I feel it but right and just that we call attention to the fact that certain ones have followed this series of questions through for a long, long while, with never a miss, and with answers at least sufficiently near being correct to justify the inclusion of their names in the printed list each week. There also are others who have been faithful, though they missed fire occasionally. I would suggest that by this act these men have demonstrated two things which should cause exhibitors to remember their names when looking for energetic projectionists who know their business and know it very well, too. Their names also should be kept track of by directors of projection for theatre circuits, though of course both exhibitors and directors are hampered by the fact that local unions, which control such matters, may or may not permit the employment of men from other towns and cities, even though they be union men. However, one thing is certain: Whatever may happen, it is a moral certainty that these men have benefited by the study made necessary in answering the questions correctly. Few, if any, projectionists, including the very best there are, could answer all the questions fully and correctly without sound research and study.

S. Evans, C. Rau and Lester Borst are men who have not, so far as I can remember, missed a single answer in at least two years. To a less extent the following have been at least fairly faithful: G. E. Doe, Bill Doe, Herman B. Billings, Roy J. Arnston, Henry Edwards, Pat O'Brien, T. Van Vaulkenburg, T. Wylie, Will Peck, Larry Tipton, Nic Cranby, S. Evans, H. D. Schofield, Andy Bailey, Seymour Carroll, S. Kay, James Devoy, H. D. Schofield and Thomas McGruder.

Those answering question No. 111 acceptably are Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, G. E. Doe, Harold Sanford, Barney Devietti, Bill Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, P. T. Garling, Henry Edwards, Larry Tipton, Alonzo Zerach, William Broadbent, James Traxler, George Thompson (all of whom have especially good answers), Dave Anderson, P. L. Toeping, H. B. Billings, S. T. Jones, D. L. Little, James Ledbetter, Tom Wignath, Will Peck, K. L. Knight, S. Emmerson, C. T. Davis, Seymour Carroll, Sam and Andrew Wells, P. H. Bondom, Chick Peters, Ben Coates, P. L. Davis, John C. Davison, Roy J. Arnston, John Wentworth, B. Becker, F. D. Roller, Jack Billings, Tom Hazelton, A. Dexter, H. T. Daniels, Canby and Post, N. D. Garling, Phent Davis, William Bogert, S. May, Chas. Tamper, Henry Sicmann, Dave Andrews, Pat O'Brien, Tom Foster and Frank Dalbey, Andrew Davis, T. L. Danvol, Tom Murphy, P. F. Daniels, T. G. Graves, Dan Roxbury, Richard Singleton, Chas. Tamper and George Baker, Mike McGuire, Robert Banning, Richard Felt, D. L. Warren, Dan L. Graves, Andy Rangor, Thomas McGruder, H. D. Tyler, H. G. Tonlin, Robert Davis, Frank Oliver, Dan L. Simmons, James Devoy, John Williams, John G. Farmann, A. Gibson, Dave Lode, Don Taberson, L. R. Dyker, D. Goldberg, D. Samuels, John Ladd, F. G. Garison, Dave Bitdoll, Frank Burker, R. L. Little, Frank Burker and Richard Michaels.

I have decided to let different ones answer different sections of this question, since no one has all the best of it. Concerning item (A), P. T. Garling says:

"The automatic arc control depends for its action upon variations in arc voltage. Electric current flowing volatilizes the carbon, changing it into gas, or perhaps it might better be said, into gas and heat. Of course, the resistance of the gas stream which supplies conduction for the current across the arc gap, increases with arc length and decreases as the arc gap is shortened. It then follows that as the carbons are volatilized, or burned away, the arc gap increases and the resistance to current flow becomes greater.

"The automatic arc control is so designed that the slightest increase in arc resistance will operate to speed up the carbon feeding motor and mechanism, thus shortening the arc and decreasing its resistance to whatever the control (which is adjustable) is set to maintain, whereupon the driving motor is again slowed down, and thus, within very small limits, the gap or distance between the carbon points is maintained constantly, without attention from the projectionist. I do not understand the question to mean that I should supply a detailed description of the exact mechanism by which the motor speed is controlled."

(B) Unquestionably C. E. Doe is "it" on this section. He says:

"It depends upon the kind of arc. If a d-c. one be operating through rheostatic resistance, then all things which have to do with current carrying, including wires, fuses, switches, resistance element, poor contacts, electrodes and arc gap, offer resistance. If a d-c. one be operating through a motor generator, then the same thing is true, including all things on the arc side of the m-g. set. If an a-c. arc operating through resistance element (rheostat), it is the same as d-c. through a rheostat, with the addition of some degree of inductive resistance set up in both the rheostat and conduit. If it be an a-c. arc operating through a transformer, then everything on the arc side of the transformer (I don't think the transformer can be classed as 'resistance,' though in a way it perhaps is just that), including some inductive effect in the conduit."

(C) This one is by Bill Doe, who says:

"The question might be read to mean that only voltage is meant. The voltage, or e. m. f., is the principal thing consumed at the arc, of course, but also carbon is volatilized, or 'consumed,' and heat is as well, though perhaps we cannot say the latter is 'consumed.' Rather it is formed and dissipated. Voltage is, however, the chief thing consumed—or should we say wattage? However, both terms would mean essentially the same thing."

(D) Messrs. Evans and Rau win out on this one:

"It may be held that wattage is consumed at the arc, because the amount charged for power is directly dependent upon the wattage used. However, in so far as concerns electric current, for all practical purposes we may say that pressure or voltage alone is consumed at the electric arc."

(E) Only a few said they were able to be sure they had things quite correct until they had consulted their Bluebook. Some who did not look things up did not make the best possible answers to some of the items.

Following their answer to Question No. 111, Evans and Rau say:

"On Page 83, Section 82, Lines 17-18 and 19, the RCA book says, 'The beam of light must be as thin as was the beam used in recording, and exactly the same width as the sound track. Stated as dimensions, the beam should be not more than .00075 of an inch thick, and exactly .070 of an inch wide."

I have no copy of the book in question handy. It seems to me that, in the very nature of things, the light beam should be a bit wider than the sound track, though very, very little, of course. I am myself unable to see any legitimate objection to a slight overlap.

Projection Practice Committee

A valuable contribution to the motion picture industry will have been made by the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers when its work is completed, says Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president of the society.

"When I recall that the driver of a $500 automobile has at his command an oil gauge, a speedometer, an ammeter, a radiator thermometer, and what not, with which to 'feel the pulse and take the temperature' of the machine continuously while operating it, I look with astonishment and sympathy at the projectionist, who is obliged to project pictures night after night before a $1,000 box office house, in a $200,000 theatre, literally, as it were, in the dark, and partially ignorant of the condition of the projector until its condition becomes so bad that the effect is seen upon the screen and is heard in the sound," said Dr. Goldsmith at the meeting of the committee last week.

"Then it is too late—the audience has seen the effect. Consciously or unconsciously, the audience carries away a feeling of dissatisfaction, the magnitude of which depends upon the seriousness of the circumstances, and may look elsewhere for better pictures and better sound.

"When the Projection Practice Committee will have completed its work of determining all the tolerances, clearances, and tensions for all moving parts of the projector, as it has set out to do, and of determining the amount of wear to which these parts may be subjected with safety, it will have completed an invaluable piece of work.

"But the final economic results of the work will have been achieved when the committee successfully indicates the simple means to be used by the projectionist to check these things, and the design of a cheap and simple kit of tools which he may use to do so. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers should do its best to make it easy for the projectionist to determine the exact condition of the projectors and to prove the occasional and timely need for replacement parts to the properly economical exhibitor. This means money in the exhibitor's pocket through better audience reaction, and also a more satisfactory and dignified position for the projectionist.

"Flicker, shaking of the picture on the screen, out-of-focus effects, poor sound reproduction, all of which can be caused by the wearing or the maladjustment of parts, will then be under the control of the projectionist, who will be able to check and to readjust or replace the faulty parts before they are allowed to annoy the audience, irritate the theatre owner, and drive away the patrons.

"For it is axiomatic that every business, to be successful, must serve the interests of the customer. The object of the motion picture theatre is to sell entertainment to its patrons, and everything that can be done to improve this product (the entertainment) will serve not only to maintain this patronage, but to increase it."

In addition to the study which forms the subject of Dr. Goldsmith's remarks, the committee is working on such problems as the determination of screen brightness in relation to its effect upon the audience, and the advisability of stopping down the projector lens when projecting cartoons and other bright subjects, or otherwise getting the same effect; and the design of suitable apparatus for equalizing the sound outputs of the two projectors, so that no difference in sound level will be discernible by the audience when the change-over occurs.

The successful progress of the work of the committee is due largely to the efforts of Messrs. Harry Rubin, Jesse Hopkins, H. Griffin, F. H. Richardson, P. A. McGuire, J. O. Baker, S. Glauber and George Edwards, says the SMPE.

New Device Measures to One Millionth of Inch by Light

A new electrical recording instrument, so sensitive that it detects errors of one-millionth of an inch and could measure the thickness of a piece of paper if it were cut edgewise into a thousand parts, was described recently before the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in New York.

The description was rendered by C. W. LaPierre, of the General Electric Company, who said the instrument uses light and electricity to record smoke, temperature, light, pressure, noise and variations in the thickness of very thin materials.

300 THEATRES USE STAGE SHOWS IN A RISING TIDE OF POPULARITY

40% More Houses Employ This Form of Entertainment Than in 1925, Says MPPDA Survey; RKO Leads With 87 Theatres

More than 300 motion picture theatres are using stage shows or prologues, pointing to the steady return to popularity of this form of entertainment in supplement to the regular screen fare, says Mark Larkin, of the Association of Motion Picture Producers on the Coast.

Larkin, pointing to the results of a survey made by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, made for Irving Fisher of Yale University, whose Index is a statistical guide to business trends, shows the following:

Radio-Keith-Orpheum, with much of the old Orpheum talent, leads with 87 houses using stage shows or prologues; Warner Brothers comes next with 82; then comes Fox with 69; Paramount Publix, 50; Loew's, 23; and, finally, it is estimated that 50 independent theatres employ this kind of entertainment.

Fanchon and Marco, with a studio in Hollywood that compares with picture production plants in extensiveness and elaborateness, has from 45 to 50 companies on tour presenting "Ideas" in theatres which use stage shows.

These shows have done much to absorb artists who formerly were seen in vaudeville, particularly dancers, says Larkin. The shows appear only in first-run houses in the larger cities, with one or two of them using as many as 200 performers.

Estimate was made that at least 40 percent more theatres use prologues now than was the case in 1925, when this form of entertainment was supposed to have been at its height. Larkin attributes this increase to the greater number of houses of larger seating capacity.

Esther Newcomb Dead; Favorite Boston Organist

Miss Esther Newcomb, 25, favorite organist of Hub radio and theatre audiences, died at the Riverbank hospital, Back Bay, Boston, last Friday night. Miss Newcomb for the past two years was featured with Arthur Martelle at the twin consoles of the Publix-Metropolitan theatre, and also had a great following for her radio broadcasts.

Portland Houses Unaffected

J. J. Parker, Portland, Ore., announced that Portland theatres will not be affected by the recent Fox West Coast-Skouras arrangement. In a late deal Parker took over the Portland houses from Fox.

MAY McHENRY

This charming young lady is known throughout the South as "Mac." She is the featured organist at Loew's State, and also on the local radio station in Memphis, Tenn. She has been identified with theatres in the south for the past 12 years, and has played at most of the best ones.

"Mac" has accomplished what few Memphis organists are able to do. She has an audience that really sings. Radio is her forte, though, and she offers an interesting program which she calls "Mac's Talkie Organolue." This is compiled from the continuities of featured pictures and is broadcast in music form.

Sam Lewis Composes Ode To Bob King's Anniversary

In commemoration of Bob King's forty-eighth wedding anniversary Sammy Lewis, his friend and collaborator on many hit tunes, composed the appropriate ode which follows:

To Mr. and Mrs. Bob King

Rhymes seem to fail me old friend
On your forty-eighth wedding day.
Beautiful thoughts seem to blend.
Even my heart seems to pray—but
Rhymes that I really intend
Take wings and fly away.

Kings have been mighty and great
In hist'ry that fact appears—but
No King ever had one mate—with God's blessing for forty-eight years.

Respectfully,
SAM LEWIS

Lombardo Band At the Paramount First Time in N. Y.

After more than two years during which they have been acclaimed as America's most popular orchestra, Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians are making their first Broadway stage appearance.

Ever since the Lombardos and their highly intriguing melodies captivated thousands of admirers via radio, Broadway producers and theatres have been bombarding them with offers for personal appearances.

Followers of this orchestra are seeing their favorites this week at the New York Paramount, in a complete stage show similar to that in which they broke all Chicago theatre records two seasons ago.

Radio City Plans Free Drama Study for Talent, Says Roxy

Talented students will live, and receive instruction, either free or at nominal cost, in dancing, acting and makeup, at a school to be established in Radio City, New York, according to plans outlined by S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, in a talk at the Dancers' Club, in New York last week.

Those with sufficient means will be required to pay about $10 per week for instruction and accommodation, Rothafel indicated. Sixty or more girls will be included in the ballet, in addition to 48 girls in group and line work. He declared the theatre and motion picture today are in trouble because "those in it pander instead of cater to the masses."

To Show "Girl Crazy" With Feature at Detroit House

The Publix Michigan, Detroit, will experiment with George Gershwin's musical show, "Girl Crazy," which played the legitimate at a $4.40 top, as the attraction in conjunction with a feature film. No admission increase will be put into effect.

Advertising on the show indicates 92 people in the cast of the musical, which played 41 weeks at the Alvin, New York, and at the Garrick, Chicago.

Comedians Return East

Joe Smith and Charles Dale have returned to New York after completing work in the leading roles of "East Side" at the Warner Coast studio. The film is an adaptation of David Freedman's play, "Mendel, Inc."

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Michigan

Week Ending February 5

Ted Lewis, the old master himself, with his syncopated orchestra and the silver-lined hat, ably assisted and abetted by a clever and capable company of entertainers, holds the spotlight at the Michigan this week.

The back-piece is a battered opera hat, with the musicians arranged around the brim. Lewis, whose black locks are shot with gray, works hard, and keeps his entertainers on their toes, from the first entrance of his eight dancing girls, to the last wailing note of the orchestra. He sings the old favorites—the songs which brought him into public favor so many years ago—with the T. L. twist which makes them sound new.

Eleanor Brooks, shapely dancer, displays her talents in two numbers. Snowball Whittier, a colored lad whose flying feet scarcely seem to touch the stage, steals the show from Lewis. And a miniature edition of Snowball, about half-pint size, does a "hot" dance.

The Dixie Four, harmonizers and steppers par-excellent, are not the least of the bill, with the ballet of dancing girls featured in three nicely staged numbers. A Lewis show is—to this reviewer—the last word in color, speed, pep and entertainment.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending February 5

Despite the fact that Publix has decided that New Orleans shall be cut off from the units, the Saenger this week in celebrating its fifth birthday is presenting an entertainment of decidedly high standard.

Under the supervision of Bob Blair, manager of the Saenger, the entertainment is headed by Lee Barton Evans, Theo Pennington, sixteen Strakova Girls, Skeets Genaro, and many others. The scene is a forest of huge candles, in which muses of comedy, drama, music, opera and dance are found. The routine includes classical as well as comedy sequences. It is a credit to the craftsmanship of Blair.

Lou Forbes and his music offer another of the tuneful and original musical presentations, with Louis Prima and other favorites of the orchestra.

"Mr. and Mrs. Herbie" at the twin consoles of the Saenger organ present a duet of the "Hungarian Rhapsody."

Two Warner Houses Get Acts

Warners has introduced vaudeville at the Ohio, Lima, Ohio, as a regular feature, and at the Ohio in Mansfield the last three days of each week.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week Ending February 4

Fanchon and Marco's "Manhattan" Idea opens with a Bowery setting. The chorus of 12 is attired in fitting costumes, six to represent men with black derbies and the other six as hard-boiled "mammas." Jack Sidney, in the role of fruit vendor, sings and Jack Lester clog dances.

The second setting is that of Greenwich Village and opens with a tune about a sculptor sung by Sidney. He gives way to the Bruno Weise trio, who, attired in smocks, perform a number of nifty stunts. They tumble about and as a windup one member reclines on his back, balances a ladder on his feet, atop which another member balances on his head, while his partner below plays the violin.

An exotic background, that of the head of a Zulu native with saucer lips, provides the atmosphere for the Harlem setting. The chorus makes its appearance through the mouth of this native and gives an exhibition of some snappy and hot gyrations. The episode is augmented by the dancing of Jack Lester, to the tune of "River, Stay Away From My Door."

Swor and Goode, in the role of two black jokers, wisecrack and tap dance in a refreshing manner.

The final setting is that of Broadway. The chorus is garbed in pale green pajamas and fitted with blonde wigs. They are augmented by Lucille, who engages in a neat bit of toe dancing. The chorus works nicely and, just before the curtains close, a replica of the Statue of Liberty rises in the background.

Baltimore Century

Week ending February 4

"Get Gay," with Bert Frohman as master of ceremonies, opened with the Century band banked upstage, directed by Herbert Bangs, violinist. The Chester Hale girls did a singing and dancing routine, after which Frohman sang "Making the Best of Each Day," then introducing Dugan and Hadley. These eccentric dancers did some soft shoe work with novelty solo steps and some knockabout comedy. Maureen Rio, next introduced, sang "Who's Your Little Whosis?" with Frohman playing straight and the Chester Hale girls in boy and girl costumes joining in with dancing at the finish. Bert then does some chatter and follows by singing "Sitting in the Movies Holding Her Hand," encoring with "All of Me." The Galenos, a troupe of acrobats in teeter board work, drew big applause. Maureen Rio returned to the stage with some hand springs and athletic work, while the girls danced for finale.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Sammy Lewis, writer of three of the latest popular hits, namely "Old Fashioned Home in New Hampshire" (Shapiro, Bernstein), "Too Late" (Remick) and "Just Friends" (Robbins) the other day provided quite a laugh for the crowds who were looking at the 40-foot dragon on the huge sign advertising the W. B. picture, "Hatchet Man." After watching the steam emitting from the monster's nostrils, Sammy said, "Apparently they're still pressing pants downstairs in the Wintergarden."

Sophie Tucker and Her Two Hot Papas (Ted Shapiro and Charles Drew) have been breaking house records all over the country. . . . She played at Shea's Buffalo last week and when she arrived in town, a brass band was on hand to greet her. . . . Sophie will be back in town next week and it is rumored that she will make an important hookup on the radio. . . .

The Miller Music Company is the publisher of that hit tune, "Time on My Hands," which Harold Adamson, Mack Gordon and Vincent Youmans composed. . . . According to Phil Schwartz, exploitation and special service manager, they have plenty more where that one came from. . . . Harold Lee, sales manager; Harry Hock, B. & O. manager; Marie Adams, slides manager; yes and even Mr. Miller himself will tell you the same thing. . . . By gosh, after listening to "Another Candle on Your Birthday Cake," "Walkin' on Air," "I'll Ballyhoo You," the tunes from the new Vincent Youmans show, "Smiling Through," and Fred Stone's musical, "Smiling Faces," I sure believe them. . . . They also have the "Raggedy Ann's Sunny Songs" both in book and record form, for the kiddies. They're great. . . .

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) is back on the job, after a week's illness. His future at this house certainly seems assured since he has been here over three years and the applause he gets during his entire solo is far greater than most acts on the bill. His own signature slide, bearing merely the word, "Bernie," drew down heavy applause. Then Bernie opened his "act" with the song "Blue Again," for which he composed special lyrics about his illness. After this number, Bernie turned toward them and gave them his own inimitable "salute" together with a little intimate talk which earned him another great hand. Then into the playing of "Sleepy Time Down South," a Chinese version of "Stein Song," "Time on My Hands," "Wouldn't Change You for the World," and his usual closing of events of the day, with special lyrics written to a popular tune. And how that audience does sing!

GEORGE EPSTEIN (Bayside W. Victory), with the able assistance of Mr. Fred Weiler, manager of the house and a former organist, presented an unusual organ and piano duet this past week. "Eppy," as he is popularly known in the neighborhood, is in the habit of offering community songfests. To many in the audience, the idea of "Eppy" and Mr. Weiler being accomplished pianists came as a distinct surprise. Their concert opened with a piano duet of the opera, "Poet and Peasant," beautifully played and very well received.

Mr. Weiler further surprised them by playing on the organ the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" as Mr. Epstein accompanied him at the grand piano. Very good applause greeted them at the finish of this entertaining presentation.

DON MILLER (Miami Olympia). Now that the "winter season" is on, this house has brought Mr. Miller, who was quite popular here a season or so ago, back to the console of this city's leading theatre. Mr. Miller is offering two solos a week, the first half, "community singing" type solos and for the last, "straight concert" solos, in which either popular or classical numbers are featured. He has, in the short time he has been here, succeeded in building up a large following and naturally, making himself a real box-office attraction.

The solo this week is a straight spotlight "concert" solo in which special lighting effects added to the attractiveness of the solo. The numbers featured are, "The Miserere" and "Anvil Chorus," both from the opera, "Il Trovatore." Mr. Miller is a capable musician and the audience show their appreciation of his efforts in a fine manner.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) once more proves he is not limited to any one type of organ presentation. As his specialty this week, Siegel features a dramatic rendition of Suppe's "Light Cavalry." His playing is superb, and the coloring which his nimble fingers give to the tones of this stirring selection raise it far above the usual. A tasteful set of slides give the audience a word picture of each of the different "moods" of the overture.

Use solos that hit "the spot."

BOB WEST (Brooklyn Fox), who is back at his old stand after an absence of four months, is just as popular with this audience as the day he left. What amounts to an ovation is being given him at each of his appearances. He's still giving them the old personality and cheering them along to sing louder each time. They sing loudly but try to produce more volume every time he encourages them. The program consisted of West's playing and the audience's singing of the following numbers: "Try Somebody Else," "Blue of the Night," "Concentratin' on You," "Who's Your Little Whozis," "Why Did It Have to be Me," and a final chorus of "River Stay 'way."

ARTHUR GUTOW (Detroit Michigan) substitutes for Dorothy Dix or Beatrice Fairfax in a musical skit called "Leap Year Lovelorn." A special set of illustrated slides helps out the comedy angle, with special lyrics. The songs played include "Soosier Little Sweetheart," "Goodnight Sweetheart," "You Call It Madness" and "All of Me."

JULIA DAWN (San Antonio Aztec). This golden voiced song bird is going over in a big way both in her daily offering from this Publix theatre and the KABC radio station, located in the Texas theatre building. Her request solos are broadcast from the studio by remote control. Miss Dawn recently presented the following songs on a morning period: "Sweet and Lovely," "I Don't Know Why," "Just Friends," "Lazy River," "Call Me Darling," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Down By the Sycamore Tree," "Where the Blue of the Night," "Blue Danube Waltz," "Lies," "Love Letters in the Sand," "All of Me," "Monastery Garden," "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and "River, Stay 'Way From My Door."

OVERTURES

EDDIE PERRIGIO (Omaha Orpheum) and his R-K-Olians have a novelty. The orchestra plays selections from "Maytime" and "Wabash Blues" and as the latter is about completed there rises from the pit the organ console. Standing on it are three the Lefholtz sisters They sing "Linda" in trio. Then follows another song, "When the Blue of the Night Meets the Gold of the Day." As an encore number, they sing "Love Goes On Just the Same."

JOHN GART (Brooklyn Loew's 46th) and His Rhythm Boys presented an entertaining overture entitled "Symphonic Melodies." This overture proved to be an ambitious effort on the part of Gart and his musicians and was very well thought out and presented. Popular numbers were offered, but each was introduced in a manner unusual in overtures. Gart arranged special symphonic introductions and then went into special arrangements of popular airs. "Carnival of Venice" variations was featured in a trumpet solo as was "You're My Everything" by a trio, playing muted trombones. The solo closed with a thunderous crescendo with the number, "French Echoes."

ERNEST HAUSER (San Antonio Majestic) last week led his RKO-lians in a concert overture entitled "Request Melodies." The selections were played in the following order: "Deep in My Heart," "Drinking Song,' "One Alone," "May Time," "Sweetheart" and "Lover, Come Back to Me," with Ernest Hauser, the conductor, giving some excellent strains on his violin. The music lovers rewarded the melody master with a great hand.

CHAS. B. STONE (Cincinnati RKO Albee) again proves his smart showmanship by selecting as his current overture "Waltzing With You," a waltz ballad composed by two Cincinnati boys, both attaches of a local radio station. A special arrangement has been worked out, and Stone extracts every possible ounce of harmony therefrom.

Incidentally, Stone surprises his admirers with a solo on the saxophone.

In the short time that Stone has been in charge of the pit, he has thoroughly sold himself to the regulars, who have come to regard his overtures as one of the enjoyable highlights of the stage bill. Stone has shown himself a capable showman as well.

DON ALBERT (Jersey City, Jersey) conducted Loew's Grand Orchestra in an overture entitled "Musical Reveries," which proved to be revivals of old numbers, modernized into special arrangements and prepared by Don Albert himself. The overture opened with a distinctive introduction and then went into "Just a Memory," sung by William Harvey, as the orchestra softly accompanied him. A special arrangement of oldtime tunes, made into a medley, proved entertaining. The orchestra then offered "Poor Butterfly," and a "rumba" tempo air built up to a grand finale for closing. The overture proved entertaingly different and was very well received by this audience.

WILYE STAHL (Brooklyn Fox) and his Fox Syncopators presented an outstanding and very well played overture of "Hungarian Melodies" as one of his recent offerings. Mr. Stahl, who has been at this house but a short time, is personable, a capable musician, a good leader and a young man who will gain a lot of popularity here if he continues giving the audiences this fine type of music. Audience reaction to the orchestra's offerings is distinctly favorable.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

Lively Wool is blended by the Bigelow Weavers from many wools, chosen because they are extra tough, extra resilient.

Result: Bigelow fabrics are quieter, softer, more restful to walk on. Their colors are brighter, clearer because Lively Wool takes dyes better. They are easier to clean—and keep their fresh beauty longer—because the tufts of Lively Wool offer a minimum of shelter to dirt. All these points mean a saving of hard cash for you.

Bigelow rugs and carpets stand the grind! That's why you find Bigelows in 90% of the country's class A hotels and in leading theatres! Years of service—where traffic is heaviest—have proved that Lively Wool makes a real difference!

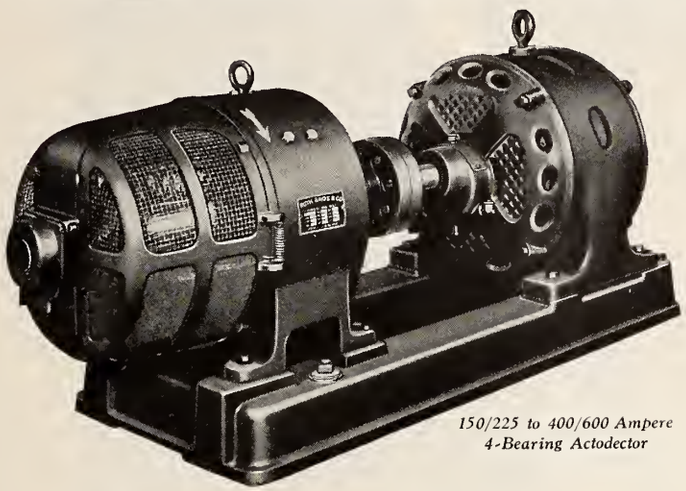
NOTES on WRITERS and SUBJECTS in this ISSUE

¶ The Rockefeller City project has been closely identified with the motion picture industry from the start. Whatever its purposes, and multifarious they have grown to be, the world of motion pictures rather thought of the development as a spectacular venture of that very comprehensive organization known in the trade as Radio. Not a matter of crooners and static, this, but RKO Pictures, Radio Keith Orpheum theatres, RCA Photophone—more remotely to those in this business, the Radio Corporation of America. And indeed, for the several years that the project has been under way, and until a few months ago, was this provocative undertaking in midtown New York not called Radio City? Thus it is that though the discussion (The Motion Picture in Rockefeller City) and other material presented in this issue concerns principally the theatre to be devoted to screen entertainment, the whole project variously involves this amusement industry. And it grows yet more stupendous when we contrast what its site once signified with the gargantuan monument to industry, science and art that it presently will hold . . . According to Wallace Benjamin (writing in the Sixth Avenue Association's Boulevard), as well as other sources, four plots aggregating 20 acres and containing the 13-acre area of Rockefeller City, was bought for $4,807.36 in 1801. That was, if mathematics can be trusted, about 131 years ago —not so long a period when one considers the centuries by which the ages of nations are usually calculated. The purchaser was a professor of botany in the very young Columbia, then but a single college. At that time, this area was 3½ miles from the City of New York, and the professor, Dr. David Hosack, had dreams of cultivating there a garden for the study of medicinal plants. He put his dream in execution, too, spending around $28,000 on his garden. But either it was too expensive, or did not seem to offer the results anticipated, for in 1810 he sold the four plots to the State of New York, receiving but $74,268.75 . . . It seems that these four plots lapsed into obscurity for a time. In the hands of the state they returned to their untended condition, and when in 1814 the state seems to have recognized its own lack of interest in them, they again were put to the service of Columbia. The trustees of Columbia, however, did not know what to do with them either at first, but in the early '20s they began the series of leases that has continued ever since, with the considerations mounting rapidly to the present fabulous figures. The first leases were for the whole 20-acre area at $125 a year. Later, the leases were for lots only. The first sale of any lots from the area was to a church, 16 lots being sold for $80,000. Then early in this century the block between 48th and 49th Streets was sold—this piece bringing Columbia $3,000,000. Since then, the trustees have steadfastly refused to dispose of any portion of the area, and today John D. Rockefeller Jr.'s Metropolitan Square Corporation holds the remaining land only on a lease, and this contract contains clauses calling for the right to cancel or reappraise at the end of each 20-year period. . . . The interest of Mr. Rockefeller—and one should emphatically include, Mrs. Rockefeller, for she has become very active in the direction of the project—is represented as that of one desiring to give the electrical sciences adaptable to education and entertainment their full scope as cultural media for all the people. The project is planned, however, as a sound commercial venture. From the managers, architects and engineers, one gathers that any idea of direct philanthropy associated with the project originally has been thoroughly eradicated. Experiment has little if any place in the plans. Ideas have apparently been adopted only when they were absolutely "safe"—that is, not so radical that they might scare away profits. . . One wonders, of course, about the profits of other amusement places. Broadway is a street of transients, and Rockefeller City is likely to prove a wonder that must be visited. But perhaps the bridge need not be crossed until it is come to. It so often happens, too, that such bridges by that time have disappeared.

¶ If the Southtown theatre (A Neighborhood Theatre Built on the Grand Scale) were notable for nothing else, it would be instructive for the ideas it offers for means to attract patrons to a community amusement center from points a considerable distance away. The most opulent theatre in the Chicago section of Englewood, this Publix-Balaban & Katz theatre has been conceived to serve not only this large division, but a substantial portion of the southwestern part of the city. Parking provisions form a section of the very plot of the theatre, and circulation of patronage has been arranged specifically to direct egress conveniently near the parked motors. For so large and congested a city, the automobile as a means of local transportation is very important, due to the existence of a great planned boulevard system. In most other cities, the automobile is just as important a means of transit, and to provide for this condition is doubtless to enlarge an important theatre's field of regular patronage. Arthur Frederick Adams, who discusses the Southtown, is a designer on the staff of the architects, C. W. & George L. Rapp.



¶ His article on the construction and materials of theatre chairs is H. S. Leader's second and final contribution to the series, Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance. This symposium of modern technical thought on a very important factor in successful theatre operation will next present Alfred C. Hoven. Both Mr. Leader and Mr. Hoven are research engineers on the staff of the American Seating Company. Mr. Hoven is directly in charge of the phases of seating he will discuss in the next issue of Better Theatres.

¶ Leo T. Parker, who in Liability Under Film Service Contracts contributes another of his regular legal articles, is a Cincinnati attorney.

¶ Aaron Nadell (Repairs Made by the Projectionist) is a New York sound and projection engineer. He will be remembered as the author of the recent series, "What the Manager Should Know About Sound." He has also written a book on sound picture projection.

¶ Dan Parker (Preparing Organ Solos for the Circuit) is a member of the staff of the organists' special service department of the Radio Keith Orpheum circuit.

ROTH ACTODECTORS

150/225 to 400/600 Ampere
4-Bearing Actodector

THOROUGHLY DEPENDABLE—

For the New Southtown Theatre, Chicago, Publix selected Roth Multiple Arc Type Actodectors because they are built especially to meet the particular requirements of the projection booth. They provide a steady direct current to the arcs which results in screen illumination of continuously uniform intensity and unvarying brilliance —even during change-over. Ideal for sound or silent pictures.

Roth Actodectors are dependable. Thirty-eight years of experience by Roth Engineers have produced perfectly-balanced construction throughout the entire unit. Actodectors, Resistors and Control Panels are perfectly matched.

Built in sizes from 20 to 600 amperes.

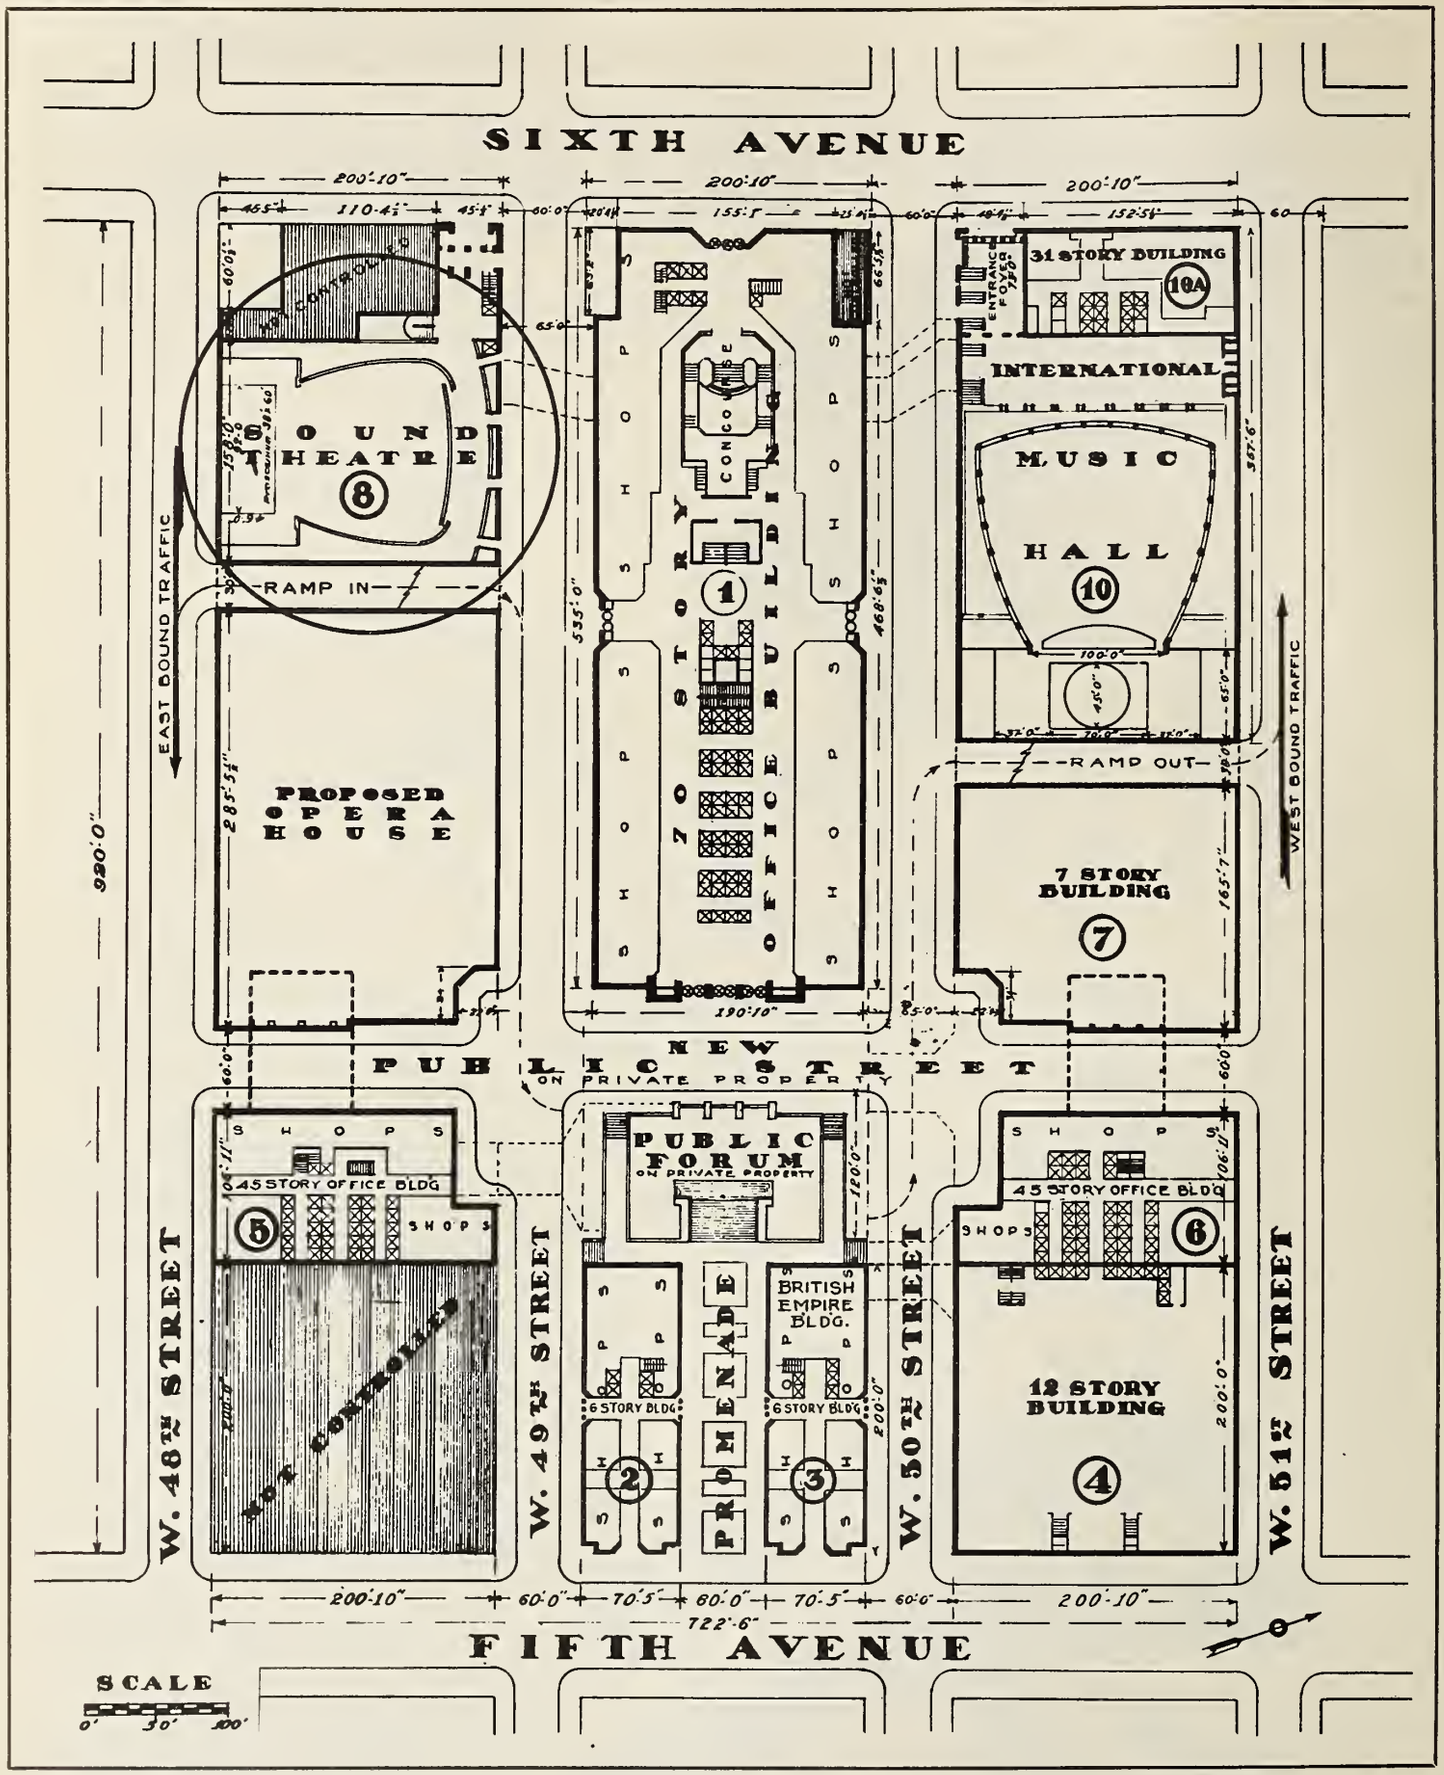
ON THE HIGH COST OF GETTING A DRINK

Drawn by Bill Pause

an editorial

Waiting for seats the other night in the foyer of a neighborhood house, we noticed outcoming patrons as they stopped in front of a drinking fountain. It seems that they would go up to it ready for something quite as good as a highball when you want it that badly, only to be frustrated by a faucet with the family dipper, of course, hygienically absent. They glanced around. Ah, yes—an individual cup available. But for the price of a penny. Well, a penny isn't much even in these days. But it's too much for a drink of water in a Prohibition country. The women would dig into their purses. Some of the men didn't happen to have a penny. One youngster was in the same fix, but youngsters have no false dignity, and this kid being something of a contortionist besides, stole himself about a "fifth."

The practice of charging for a drink of water in a theatre is not general—yet. But there is talk, some of it also entertaining the suggestion that retiring rooms have pay-toilets. Theatres should make money, of course. But a patron's good will is nothing to risk for a penny or two.



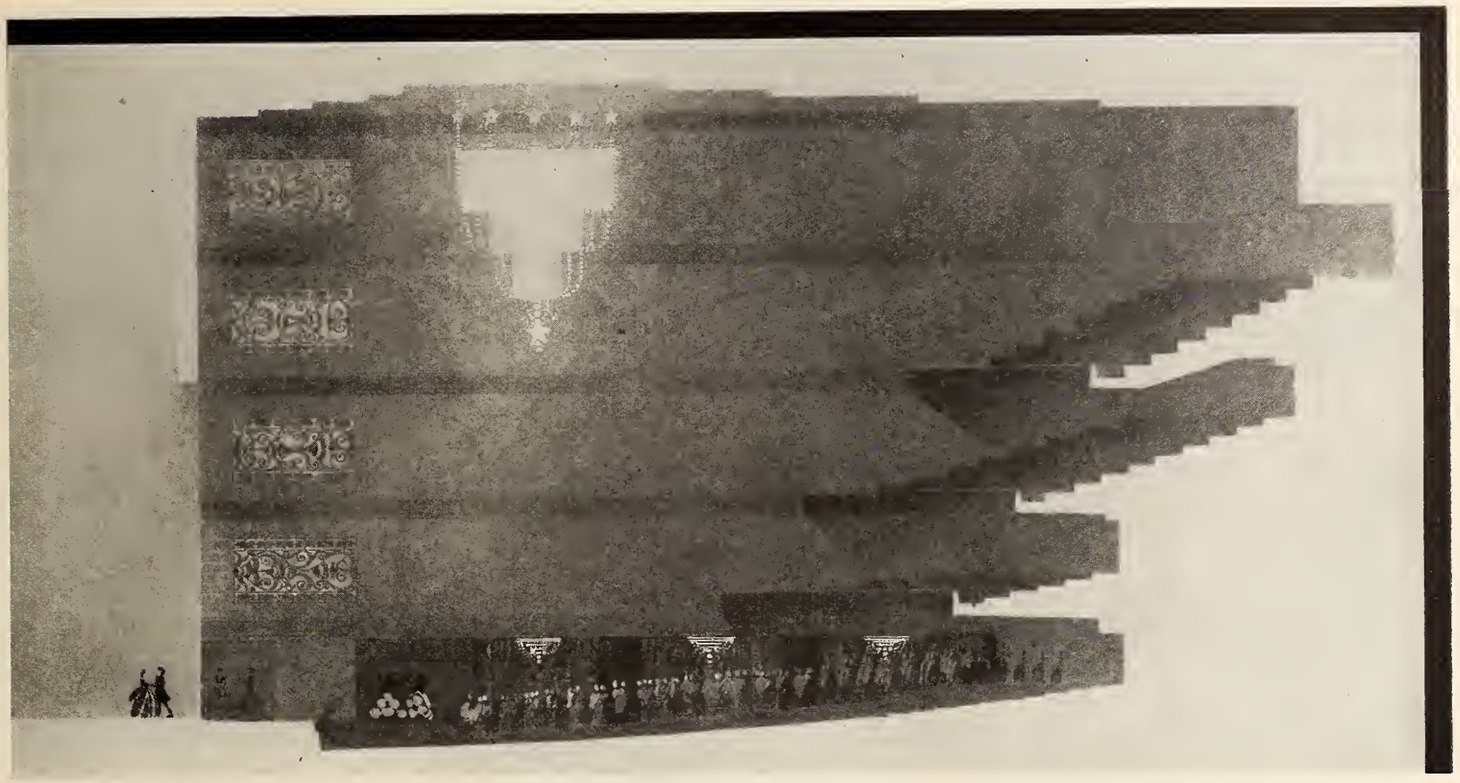


CHART OF THE PLOT OF ROCKFELLER CITY PROJECT IN NEW YORK

An official topographical sketch showing the allocation of the various units of the Rockefeller City development in midtown Manhattan. The dotted lines indicate sublevel passages between the various buildings. The ramps indicated are to sublevel parking space. The motion picture theatre, Building No. 8, is indicated by a circle.

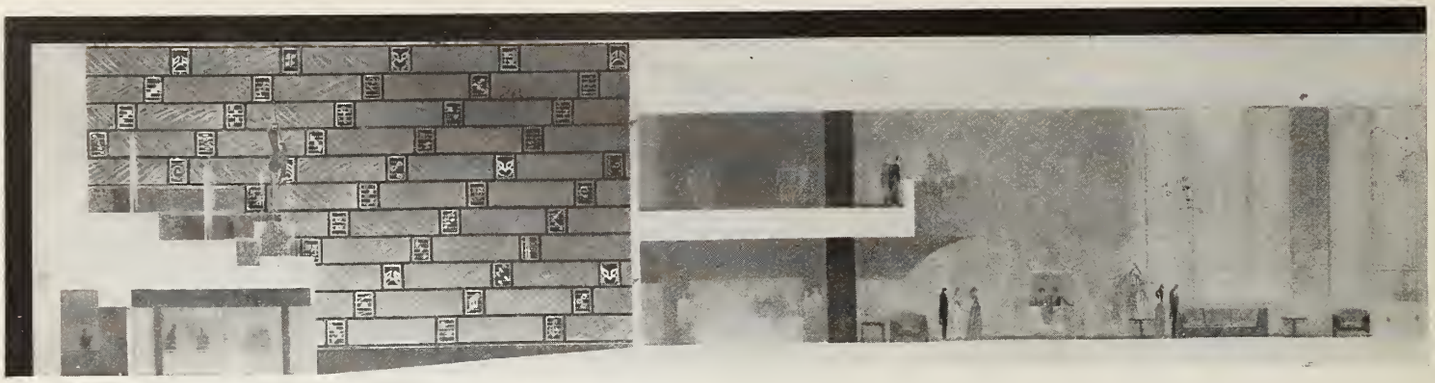
THE MOTION PICTURE IN ROCKEFELLER CITY

A descriptive and critical discussion of the Cinema to be operated by Radio-Keith-Orpheum in the $250,000,000 project now underway in midtown Manhattan, New York City—with elevations and drawings from the plans

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

THE WORLD has probably never seen a private commercial enterprise so grandiose as Rockefeller City. Some few others may have eventually matched it in scale over a long period of time, while such a civic program as the Chicago Lake Front Development is in many phases comparable. But unless Mr. Robert Ripley knows of another—for he would!—the $250,000,000 project now underway in midtown New York has no prototype.

The motion picture industry participates in this colossal scheme broadly through the close association therein of the Radio Corporation of America, parent company of the RKO Pathe film producing and distributing organization, and of the Radio Keith Orpheum circuit of photoplay-vaudeville theatres.



But directly, the motion picture, as an art, is importantly represented among the functions of Rockefeller City by Building No. 8, which is to house a theatre variously referred to officially as The Cinema and The Sound Theatre. It is not impossible that still another theatrical building in the group will exhibit motion pictures, for the International Musical Hall will be equipped to do so. It is the Cinema, however, that has been designated as the representative here of the motion picture, and in the light of this whole grand venture—if not adventure—what the Cinema is to be physically and theatrically is a thing of potentiail repercussion in film circles.

Obviously, this playhouse, Theatre No. 8, cannot be thought of—now, at any rate—as just another motion picture theatre. In a $250,000,000 development involving still more millions in contracts, mistakes, as Raymond Hood, one of the architects, has said, "can be so costly that they become catastrophes." The architects include a number of the world's most eminent, and they are advised constantly by leading authorities in all associated technical fields. In practical showmanship, they have as consultant, S. L. Rothafel of "Roxy" fame. All form a General Staff (nominally headed by the architectural firm of Reinhard & Hofmeister) each member of which, as Mr. Hood also has said, "knows that he is risking his reputation, on the success of Rockefeller City."

The project inevitably compels interpretation as a potential criterion. In commerce, it will house the executive offices of many a great industrial corporation. Two of the buildings will be devoted to the interests in this country of the French Republic and the British Empire. Failing to acquire the Metropolitan, Rockefeller City will doubtless aspire in its own opera company to superiority over that organization as well as the Chicago Civic and La Scala. International Music Hall will surely attempt as much in other forms of music, and no less should be the recognition granted that newer art and prodigal industry, the motion picture.

THE CINEMA will be located at the Southwest corner of the three-block area between 48th and 51st Streets, and Fifth and Sixth Avenues. This area contains 513,000 square feet—something less than 13 acres. The property was acquired early in 1929 from Columbia University on a lease-hold, the contract permitting cancellation or re-appraisal every 20 years. The holding company, the Metropolitan Square Corporation, represents the Rockefeller interests, from which, perhaps, as well as from certain physical aspects, the project derives the semi-civic character it has taken on in the public mind.

It is certainly of civic interest that this region, largely a vestige of midtown Manhattan's lesser importance as a commercial district, is to become really monumental. With a 70-story office structure rising from approximately the center, the development will include 10 other buildings of lesser heights, carefully massed, sculped with modern emphasis of line and purity of surface out of limestone.

But provisions of more direct civic interest have also been made. At the central Fifth Avenue entrance to the plot (as indicated in the accompanying chart) will be a promenade leading to a monumental plaza or "public forum." Being contemplated is also another "public forum" in the sub-level of the central office building. All sections of the plot will be accessible through sub-level passages as well as at the surface, and sub-level parking space will be reached by ramps.

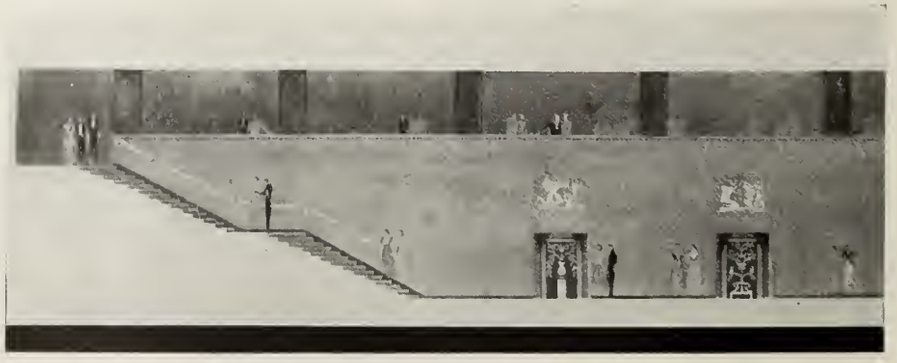
The Cinema will have its entrance on Sixth Avenue at the corner of 49th Street. Next door—just across 49th—will be the main office structure, while on the opposite corner of the plot—between 50th and 51st Streets — will be situated International Music Hall. The 48th Street corner was not acquired, so that the theatre proper will be located behind an existing building, with entrance through a vestibule (outer lobby) and a main lobby running back 80 feet along 49th Street. The main lobby enters into a grand foyer spanning the auditorium at its rear. The building is thus on the L-plan, the auditorium running from North to South, with entrance on the West.

The entire theatre portion of the building—that is, auditorium, foyers and all divisions related in any way to the theatrical functions of the structure—contains 4,484,000 cubic feet. The ground area covers 36,420 square feet. The Cinema will seat 3,500 on four levels.

Other basic dimensions, contributing further to an appreciation of the major relationships of the plan, place the width of the auditorium at 158 feet, and its length (from rear wall to curtain line) at 128 feet. The average height of the auditorium is approximately 65 feet. The grand foyer has about the same width as the auditorium, with a depth of 22 feet. The proscenium opening is 60 feet wide and 38 feet high, while the entire stage area measures 92x46 feet.

The principal lounge is located in the basement, and off it are placed the men's and women's special lounges and toilets. The remainder of the basement is devoted to machine rooms and below-stage quarters. Still another level below the basement, or first sub-level, contains such special rooms as the music director's office and a rehearsal hall.

IN DECORATIVE treatment, simple elegance of modern character forms the only general motif. The main foyer has mirrors opposing the entrance doors to the auditorium. Rising to the height of the second level of the auditorium, it opens through columns upon the mezzanine formed behind the seating area. The main lounge has walls covered with fabric.



Simplicity in the auditorium treatment has been carried out with distinction in wood. The entire wall surface is in a special wood of the approximate tone of walnut, with relief worked out in horizontal strips level with each seating floor composed of a cuprous material. Further relief is afforded by a vertical series of pierced plaster rectangles of ornamental pattern, flanking the proscenium. These serve also as organ loft grilles.

The ceiling, which is treated decoratively in plaster harmonizing in tone with the walls, is involved in the distinctive arrangement of the proscenium arch. In a sense, there is no proscenium arch, the opening proceeding in straight lines almost to the ceiling. Incorporated in this arrangement is a stage curtain divided into constituent curtains each of which can be lifted independently of the other. The purpose of this is to provide flexibility in the presentation of stage features as well as to permit the use of the screen without full stage.

There are many details in the physical plan and decorative scheme of Theatre No. 8 which could be enumerated, but they are of the kind which at this time are probably more clearly indicated in the designers' sketches and architects' plans accompanying this article. They will also be more definitely subject to discussion when the completed theatre is available. From what has been given, however, and from an examination of the accompanying sketches and plans, it is possible to ask consideration of the question as to whether Theatre No. 8 fully realizes in its branch, the ideals of the Rockefeller City project.

IN A VERY special sense, Theatre No. 8—the "sound theatre," and therefore necessarily the motion picture theatre of Rockefeller City—suggests the old, old quandary: Are we to plan a motion picture theatre or a stage-show theatre in which we merely exhibit motion pictures? The special sense in which this question applies to the Rockefeller City Cinema is derived from the provision in the project of other theatres designated for the other theatrical arts. More than ever—vastly more—presentation of motion picture entertainment, which is delicately mechanical in both action and sound, must be dissociated from the "legitimate" or stage-show type of theatre if it is to realize its full effectiveness. It seems to me that at best, Theatre No. 8 represents the same old compromise that has generally characterized motion picture theatre design to the detriment of the art it is supposed to serve.

The presence of the stage and its elaborate accessories, while indicative, is not definitive. One need not insist upon the absence of a stage. But for a motion picture theatre, the screen, projection, sight lines and the allocation of seating areas in relation to ideal acoustics, are the paramount factors, in comparison with which all other considerations must be subordinate.

Theatre No. 8, as was noted, has a seating capacity of 3,500, distributed on four levels. In this, it is similar to the plan of the Salle-Pleyel in Paris. That is, the three upper levels of seating consist in shallow balconies—hugging the rear wall of the auditorium, leaving a large uninterrupted space between the facias of the balconies and the proscenium. Three shallow balconies, or mezzanines, as they are called, seat approximately 500 each. The main floor holds the bulk of the seating. The large overhanging balcony, common in most of the larger theatres, has thus been eliminated. This, then, is an important departure from even common good practice in motion picture theatre design finally evolved during the last ten years.

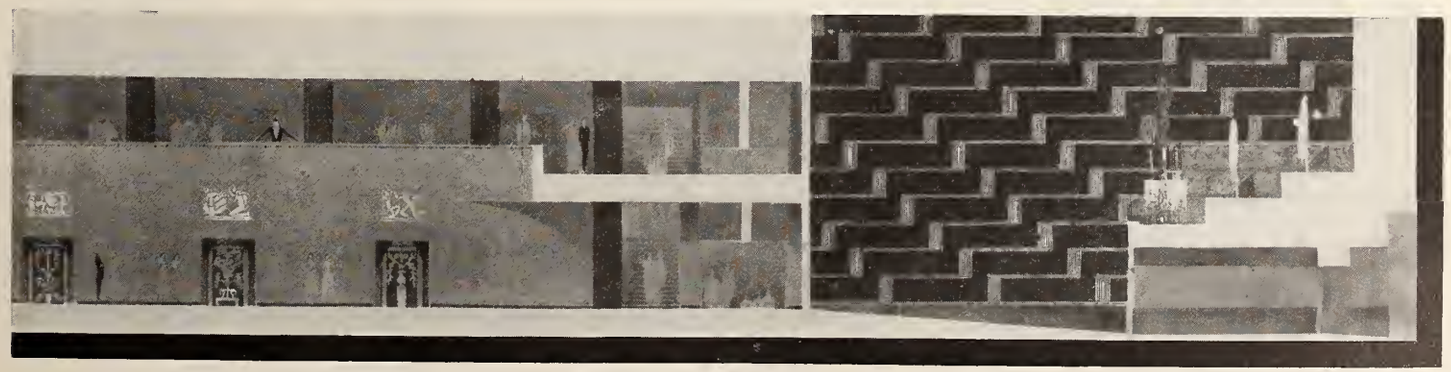
Essentially, these shallow upper levels of seating could have many desirable qualities. They form more intimate groups of seating. The pocket underneath the usual large overhanging balcony, acoustically undesirable, is eliminated, and sight on to a higher screen is more readily possible than when the single large overhanging balcony is used. However, the particular disposition of the three upper levels of seating in Theatre No. 8 causes some undesirable conditions. A superfluous height of auditorium caused by the superimposed levels of seating leaves a greater part of the complete height of the auditorium at the screen end, above the top of the point where the screen would have to be. This means that people seated in the upper levels, unless they bend forward to look down at the screen, find themselves staring at a surface which vies in size with the area of the screen itself. This not only would prove a physical discomfort to the patron, but it also has a poor psychological effect in the function of viewing the screen. This fault is not so evident in the case of the stage performance, since there is not such a distinct line of demarcation in the settings that are used for legitimate performances as there is between the light area on the motion picture screen, and also the dark portion immediately above it.

The two uppermost levels of seating are, moreover, at a height above the street level which requires an uncomfortable amount of stair climbing. This fact is recognized in the provision of elevators to reach these levels. Elevators, of course, cannot be considered an efficient means of transporting large numbers of people in a theatre, and they also are undesirable psychologically.

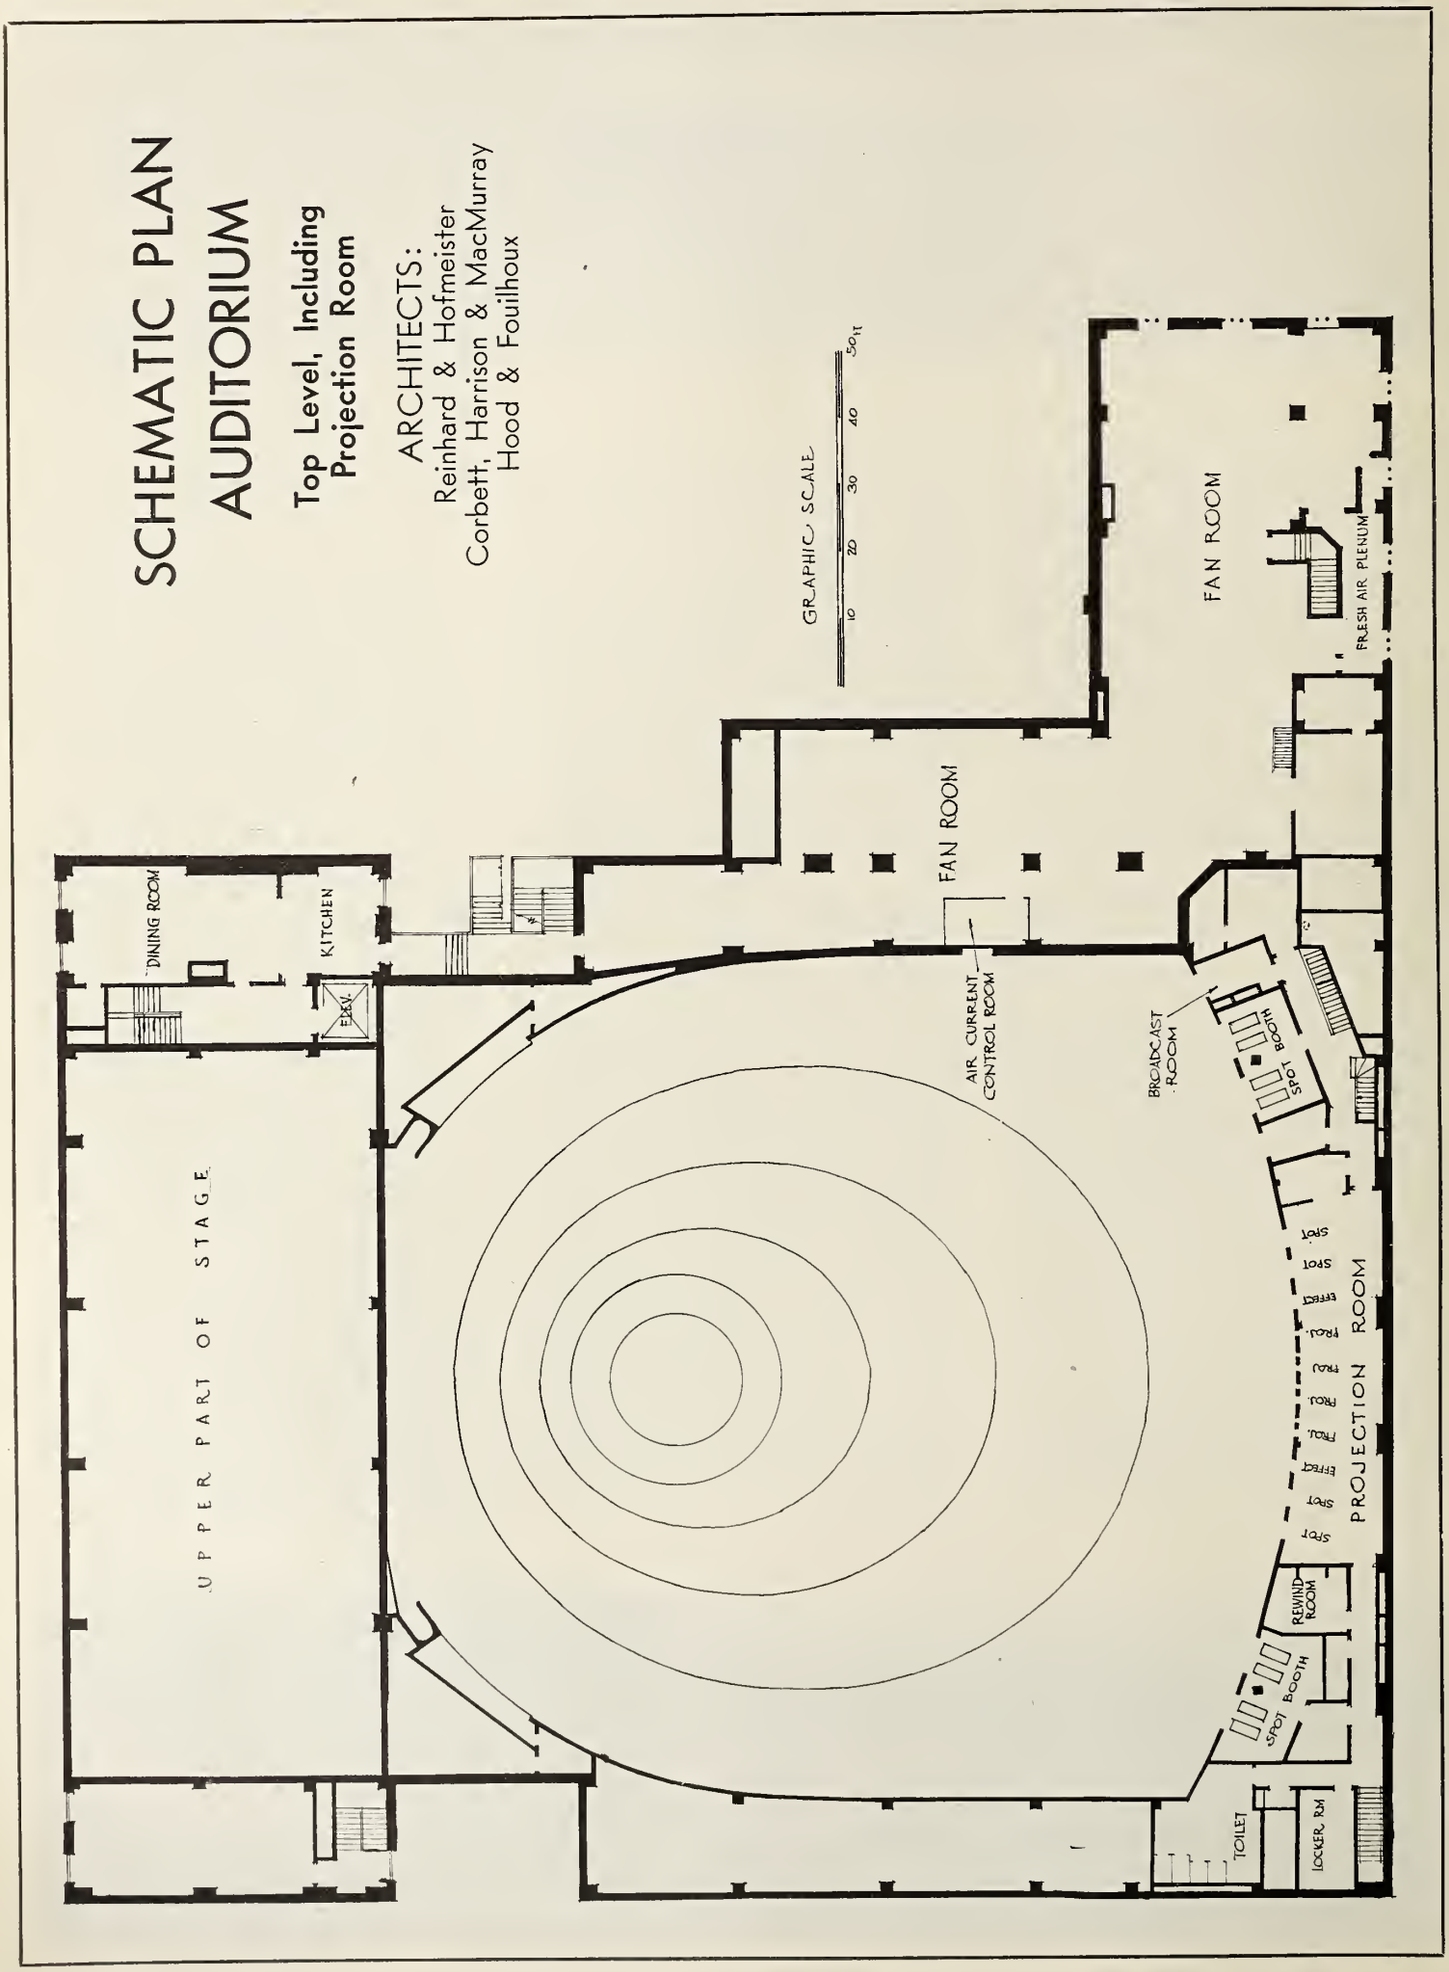
The excessive projection angle, caused by the necessity of placing the projection room above the top level of seating, results in a distorted effect to the picture on the screen, which cannot be entirely and successfully eliminated by any adjustments to the location of the screen or in the projection machines. The angle of projection in Theatre No. 8 is approximately 26°—an extreme.

The general shape of the Theatre No. 8 plan shows a width of auditorium practically equal to the depth, which measures from the proscenium line to the projection room wall. This resultant main form of the plan has a tendency to make the eye wander from side to side, making it difficult to concentrate attention restfully toward the screen. A somewhat narrower width and a greater depth would have achieved much better results.

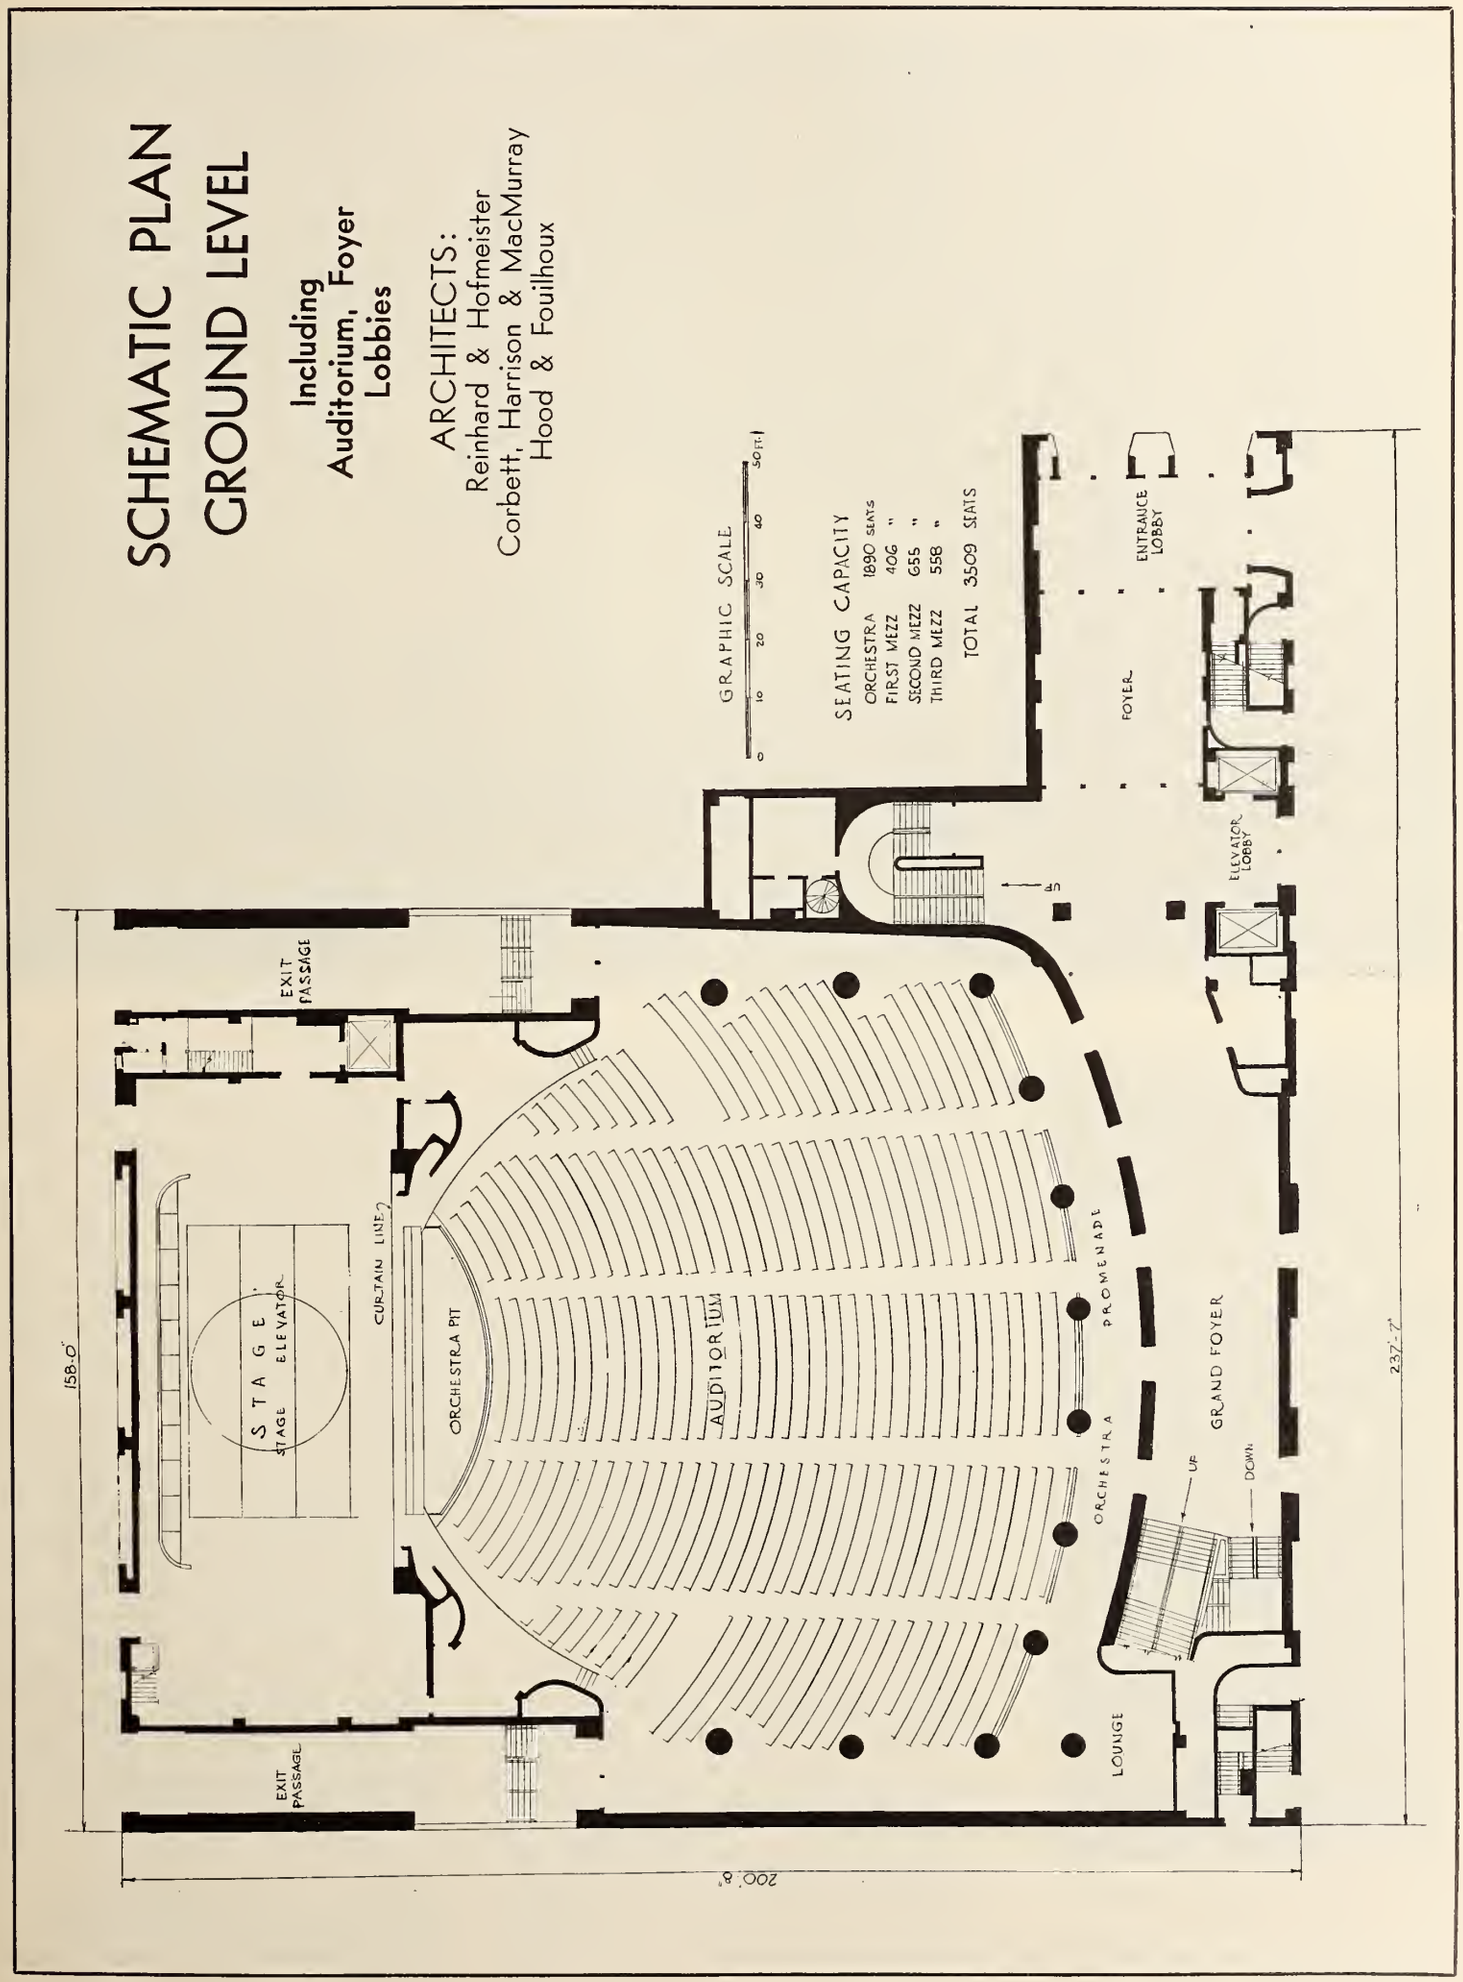
There are five banks of seating on the main orchestra floor across the width of the auditorium, the two extreme side backs being in an area from which a rather distorted view of the screen is almost certain, especially if a maximum-sized screen were to be used, as, indeed, is provided in the plan.



IN DESIGN, Rockefeller Theatre No. 8, presents nothing to retard the movement toward a revalution of the photoplay theatre. In the designs of some architects during the past year or two—those of S. Charles Lee and B. Marcus Priteca, for example—experiment has been toward the expression of the fantastic in modern abstract forms. Whether this attempt is in the right direction or not, is a controversial matter. The attempt itself, however, can only be admirable, for it does seek a better way, and the Rockefeller Cinema design has apparently been done in the same spirit. There is no evidence of the French psuedo-modernism, nor of the German corruption of Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright. Neither gaudy nor severe, the beauty of the Cinema lies in its simple harmonies, its modernism in its finding a natural beauty in materials themselves.



This, if not complete, is assuredly an authentic appreciation of modern resources and of the contemporary spirit, contributed to, as designers and artists for the whole project, by Edward Stone, Paul Manship, Lee Lawrie, Robert Garrison, Rene Chambellin, Edward Trumbull, Hildreth Meiere, Carl Landefeld, George Paully and John Wenrich.



Headed by "Roxy," who will direct all of the theatrical and operatic enterprises of Radio Keith Orpheum in Rockefeller City, the Cinema is to present pictures and stage acts in the grand manner sponsored by Rothafel in the New York theatre bearing his nick-name. It remains to be seen, of course, which is to be given emphasis—the stage portion, or the screen portion.

And here, I think, is represented the crux of the problem dominating theatre designing today. This article began with it, it ends with it: Is the theatre we are planning to be a motion picture theatre or not? It seems to me that motion picture entertainment today is too specialized to permit of the compromise represented in Rockefeller City's home for this art.

A NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE BUILT ON THE GRAND SCALE

Describing the new Southtown in Englewood, Chicago, a Publix house designed with special circulatory and parking provisions for patrons with automobiles. With a seating capacity of 3,500, the Southtown becomes an amusement center for all southwest Chicago

By ARTHUR

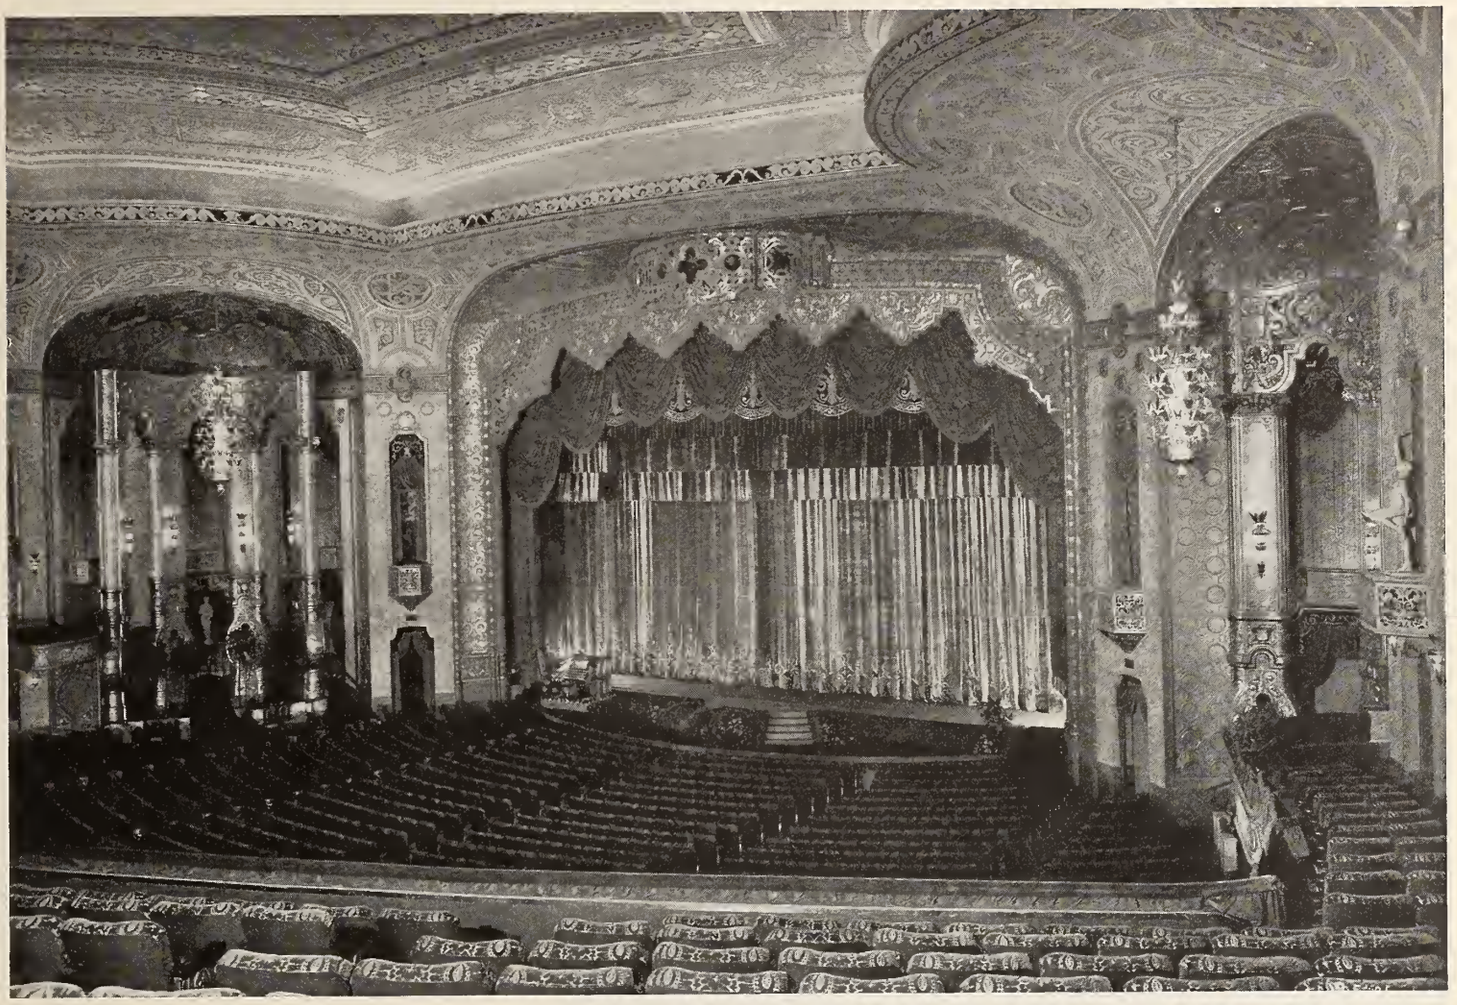
ENGLEWOOD, one of the largest and oldest sections of the City of Chicago, recently witnessed the opening of the new Southtown theatre, a theatre of unusual plan arrangement and one built for the special needs of Englewood. The owners, Publix-Balaban & Katz Corporation of Chicago, with the architects, C. W. & George L. Rapp, in the designing and planning of this new building, were confronted with many problems in order to meet the needs of the theatre-going public of this community.



This theatre, which seats 3,500, is located on West 63rd Street, just east of Halsted Street, the property of which has a frontage of 550 feet and extends back to Englewood Avenue, a distance of 250 feet. Entrance to the theatre is from 63rd Street and is but a short distance from the main business section of Englewood.

The selection of this large piece of property by the owners was not only made for the building of a theatre, but to incorporate two large open spaces at the east and west ends of the theatre for the parking of cars. With the arrangement of the new Southtown theatre, it is possible to drive on to the theatre grounds, park your car and attend the theatre without any fear or worry as to the proper care of your automobile. The Gateway theatre, which was opened a short time ago, has a similar arrangement of parking space. This theatre, which is located in the Northwestern part of Chicago, and the new Southtown theatre, are the only theatres in Chicago which have made provision for large parking space for automobiles.

In designing the exterior of the new Southtown theatre, the architects, have incorporated a tower with a beacon, which rises to a height of 160 feet. This tower is visible from all parts of Englewood, and at night is beautifully illuminated by signs and floodlights. The beacon light is in various colors. This tower also houses tanks, mechanical equipment and has otherwise proved itself a very practical feature, not only from an advertising point of view, but also because it houses machinery which would otherwise have to find a place in other parts of the building.

The main entrance of the theatre has been elaborately decorated in colors, and it also has a vast amount of illumination. Other parts of the exterior are also flooded by large floodlights in various colors, all of which at night gives a spectacular effect.

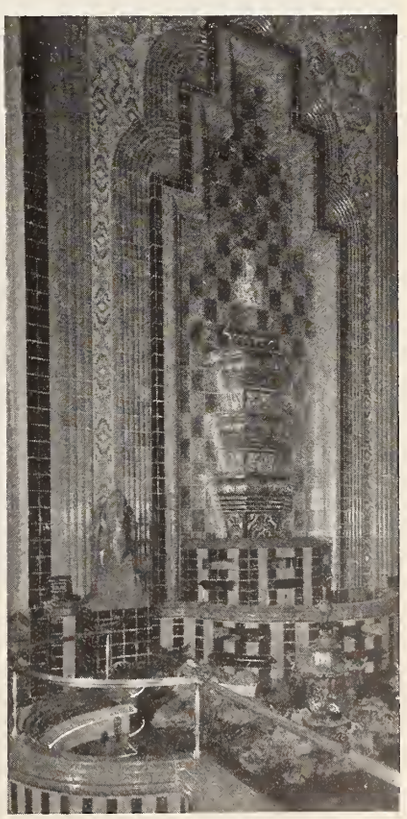
The box office is divided into two parts, and patrons enter the theatre between the two offices, making a direct entrance to the grand lobby. On entering the grand lobby we find a magnificent chamber which in length is 140 feet, and 50 feet in width. The great size of this hall has been made interesting by the introduction of different architectural forms and a combination of interesting ceiling decorative features. One impressive feature is an aquarium and fountain. The aquarium is 45 feet long and 20 feet wide. This feature is beautifully designed in colored decorative materials and illuminated with unusual lighting effects. At the end of this aquarium rises a water and electrical fountain to a height of 38 feet designed in tiles of gold, silver, black, red and other colors. In the aquarium have been placed fish, birds and other forms of tropical aquatic life.



The main entrance from the grand lobby to the main foyer is from the right. The main foyer measures 125 feet in length, with an average width of 35 feet. This mammoth foyer has been so planned as to be used not only as a foyer, but also as a promenade. Since lounge rooms, especially the general lounge which is found in most large theatres, has been so minimized, the main foyer is serving many purposes, as a foyer, general lounge, cosmetic room, smoking room, etc. Placed off this foyer, the minor rooms are smaller than usual. Being also adjacent to the grand lobby, the main foyer greatly extends the space available for handling large crowds. The foyer and grand lobby are connected so as to form practically one huge hall.

At the end of the main foyer and also from the right of the grand lobby are the main stair lobby and also the exit lobby. This space is used practically for the exiting of patrons passing through to the outer lobby and thence to the open part at the base of the tower. In other words, patrons enter at the main entrance and exit at the tower, so there is no cross-circulation of any kind.

The main approach to the mezzanine or balcony level floor is from the left of the grand lobby. One approaches a wide and spacious stairway, and turning to the right, passes over a bridge which spans the grand lobby above the aquarium. Standing on this bridge, one can look over into the water effects below. This also gives the patron a view of the entire length of the grand lobby.

The mezzanine foyer is over 225 feet

Shown at the top of the page is the forward section of the auditorium, as seen from the balcony. This view emphasizes the great width of the room. It is 138 feet.

The fountain and aquarium, a novel decorative feature of theatrical interest in the main foyer. It is done in tiles of gold, silver, black, reds and other vivid colors.

The upper view is of the mezzanine promenade, which is 225 feet long. Decorations include alcoves and niches containing statuary, paintings, etc., of local inspiration.

long. This foyer contains many novel features, some of historical interest locally. Englewood is an old, historic part of Chicago, and though many historical monuments still remain, many are gone and forgotten. These have been a source of ideas in planning the mezzanine foyer. There are alcoves, niches, vistas and the like in which are portrayed in miniature models, paintings, statuary representing events in this community's bygone days.

These alcoves and niches have been particularly designed for lighting effects and for the display of features that can be removed from time to time and replaced with new subjects. This foyer also contains the main exit stairway which leads direct to the exit lobby and thence to the outside. There is also space in connection with this foyer to be used for tea rooms and lounging space with smoking privileges.

The auditorium is large and spacious and could well accomodate more seats, but 3,500 was agreed upon as being ample, and inasmuch as the large lot area was acquired, the use of a large balcony was dispensed with, and only a small balcony of a low type decided upon. This balcony projects only 30 feet into the auditorium, leaving a space from the front of the balcony to the stage of 100 feet. Total depth of the auditorium from the rear to the stage is 136 feet, and the width is 138 feet. The main floor of the auditorum contains six banks of seats, which gives a total of 2,500 seats on the main floor and 1,000 seats in the balcony.

At either side of the auditorium there is a large concourse, above which is space accommodating all fire exit stairways. In other words, all exit stairways are enclosed in walls or fire towers, no fire escapes being visible on the outside. On account of the large lot area, it was deemed advisable to do this, since it involves an economical form of construction, requires no upkeep and makes a safer group of stairways than can be had in steel fire escape construction.

The organ screens at the front of the auditorium are designed in large scale exedra type and have been beautifully decorated in gold. Behind these exedras are stairways leading to the mezzanine foyer level, all of which have been adorned with sculpture and ornamental detail and illuminated in various tones of color.

A large orchestra pit has been provided. It spans the full width of the proscenium arch, which has an opening of 65 feet. A fully equipped stage with preparatory rooms, dressing rooms and all other incidental features necessary, have been provided.

The auditorium is of a semi-atmospheric type, but through the arrangement of lighting effects, the whole style can be changed to full atmospheric, semi-atmospheric, or to that of an elegantly decorated room. Large monumental arches at the sides enclose interesting details in Italian and Spanish patterns, though they are somewhat modern in interpretation. Statuary, flowers, ornamental iron work, etc., play an important part in giving the whole room touches of color, while the lighting system permits many changes in the color scheme.

On the main floor and also on the mezzanine foyer level, are a children's playrooms, men's and women's lounges, cosmetic rooms, and other special rooms for the use of patrons. These rooms in many theatres are found in the basement, in connection with a large general lounging room, but in this particular theatre nothing has been put into the basement other than the boiler room and cooling machinery.

Indicative items of material and equipment in the Southtown are mosaic and faience tile, by Ravenswood Tile Company, Chicago; terra cotta by the Northwestern Terra Cotta Company, Chicago; metal windows and partitions by Knisely, Chi-

Almost the full expanse of the double main floor foyer is shown in the upper picture. The forward room is rectangular, while the further one is octagonal, linked as a unit.

The lower view shows the playroom, where the children have plenty of toys to play with under supervision. This room is reached from both the lobby and the foyer directly.

LIABILITY UNDER FILM SERVICE CONTRACTS

analyses of recent high court decisions

By LEO T. PARKER

THEATRE OWNERS who enter into a valid contract to exhibit certain motion picture films, are bound to pay the rental price specified in contracts, although they sell their theatres, or for other reasons are unable to comply with the terms of the contract. This rule of the law is applicable even though the distributor does not ship or offer to deliver the films to the seller of the theatre. So held a higher court in the late case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation v. Cocke (41 S. W. [2d] 645).

The facts of this case are that a motion picture theatre owner and a film distributor entered into a contract by the terms of which it was agreed that the theatre owner would accept and pay a specified amount for the privilege of exhibiting motion picture films stipulated in the contract. The agreement provided that the distributor would give the exhibitor at least four weeks' notice, in writing, of the date when the various photoplays would be available. The contract also contained the following clause:

"If the exhibitor sells or disposes of his interest in the theatre above specified, he may assign this contract to the purchaser of such interest with the written consent of the distributor and such assignment shall become effective upon the written acceptance thereof by assignee (theatre purchaser), such assignment, however, shall not relieve exhibitor of his liability hereunder."

Without obtaining consent of the distributor the theatre owner sold his theatre to a man named Simpson. Under the terms of this contract the theatre seller assigned to Simpson the above mentioned film lease contract.

The distributor filed suit against the seller of the theatre to recover the contract price for the films which were not exhibited by Simpson. The seller of the theatre contended that he was not liable because he had assigned the film lease contract to Simpson and, also, that the distributor had failed to give four weeks' notice in writing of the date upon which each photoplay would be available, and that he had failed to ship or offer to deliver the films. Although the lower court held the seller of the theatre not liable on the contract, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"It is true that this sale was made without the consent of the apellant (distributor) having been obtained, and it is also true that Simpson (theatre purchaser) did not assume the obligations of appellee (theatre seller) to appellant, but, nevertheless, the appellee had not only transferred the theatre to Simpson but also had assigned the contract in controversy to him. This being true, the law would not require the doing of a vain and useless thing, such as provided in the contract, in giving such notice and making the tender provided for when the appellee (theatre seller) had by such sale placed it without his power to perform his contract."

Another important rule of the law is that a theatre owner cannot avoid liability on valid clauses in a contract, although certain of the contract clauses may have previously been held by a higher court to be invalid. This point of the law was clearly discussed in the recent case of Fox Film Corporation v. Buchanan (136 So. 197).

The facts of this case are that the owner of three theatres and the Fox Film Corporation entered into a contract by the terms of which the theatre owner obligated himself, among other things, to reproduce and exhibit in his theatres 35 Fox sound entertainment prints, 12 Fox Movietone and sound all-talking productions prints, and one Fox Movietone Follies print, at times agreed upon as set forth in the contract and at prices stipulated therein. The aggregate sum which the theatre owner agreed to pay the Fox Film Corporation for the pictures named in the contract amounted to $1,125. The theatre owner accepted one picture under the contract and paid the stipulated price therefor. He then sold his theatre. The purchaser of the same refused to accept and pay for the films contracted for by the seller.

The Fox Film Corporation filed suit against the seller of the theatre to recover damages and anticipated profits which would have been earned had the theatre seller retained possession of the theatre and completed the contract. The seller of the theatre defended the suit on the grounds that he was not obligated to fulfill the agreement because the eighteenth clause in the contract provided that in the event of disagreement the contracting parties will abide by any decision or award of the Board of Arbitration, and that such decision or award shall be enforceable in any court.

The contract involved in this case was on a standard form adopted by practically all of the motion picture producers and distributors of America and used by them in their dealings with theatre owners for the reproduction and exhibition of pictures of any and all kinds. In this contract there are 22 separate provisions which are considered valid, except the eighteenth clause, which was held invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States for the reason that the provision therein violates the Sherman anti-trust law.

It was contended by the seller of the theatre that since the eighteenth clause had been previously held invalid, he was not required to fulfill any part of the contract.

Notwithstanding this argument, the higher court held the seller of the theatre liable for failure to fulfill the obligations assumed in the other 21 clauses in the contract, and said:

"The uniform contract that has been adopted by the plaintiff and all other producers and distributors of motion pictures in the United States has been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be illegal in one of its provisions, the eighteenth, for the reason that this provision is violative of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law in that it is to that extent a contract in restraint of trade. . . . It has been expressly held that, where agreements in restraint of trade were unlawful in part, they were enforceable as to the parts that were not unlawful, and this holding runs back to the earliest authorities. . . . The elimination of the arbitration provision of this contract does not leave the plaintiff (distributor) free to refuse to furnish the pictures called for, not could the defendant (theatre owner) refuse either to take or pay for the same. The essence of this contract is that the plaintiff agreed to furnish certain pictures and the defendant promised to exhibit and pay for them. . . . Therefore. the parties are as free to resort to the courts for the enforcement of their rights thereunder as if the said illegal provision had never been incorporated therein."

Law of Forgery

IT IS WELL established law that a forged contract is invalid and its holder has no legal rights. Frequently, it is difficult to prove that a contract or other instrument actually is a forgery. Therefore, in order to sustain a conviction of forgery it is not necessary that the

MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

IV.—Construction and Material

By H. S. LEADER

Chair with inserted panel back and a box spring seat. The back is upholstered in jacquard velour, the seat in imitation leather.

THEATRE OWNERS, syndicates and independents, are beginning to appreciate the importance the theatre chair has assumed in recent years. From a necessary evil it has become a vital factor to success in entertainment. There are several reasons for this change. The most important influence is the higher standard on which the public bases its expectations. Since the war the general standard of living in this country has gone higher and higher. Everyone had or expected to have luxuries which a few years previous had been considered beyond reach. What was gratifying one year was not good enough the next. These changes in standards and attitudes have made the general public much more critical and sensitive to pleasant and beautiful surroundings. The economic condition of the last few years has only served to make the public expect more. The drop in commodity prices leads them to demand more for their admission price.

Another influence lending importance to the theatre chair is the greatly increased service required in recent years. Theatres are open for longer hours and the attendance per chair is much higher. This makes the life of the chair and the amount of maintenance required important from a cost standpoint.

During the past 15 years there has been a gradual upward trend in the quality of theatre seating. Each year a higher percentage of upholstered chairs is used with more durable, expensive and attractive covering materials employed in their manufacture. Some are highly decorative and form a very real part in the decorative scheme of the theatre. They do their part in making the patron feel that the owner has gone a step beyond necessity to provide comfortable seating and pleasant surroundings that the patron might enjoy the entertainment provided.

Chair with full-upholstered back and a spring edge seat. The back is upholstered in printed mohair, the seat in imitation leather.

As long as theatres were small and plain, and the chairs used were of the wooden seat and back variety, about the only damage that could occur was that they might become badly scratched. With more luxurious houses the character, style, and appearance of chairs is much more important and the cost of maintenance is higher, just in proportion to the refinements and luxuriousness of the type selected. A public that might be tolerant of scratched finish on wood seats and backs would show little charity for threadbare fabrics or worn or torn coverings even though the dilapidated upholstered chair might be the more comfortable.

Because these factors have made the chair such a vital part of this business of entertaining the public, it is important that theatre chairs be cared for in a manner that maintains as nearly as possible the original comfort and appearance.

In all fields it is generally recognized that the most important contribution to low maintenance costs is made through wise purchasing. To purchase wisely one should analyze what will be required of the product and how he can best select to meet these requirements. Probably the first part of a theatre chair which should receive consideration is the seat, since it plays a very great part in maintenance costs and in the comfort which should be so built into the chair as to remain there.

Theatre chair seats are generally classed as of five general types known as plywood, squab, box spring, spring edge, and deluxe spring edge.

The one outstanding advantage of the plywood seat is its low price. At the present time its field is almost entirely limited to school auditoriums and public halls. Theatre goers of today demand a higher standard of comfort than that found in an all plywood chair.

The squab seat is the first grade better than the plywood seat. It is next to the plywood seat in low cost, is more attractive in appearance and somewhat more comfortable. Its type incurs practically no strain on the upholstering material, and since there is little padding to break down it is probably one of the longest lived of the upholstered seats. Unfortunately, however, it is not sufficiently comfortable to meet the exactions of theatre goers.

The next step upward in the comfort of theatre seats is the box spring seat. This type is now quite generally used in small theatres throughout the country. It is particularly suitable for neighborhood houses

describing the 724-seat

THE GILLIOZ theatre in Monett, Mo., represents that kind of pride of proprietorship that always goes a bit beyond the obvious possibilities to realize a fine possession. The Gillioz cost $100,000. Monett has a population of 4,000. But M. E. Gillioz of Monett believes his fellow townsmen want that kind of theatre and will ultimately prove his investment a sound one.

People in Monett say the new Gillioz is the finest motion picture theatre in that part of Missouri. It was Mr. Gillioz' intention to win that kind of reaction, for he has some competition. If his people can look upon his house as being especially distinctive, he has met his competition more than half-way before he throws open his doors.

The Gillioz is designed throughout, exterior and interior, in Georgian Colonial architecture. The building is fireproof in construction and faces on the principal street, with decorative ticket booth between double entrance doors, which are sheltered overhead by an ornamental and illuminated marquee.

A large lobby, with vaulted ceilings, paneled and pilastered walls, concealed radiation, terrazzo floors, leads to the foyer. The foyer is 12x51 feet, with stairways at each end leading to the mezzanine floor. The floors are carpeted, and the walls and ceilings are finished in ornamental plaster.

The auditorium is 51x80 feet and seats 724 in luxuriously upholstered seats of generous spacing. One center, and two side aisles are provided, with cross-aisles at the center of the seating units, permitting of proper access to the several exit doors.

The stage is of good dimensions to permit the staging of vaudeville shows as well as presentations. Dressing rooms and storage space are provided in the basement beneath the stage, at the north end of the building.

Draped under the rim of the proscenium arch and down each side is a grand valance, a green silk velour, its undulating folds caught back with gold cords and tassels. The front curtains are of silk damask in copper tones. In sharp contrast are the second curtains of bright orange silk velour with borders of green appliqued in gold in heraldic design. The house draperies in mezzanine and foyer are festooned valances and full drapes of rust-colored silk damask. The drapes throughout the theatre were purchased at a cost of $3,500. The stage curtains are operated electrically. Back of the curtains is situated the picture screen and directly behind it is a portable arrangement for the speaker apparatus.

At the top of the mezzanine stairway a small space is utilized in providing a novel cozy nook consisting of a rust-colored love seat with wrought iron floor lamp, adjustable and of antique finish.

At the end of the hall is located the women's lounge and rest room with paneled walls, ornamental plaster cornice, concealed radiation, carpeted floors and generally Colonial appointments. Console mirrors are suspended above inlaid walnut top tables of solid walnut. Two large green davenport, one other table lamp, two floor lamps of wrought iron and antique finish, four big walnut upholstered chairs and a five-foot full-length mirror with bevelled edges complete the furnishings of the lounge with the exception of a revolving cigarette stand. The drapes in this room consist of peach chintz with glass curtains of gold marquisette.

Two complete lighting control units are in the projection room and backstage, where every light may be turned on or off or dimmed and the curtains on the stage controlled. Red, green and amber lights in the footlights may be dimmed or made to shine in any combination. The new type lamps in these comprise 100-watt bulbs, each incased in an individual reflector. A polished concave back of chromium nickel projects the beam through richly tinted glass.

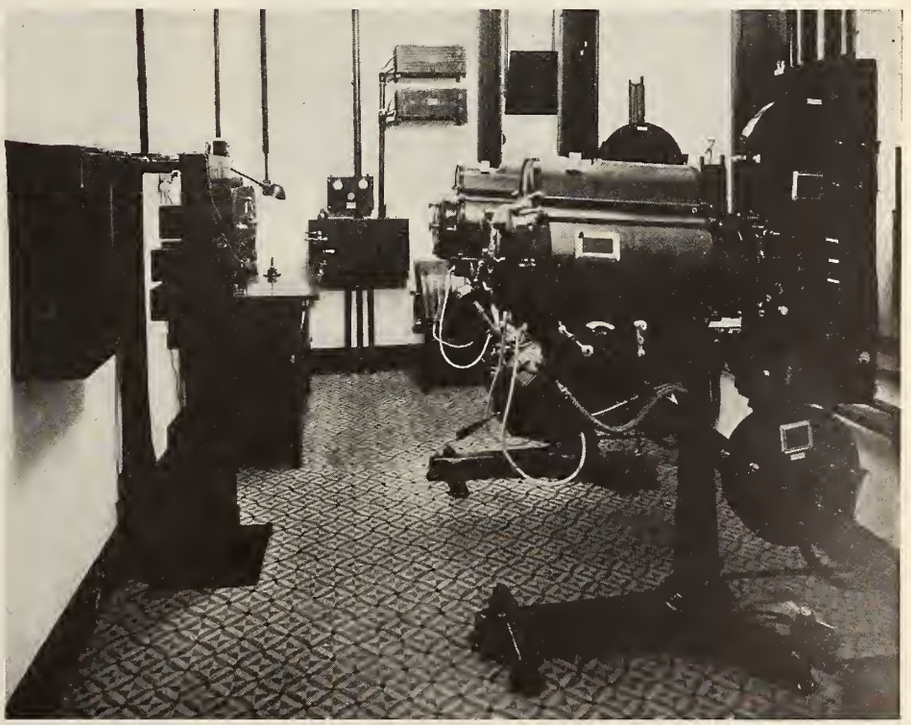
From the foyer the lights in the auditorium may be controlled from the panel board situated there, while all the passage lights in the balcony are controlled from the panel board near the manager's office.

The lighting fixtures were all designed expressly in harmony with the Georgian decorative scheme. Six crystal type fixtures provide the illumination for the auditorium, and one is suspended from the center of the foyer ceiling, each one ending with a bronze metal tassel to harmonize with the general color effect.

The building also contains two shops, which flank either side of the lobby.

The general interior color scheme of the theatre is of henna and copper tones.

The auditorium is equipped with a system of indirect heating and cooling, with humidifiers.



The acoustical treatment is confined to the rear and side walls of the auditorium. The panels are covered with an antique brocaded satin damask, which harmonizes with the elaborate decorative ornamental plaster and Colonial lighting fixtures. The sound equipment is RCA photophone.

The Gillioz was designed by Johnson & Maack, architects of St. Louis.

Mr. Gillioz is himself a contractor, and was therefore able to direct construction with an expert eye, to realize the most for his money through taking advantage of adequate, yet economical methods.

THEATRE IN SPOKANE

Simple masses, with flutings in the surface as the chief decorative relief, marks the building pictured at the top of the page. Construction is of steel, concrete and terra cotta. At left is shown the organ grille, which strikes the motif of the auditorium decorative scheme. Directly above is shown the illuminated "sunburst" at the proscenium.

PREPARING ORGAN SOLOS FOR THE CIRCUIT

expressing the point of view of the home office

By DAN PARKER

I PAUSE and look through my office window. Below me stretches Broadway, flanked by its myriad of theatres. The lights from the maze of marquees dance before me. My thoughts wander. In my mind's eye, I see countless marquees flashing. I note those of national circuit theatres. These are connected to a spot on Broadway—the home office—by some medium.

That's it! A medium—service. The word turns over in my mind. In every enterprise, the rendering of service is important, so it is in the department that provides feature material for solo organists. When a theatre is served, it inevitably serves that theatre's audience, and nowadays there is a high standard of entertainment to be lived up to.

My particular service is to organists—musical showmen catering to varied types of audiences, each using his or her own style. Yet they must be serviced. The details are therefore intricate.

My writer and myself discuss an idea for an organ presentation. (An "organ solo" does not mean enough.) The idea must appeal to audiences everywhere. The topic must be appreciated by all of our varied audiences. Then again, it must be flexible for different types of work. Religion, prohibition or other controversial subjects cannot enter into any organ presentation, for we endeavor to serve all. Music, a very important item is next. Songs, which the publishers are exploiting and which are appropriate, are selected. The writer now has his foundation.

When he returns with the finished product, a few minor changes are probably made, then it is ready for the okay. The presentation is then discussed with the general musical director. By him it is either rejected or accepted. If accepted, the work goes on.

While music for the parodies is being obtained, the lantern slide manufacturer and his artist are called in. The writer, the manufacturer, his artist and myself take infinite care in the next step. Each slide is gone over, cartoons are thought of and drawn. When the slide man has the proper information, he is off. In a day or so, I receive hand-painted cards. This gives me an idea of just what the slide will look like. These are okayed and the slides are delivered.

Dan Parker

Sufficient sets of slide, music and cue-sheets are made ready for the theatres. Now for the routing. Popular music is soon forgotten, therefore the presentations must be played very soon. Few presentations can be used after six or seven weeks. This being the case, the theatres are grouped for such a purpose, bearing in mind that the geographical location of each is of vital importance.

In most cases, these presentations have but a few hours to reach the theatre next on the route. However, strange as it may seem, they do. Music and cue-sheets reach each organist long before the slides. This gives each enough time to adapt the presentation to his own work. When one of the organists (in my case, RKO organists) receives the slides, he knows exactly what to expect.

But the work is not as yet completed. Although a new presentation is being prepared, my department manages to keep two or three weeks in advance of playing date.

RKO organists are allowed absolute freedom. The presentations may be used as a whole or only in part. Popular choruses are always left to the individual organist showman's discretion. Surely, he or she knows what his or her audience will sing. One presentation is supplied to each organist per week. Where there is a split-week policy, the organist is expected to supply his or her own presentation for one-half week. This, together with the fact that the organists may use only part of a regular presentation, tends to keep the minds of each in working order in case of any "break" in the service.

There is an important detail our office at RKO asks of each organist, with the exception of the regular work. Immediately at the termination of a playing-date, the organist forwards a report to the home office.

May I point out the value of such? Primarily, it enables me to obtain a sort of picture of the reaction, both of the audience and of the individual organist, to each of our presentations. Such reactions are of primary importance in the forming of future presentations. Secondly, the popular choruses used are asked for. This is not done for any censorship or "plugging."

Publishers of music have co-operated on this service to their fullest extent, and I feel it is no more than proper that I be able to supply them with what little information they may desire.

I understand that such information is of great importance to the organ department of any music publisher. My files are open for their inspection at any time. In spite of the fact that few have taken advantage of my offer, they are still welcome. Then again, remarks, suggestions, etc., are always welcome and more than appreciated. And many is the criticism received, which has aided me in bettering service.

In times like these the "service" takes on a new significance. A friend of mine dropped in the other afternoon. He had just come from a matinee. "The house was packing them in," he said. "You wouldn't know there was a depression, had you seen the business this theatre was doing." And then he said, "Depression must be a good time for show business."

My friend was right. I would put it this way: Show Business is good for the people in times of economic distress. It is "good for one's soul" to be lifted out of one's self through the magic of the theatre. Show business is rendering our people a real service in times like these. One vicarious hour in the theatre is a tonic.

REPAIRS MADE BY THE PROJECTIONIST

THEIR PRACTICAL EXTENT AND LIMITS

By AARON NADELL

MANY OF THOSE portions of the sound equipment that are customarily returned to their maker for adjustment can—with proper precautions—be repaired in the projection room. This is often easier and quicker, and nearly always less expensive.

However, such repair should not be undertaken except after careful study of each individual case. In some instances special apparatus will be necessary if proper results are to be secured; in others, projection room repair, although technically practicable, will be economically inadvisable because of the cost of the time involved. It is in the third very large group of instances that projection room repair will be found technically practical as well as economically advantageous.

Motors

Managers and projectionists are familiar with the basic necessities of motor maintenance and repair. In extreme cases it may be necessary to have the commutator turned down by the local machine shop. Badly worn bearings may or may not be replaceable locally—often they are. An open or short circuited winding should be inspected very carefully before any motor is returned to the factory, since the trouble may be easily accessible to local repair.

Motor Speed Controls

Speed control devices fall generally into three classes: the mechanical governor, the centrifugal contact and the electrical "control box." Trouble with the first is nearly always traceable to defective action of the friction shoe, while dirty or pitted contacts are possibly the most frequent source of difficulty with the second. Neither should be beyond projection room relief, in normal circumstances. Trouble in the electrical circuits of a "control box" is run down and treated like any trouble in a circuit.

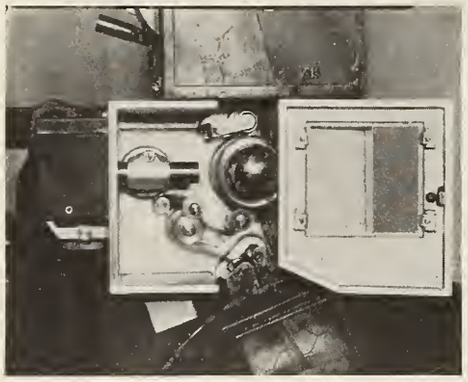
Electrical Speed Controls

The presence or absence of the proper current and voltage at any point of any electrical circuit can be determined by suitable meters. Meters—or headphones-and-battery—will reveal any suspected break in the wires, or any short-circuit. What is necessary, is that the person attempting to find any electrical trouble understand the circuits with which he is dealing and the functions of each separate part. He must possess and know how to read a circuit drawing of the apparatus in question, and he should have a very good idea, if not perfect knowledge, of what values of voltage and current are the proper values at every point.

With such knowledge and proper equipment (circuit drawings and meters, e. g.,) no "control box," amplifier or rectifier should ever be sent out of the projection room for repairs until every local effort has been exhausted. Very often it will be found that the trouble is no more than a loose connection or a grounded binding-post—something that can be repaired at really no cost at all. In other cases, some part—easy to replace, even if it cannot be repaired—may be at fault. Only rarely will the trouble be so extensive as to involve several separate parts of the apparatus.

As between making some minor repair to a loose or grounded connection, or repairing or replacing some small part; and shipping a heavy and bulky panel to its manufacturer for overhauling, the advantages would seem to lie entirely with projection room adjustment—with proper knowledge and equipment for testing. Without those aids, the time lost in running down the trouble may be more expensive than outside repairs. Without proper knowledge, local repairs may be inadequate to restore proper operation, or to provide sufficient safeguard against repeated trouble of the same nature.

A number of speed control circuits are now in common use. Two fundamentally different principles are employed, while a number of circuits are based upon the same principle but differ materially in detail. Where intimate and detailed knowledge of the operation of their own motor speed control is in the possession of the projection staff, or can be obtained from a service engineer, local repairs should certainly be attempted. Where such knowledge has not been secured, it will probably be most advisable to return a defective control cabinet to its maker for adjustment.



Much the same considerations apply to the projection room repair of amplifiers, rectifiers, chargers, or any equipment of more or less complex wiring. All rectifiers operate upon a common principle. The same is true of amplifiers. Details, in each instance, may vary enormously, and especially so in the case of amplifiers. Detailed acquaintance with local equipment is the only reasonable assurance that local repair will not take so long as to cost more than factory repairs. It is the only possible guarantee that local repair will be of safe and satisfactory quality.

Repair of the individual parts that commonly are used in amplifiers and rectifiers, as well as in motor speed control panels, will be reviewed later, under the heading of "amplifiers."

Drives

REPAIR OF THE drive portion of the sound equipment requires not so much electrical as mechanical competence. The details of drives vary far more widely than the details of any other portion of the sound equipment. Belt, chain and gear drives are employed, and sometimes combinations of all three. Friction clutches, "viscous damping" devices, "mechanical vibration filters," flexible couplings and a number of other rare or unusual mechanical contrivances, in almost every possible combination, are used in sound drives.

Mechanical troubles are nearly always easier to find than electrical troubles. Action and troubles of the apparatus are physically present to the senses of sight and touch. The mechanical background of the generic projectionist is (because of the requirements of the projector head) at least comparable to his electrical background. Mechanical repairs are nearly always within his competence.

Parts for mechanical repairs are commonly obtained to best advantage from the manufacturer of the drive assembly. Occasionally the local machine shop will be able to duplicate a simple part more reasonably, and very often more quickly. The manufacturer's part, however, will usually be less expensive, having been made in some quantity, and it should generally be more reliable. The advantage of the local machinist will be largely confined to the time factor.

Disc Producer

Projection room repair of the disc reproducer is in general inadvisable, and this is especially true of the oil-filled types. But in all types, a slight injury to the armature destroys the usefulness of the device. In general, the most economical practice would be to keep a spare reproducer on hand and to make no attempt at projection room repairs. When unavoidable, such repairs should be undertaken only with as much care as if the reproducer were a fine watch.

Lens Assemblies

Lens assemblies are of several types, each of which presents somewhat individual problems of trouble and repair.

Perhaps the most common trouble of these assemblies is loss of adjustment (owing to vibration of the projector), which results in reduced volume at higher frequencies. Adjustment may be lost in two ways: The lens barrel may move forward or backward, impairing the focus; or it may rotate slightly, in which case the beam of the exciting light will not be horizontal where it crosses the film, and both quality and volume will suffer.

A few lens assemblies are so mounted that they can be adjusted without special tools, but in most cases a separate jig made for the purpose will be required. For although lens adjustment can often be effected by hand, it is a time-consuming process, in which half a dozen or more attempts will fail before one that is even moderately successful has been achieved.

A volume indicator and a multiple-frequency reel are neccessary adjuncts to any attempt at readjusting the focus of slit assemblies. Successive adjustments are tested by means of the film and the indicator until one is reached that gives a satisfactory response curve. Time can be saved if a high-frequency loop is available. In that case only a single run need be made with the multiple-frequency reel. This will indicate the degree of high-frequency response necessary for a satisfactory adjustment. The high-frequency loop is then threaded and run continuously until the indicated response has been reached.

Lens assemblies are also subject to oil leakage—volume falls off sharply if even a small amount of oil finds its way inside this assembly. Dirt collecting on the inner portions of the lens tube also leads to loss of volume, and sometimes to noise as well. Many lens tubes can be disassembled in the projection room for cleaning. If they are handled carefully, no harm will result, provided the frequency film and the volume indicator are available for checking adjustment after they have been restored to service. But wherever instrumental check is not available, or careful handling is not assured, it will be safest and least expensive to have the tube readjusted by its maker.

Ordinary sound and the human ear will not replace the frequency-film and the indictator. The ear may report the sound as unsatisfactory, but it will not be sensitive to extremely small changes in quality, and therefore it will not be able to report whether any small step made in adjustment is a step in the right or in the wrong direction. For that purpose, the instrument is indispensable.

Faders and Switches

SWITCHES OF THE type in which contact points are carried upon long, slender prongs, occasionally cause trouble when the prongs become bent or otherwise lose proper tension. Such prongs can be readjusted by means of a suitable tool, the action of which can, perhaps, be best described by saying that this tool "combs out" the prongs, straightening them. In the absence of such a tool, adjusting prongs of this type is so difficult as to be sometimes nearly impossible, and almost always inadvisable.

Resistances of the type commonly used in those faders that function as volume controls, occasionally burn out. A burnt-out resistance of this kind is not amenable to projection room repair. It should be replaced, if a duplicate can be obtained; if not, the fader should be returned to its maker. Sometimes, however, it may be possible to secure a resistance of somewhat different design but of equivalent electrical value.

Contact studs of faders, or other volume controls, not infrequently cause trouble because of the amount of wear to which they are subjected. It may happen that the contact fingers, in touch with these studs, groove them in such fashion as to make perfect contact more and more difficult as time goes on. Occasionally it will be possible to have a local machine-shop make up a contact arm of somewhat different design, which will brush the stud over a larger area, and so prevent grooving. This is a simple precaution that may prolong the useful life of a fader or volume control to several times that of its normal expectancy.

Amplifiers

The electrical apparatus combined in an amplifier most commonly includes one or more transformers, tube sockets, condensers, reactances and resistances. Any of these constituent parts may, by breaking down, prevent the amplifier from functioning. In most cases of amplifier trouble not more than one or two of these parts will be found at fault; only on rare occasions, several of the parts; practically never, a majority of them. Replacing the part at fault is obviously less expensive and less troublesome than replacing the entire amplifier and returning it to its maker for repair.

When the trouble cannot be located quickly, it may prove desirable to replace the amplifier by another in order to maintain or restore the show. It is suggested, however, that the amplifier so replaced be retained in the projection room and repaired there; the replacement amplifier, being regarded, whenever possible, as in the nature of a loan, to be returned in a few hours.

The part at fault is found by the conventional methods of testing for electrical trouble already mentioned. These involve the use of appropriate meters and circuit drawings. In most cases, it will be found advantageous to replace, rather than to repair the faulty part, since such parts are only seldom very expensive. Occasionally the time involved in repairing such a part will be less than the cost of replacement, but this will prove the exception rather than the rule.

Replacement of the defective part does not end the requirements of projection room repair. On the contrary, the amplifier must be thoroughly inspected and tested to make certain that no ulterior fault exists, which may have caused the breakdown of the part in question, and which will therefore cause any replacement of that part to break down also.

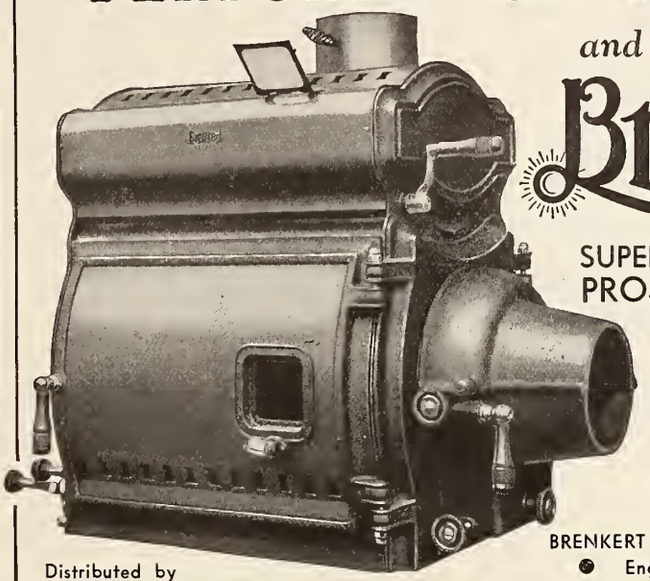
Resistances commonly consist of a number of turns of resistance wire, which may be exposed, or may be baked into an enamel plate or tube. In the former case, a burnt-out section can be jumped by any suitable conductor; in the case of the enamel-covered type, repair is impractical—and should not be attempted.

Inductances consist of a number of turns of insulated copper wire wound around a core of iron or iron alloy. Rewinding the coil is too expensive to be practical, so that repair is inadvisable unless the burnt-out section happens to be confined to the surface layer. Some inductances are buried in tar, or some similar compound, and repair of these is wholly inadvisable.

Both inductances and resistances occasionally are built in a number of sections, with individual contact points for each section. In some cases, not all of the sections will be in use. An unused section, if of equivalent electrical value, may sometimes be substituted for one which has burnt out.

The transformer is substantially a double inductance, subject to the same considerations with regard to repair.

Condensers may be of two types—"dry" and "electrolytic." The former, when punctured, will sometimes—not always—heal itself. It will do this if the insulating material between the plates is of such nature that it will melt, flow into the puncture and seal it. A condenser of this type should not be thrown away until it has been tested at working voltage to make sure it has not healed itself. It can sometimes be made to heal itself by repeated exposure to working voltage.



The electrolytic type can be repaired by being connected across a direct current line according to its marked polarity and at its rated voltage. The insulating film in the condenser will repair itself. An ammeter connected in series with the condenser will show current flowing until the repair is completed, after which current will no longer pass.

The Silent Sound Head

Silence until the music starts or an actor speaks—that's Syncrofilm. Syncrofilm will not produce a sound of any kind that is not recorded on the track.

This absence of background and outlaw noises makes the amazing clearness of Syncrofilm highly productive at the box office. People rather expect electric sound equipment to gurk sometimes—radio has accustomed them to it. The startling freedom from racket in Syncrofilm-equipped houses brings favorable cash comment from pleased repeat patrons.

Syncrofilm is guaranteed to satisfy you. Give it a good long trial. Watch receipts and listen to show after show. You'll see for yourself that the quality of performance stands up—keeps on bringing in profit. Start the trial today. Name your projection machine so we can quote properly.

In all the apparatus described above, one common form of trouble will be found to be an imperfect connection, not in the part itself, but at its terminal. This, of course, is easily repaired.

Sockets give trouble chiefly through failure to make firm contact with the tubes they carry. In most cases the tension of their contact prongs can be adjusted, and the prongs themselves cleaned and polished smooth, without any need for factory repairs. Occasionally spare prongs can be obtained, and replacing these will be found cheaper than replacing the entire socket. The difference in cost, however, will seldom be great enough to make such a course worth bothering with.

An amplifier, rectifier or motor speed control box will contain, in addition to the parts mentioned, wiring, switches and meters. Burnt-out or short-circuited wiring should be replaced by wire of the same size and of equally effective insulation. The replacing wire should always be run exactly the same way as the original wire. In some apparatus the exact position of the wiring is important for perfect results, and especially for preventing some types of amplifier or rectifier circuits from creating a hum in the sound.

Switches are easily replaced and are too inexpensive to justify repair. Meters are not subject to projection room repair. Voltmeters may be removed from the circuit, ammeters must be shorted. Signal lamps of appropriate rating make a roughly effective temporary substitute for meters.

Rejuvenating Tubes

TUBES OF THE thoriated tungsten type of filament can be "rejuvenated"—sometimes rejuvenated over and over again. The process consists in heating the filament, for about ten minutes, at roughly 20% more than the rated current, after which the tube is kept burning for several hours at normal rating. No plate or grid voltage is supplied to the tube during this process.

Equipment for rejuvenation consists of a socket of proper size and a source of filament current. In addition, a rheostat—or resistance-and-switch arrangement— is necessary in order to vary the filament supply between normal and 20% above normal Theatres using tubes of the type susceptible to this process should be able to cut their tube replacement bill by as much as 50%.

Speakers

The dynamic speaker consists principally of a field winding and a speech winding, the diaphragm of the speaker being attached to the latter. It is the speech winding that causes almost all the trouble to which speaker units are subject. It burns out, or it becomes separated from the diaphragm, and in either case the receiver will not function.

Storage Batteries

Storage batteries on occasion may be repaired by a local battery station, which will rent the theatre other batteries until its own have been restored to usefulness. It should only seldom be necessary to resort to that extreme. Storage batteries that show signs of weakening can be cared for in the theatre. The battery service station has no equipment other than a charger—the theatre also has a charger. If the batteries can have reasonable intervals of charging while they remain in the theatre, there is no occasion for sending them to an outside station for service.

As batteries age, it may become necessary to dump out the sediment which collects on the bottom. It may also be necessary to renew the electrolyte, but unless a great deal of it has been spilled in the process of taking hydrometer readings, this should not be the case. Either form of attention can be given in the theatre. It will not often be found advisable to replace dead cells in a three-cell battery. Replacement of the entire battery will usually be found to be less troublesome, and in the long run, to cost no more.

What WE HAVE DONE TO Help You Prosper

THAT you can always get what you want when you need it at National is secondary in importance to the well-known fact that you can buy it at the right price and on satisfactory terms. During the past year National has reduced prices on many of the necessities of theatre operation, in several instances as much as 40% over what previously had been the customary cost of such commodities. . . . . And National did not stop there in its determination to contribute substantially to the prosperity of the Exhibitor customer. It effected a reduction of 17% in the cost of financing time payment contracts for equipment buyers. Concentration of sales effort; adjustment of overhead expense; volume purchases — all these factors mean Better Value when you trade at National, where you can fill your equipment and supply needs entirely with full assurance of Fair Treatment, with either Cash or Credit as the consideration.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

FILM MUTILATION: WHEN WILL IT CEASE?

A RECENT LETTER from Leslie E. Jeffress, projectionist of the Crossett theatre in Crossett, Ark., a small town, will serve as well as any for my text. He begins:

"May I compliment you on your interesting and helpful articles in BETTER THEATRES and MOTION PICTURE HERALD? May I also ask you to try to find time and space to again say something about film mutilation?" Indeed he may!

"Since the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences," he continues, "has adopted the standard changeover cue system, and since the producers have adopted it into general use, I can see no reason why projectionists should find it necessary to mutilate the end of reels. Some of them, however, still do. The print we are now running had not been in use in more than five theatres before we received it. It carries a stand cue, but when inspected, it was found that all the reel ends had punch marks, scratch marks, ink spots and almost everything else that might be used as a changeover cue. As a matter of fact, the standard changeover marks were almost obliterated. It would seem that any man who could see at all should be able to detect the standard changeover marks. The man who cannot surely has no business in a projection room. If the men who are used to marking film to suit the pickup of their motors, would take a few minutes to figure out the number of feet of film that are run off before their projectors reach maximum speed, and then use the standard changeover system, projection would most certainly profit by it. It would be to the advantage of every projectionist putting on a sound show.

"We have R.C.A. sound system, and I find that the motors run one foot and eleven inches of film before they reach maximum speed. By threading my projectors correctly I find I can get the incoming reel on the screen in the first four frames by using the standard dots. I am sure if a small town projectionist can do this, the projectionist in a large theatre can do it as well.

"Put in fewer words, what I am trying to say is this: to make a perfect changeover we must have prints that have not been marked by punches, scratches or any other marks that will show glaringly on the screen.

"In closing, let me thank you for the many hours of interesting and instructive reading you have supplied us with. I hope you will continue the fight for better working conditions for the projectionists."

This letter is well written and well worded. It apparently comes from a live-wire projectionist. And let me say right here, there's a lot of real projectionists in small town theatres.

The big city projectionist usually labors under a heavy handicap. He feels he has reached to top in projection, and the natural inclination under that condition is to slow up. Rightly or wrongly, he just naturally feels that he knows about all there is to know about projection. Silly, of course, but a lot of them do acquire that idea after they have been in one of the big theatres for a while. The small town man, however, has no such feeling. Moreover, usually he cannot step to the telephone when something goes wrong and get help almost immediately. He has got to figure out everything for himself. If he fails to do so, he knows he will come pretty close to losing his job, and in small towns jobs are not too plentiful.

To get back to our subject, however, I sometimes think it is a waste of breath tryinng to tell such men as Jeffress has been talking about, anything at all. One might almost as well talk to a fence post. As Friend Jeffress said, the standard release print changeover system is here and in general use. The signals may be plainly seen by anyone who is not too infernally lazy to look for them. Of course, they are not quite so easy to see as a great big splotch of white light, or a black blob two feet or so in diameter on the screen, and Mr. Shiftless Lazyman does not like to be obliged to watch closely for them. He wants something that he just can't possibly miss seeing. The scratch marks and similar marks make it just a bit easier to him. He is not annoyed by being obliged to do anything more than look in the general direction of the screen to see them, and damage to film apparently means just exactly nothing at all to him.

That is very plain talk, but this persistent damage inflicted upon film and upon screen results, which is chargeable wholly and entirely to just plain laziness and shiflessness, is becoming a wee bit monotonous. It would seem that if the "machine operators" (that is precisely what those film butchers are) have not sufficient respect either for their profession or for the property entrusted to their care, the exchanges which own the film should at least compel them to respect their property.

This may very easily be done, provided all exchanges agree to do it, and further provided that there is real inspection of film upon its return to the exchange. All that is necessary is for a bill for damages to be sent to the exhibitor every time a film is found returned with changeover marks fixed in or upon it by the projectionist. Just a few bills collected for the damage done, and the trouble will unquestionably stop. Certainly, the industry owes it to itself to take some action to stop this disgustingly persistent, expensive curse of film vandalism.

THAT PROBLEM OF BUCKLED FILM

C. B. BALDWIN of Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I am writing regarding the problem a Florida projectionist had with buckled film. He says his projectors gave an in-and-out effect on the screen, whereas in another theatre in the same town the print went through in perfect focus. I am submitting the same solution as did the brother in Westboro, Mass. He had the same trouble and found that it was caused by unevenly adjusted tension shoes. The proper lining up of the gate rollers also play an important part. I have noticed that almost all present-day film damage is caused by too heavy gate and take-up tension. The brother in Warton, Texas, had trouble with film buckling during its first run, though it ran perfectly thereafter.

"I am myself using lamps that have these 'hot spots.' I find that on the first run of the day the film is cold, and the spot causes the center of each frame to expand before the edges have time to get warmed up. After the first run the entire film becomes warm, and there usually is no further trouble. How is that for solving the problem?

"I have derived plenty of knowledge from our department, every issue of which I enjoy. I have gone over and carefully studied your Bluebook six times, and obtain added knowledge each time. I am proud of my profession. The height of my ambition is to some day be a projectionist in a deluxe theatre where everything necessary is provided to enable one to do perfect work. I am heartily in favor of 2,000-foot reels. Here's hoping that some day the 'ham operator' will come to the realization of the fact that someone else has to use the prints after he has used them."

Well, now, I am not so certain but what there might be something to your explanation of film buckling the first time, and running all right thereafter. It seems reasonable, though I would hardly imagine that effect could occur rapidly enough to throw the picture out of focus. I would suppose the expansion would take place all right, but would only be effective after the film had passed beyond the spot. What do the rest of you men think about that?

SUGGESTING ILLUSTRATED SONGS

WHEN FIRST I began projecting pictures, some 27 years ago, a portion of every motion picture theatre program was made up of illustrated songs. As old timers well remember, songs were sung by singers hired for the purpose, the words being accompanied at appropriate intervals by stereopticol slides, usually colored. There usually were from 10 to 15 slides to each songs. For a long while audiences for the most part liked these songs. Then came the slump, and they all of a sudden were wiped completely off the motion picture map.

It occurs to me that this stunt might well be revived with the illustrative screen matter in motion pictures and with synchronized sound. It seems to me such a thing might be worked into a very charming addition to present programs.

Take "Silver Threads Among the Gold," for example. Sung by two elderly people having really good voices, that song among appropriate surroundings, in my opinion, would bring "down the house."

There are almost numberless old songs which would work out exceeding well with motion and sound. "My Merry Oldsmobile," "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," "Whip-Poor-Will's Song," "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," "In the Gloaming," "Juanita," "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," "The Old Oaken Bucket" and "Cricket on the Hearth" are just a few selections combed from memory.

Incidentally, if such a thing should ever be done with "Silver Threads Among the Gold," I would like to know of it in advance. There are really four verses to that song, though very few know of it. The last two are even more beautiful than the two generally known. I would be glad to supply them to any one contemplating such a stunt.

I've Done My Best

When the day is done and the night shades fall
And mind and body can rest,
I can look in the mirror and honestly say,
"Old boy, you've done your best."

I am not renowned or known to fame;
To millions I do not exist,
But little care I for the glory crown
When I know I've done my best.

At the end of day my labors cease,
The morrow I'll meet with zest;
Through the night my mind will be at peace—
For I know I've done my best.

And so the workers of life move on,
Many sad, while others jest;
But to me comes deep contentment when
I know I've done my best.

MAGNETIZING BY INDUCTION

IN A RECENT letter, Henry Wentworth of San Antonio, Texas, says, "I have been told it is possible to magnetize a piece of iron by holding it near a permanent magnet, but not in contact therewith. Will you be kind enough to tell me whether or not this is true, and if it is, explain how it is done? I cannot understand how it is possible to magnetize anything without actual metallic contact."

Yes, it can be done. Many a good watch of the older types has been ruined by being too near an electric generator. If you get an ordinary horseshoe magnet and hold a small nail of soft iron within from one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch from one of the poles, and touch a small iron tack or some iron filings to its lower end, you will find there will be adhesion of the bits of the filings, or of the tack. Magnetism has been accomplished by induction. You have held the end of the nail within the magnetic field of the permanent magnet and thus have set up an inductive effect. When you remove the nail from the magnetic field, it will no longer be magnetized.

THE ENGLISH PROJECTION GUILD

I AM IN receipt of a statement issued by the Guild of Kinema Projectionists and Technicians, Ltd., which has its general offices at 23 Rose Street, Long Acre, W.C.2, London, England. The Guild Council holds its meetings fortnightly, and a general meeting every first Sunday in the month, unless "otherwise notified." Its chief executive officer is S. T. Perry.

According to our standards, this organization is very similar to our American Projection Society, in that it makes no attempt to govern wage scales, working conditions, etc. It is, I understand, purely an organization for education, and as such is, of course, highly commendable.

Here in the United States and Canada we have a powerful labor organization which has done a very great deal for the improvement of projection by bringing about good working conditions and a higher wage scale, all of which operates, indirectly but nevertheless powerfully, to improve projection results.

I have often said and I say again, that brains and real ability are ordinarily not procurable at a low price, or if they be so procured, there is not the incentive to do anything more than is absolutely necessary to avoid being discharged, and brains and real ability well applied are absolutely essential in the projection room. A low-paid man or a man working under poor conditions feels no particular alarm over losing his job, hence he is inclined to be careless and to get by with the smallest possible amount of labor. A well paid man is not anxious to lose his job. He may not be able to get another as good.

For this reason I have always held that adequate wages and good working conditions are vitally necessary if we are to expect consistently high class work in projection.

The Projectionists Guild, in conjunction with the Renters Sound Projection Department (renters correspond to our film exchanges), issues an efficiency certificate to qualified projectionists.

The Guild has branches in Cardiff, Liverpool, Leeds and Bradford. The qualifications for membership are four years or more, either as chief or second projectionist, for "full" or "graduate" membership, respectively. Only chiefs and seconds are eligible. Technicians serving in the industry may apply for "technician" membership. The entrance fee is approximately $5. The same amount is paid each year as dues.

A WORD ABOUT AUGUSTUS DINA

THERE ARE certain men connected with the motion picture industry who have done, and are doing, very wonderful work for which, as it happens, they receive no public credit. One of these men is Augusto Dina, who was for many years the designing engineer for the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex projector in the old days. Upon the combination of the Powers and Precision companies, he became designing engineer for the International Projector Corporation.

Dina has just completed a new portable projector, which I have already described in these columns. Some time ago Dina started on an attempt to run one of these portables to destruction. The projector has already passed the 3,000,000-feet-point of

My compliments to Augustus Dina. He has done much other work of excellence for his company, but were that projector the only thing, it would be a monument to his value as a designer of motion picture projection equipment.

A NEW TYPE PROJECTION LAMP

A NEW high intensity arc lamp, which has already been installed in two New York theatres, has been developed by Hall & Connolly. I have talked with the men in the Paramount theatre, where it is now on test, and they were unanimous in their opinion that it was a splendid piece of apparatus. This is what projectionists will get a big kick out of: When you get ready to start projecting, you simply close the main switch, and that is that! The lamp instantly strikes the arc; regulates itself, and as I will personally testify, provides a light source which does not wobble. It is almost as steady as the proberbial rock.

Two views of the new Hall & Connolly high intensity arc lamp. In the view of the lamphouse above will be noted the arrangement of the condensers for moving them in any direction. At the right is shown the whole assembly exposed, with the negative carbon just appearing at the left.

At the factory I examined first of all the base casting of the lamp, one of the prettiest pieces of cast iron it has been my fortune, up to date, to examine. This casting, which is approximately 22 inches long, and about 5 inches square, at its largest vent, carries the entire lamp assembly, except one thing which I shall describe later. The lamphouse, by comparison with those of years ago, looks like an apartment house minus the windows. Its top is a sort of square cone in shape, to the top of which is attached a 6-inch ventilating pipe equipped with a damper. The condenser is a Bausch and Lomb cinephor, consisting of a collector lens, 6 inches, and a converging lens 7½ inches in diameter. The dowser is cast iron, deeply ribbed to prevent warping. A heat resisting baffle plate is mounted on the arc side. The lamp, being, as I have said, mounted in a fixed position, provision has been made to alter the position of the condensers, either up, down, sidewise or backward and forward, by means of conveniently placed knurled knobs located on the front of the lamphouse.

The lamp itself is mounted in a fixed position, except for the fact that the rear end of the lamphouse and lamp casting may be pulled back as far as desired, as one unit, the rear plate of the lamp being also the cover plate for the rear end or the lamphouse.

This assembly may be moved back and forth as desired when one wishes to examine, adjust or clean it, or the whole thing may be pulled out and set on a suitable bench or on the floor at the rear of the projector.

The negative carbon is held in a vise-like clamp about 2 inches in length. The carbon is quickly released by using either a screw driver or a wrench. This clamp slides up and down through the range of the carbon feed, the possible movement totaling about 4½ inches.

The positive carbon clamp is a very clever piece of work. It is cone-shaped at its front end, and has a 4-slotted head resting in a steel cone. The carbon rotating mechanism is carried by 10 roller bearings about 11/16th of an inch in length, set in bronze. Back of this bronze roller carriage is a very substantial steel gear with a ⅜-inch face. This gear meshes with the feeding mechanism. Back of this is a steel nut 2½ inches in diameter, in the face of which are eight deep slots set equi-distant apart. The face of this nut is 7/16ths of an inch wide. When the projectionist wishes to clamp the positive carbon, he inserts the carbon and tightens the nut with any convenient steel-pointed tool, as for example, a screw-driver. So positive is the action of this clutch that it is only necessary that ⅛-inch of the carbon be inserted to insure a perfect grip, thus providing means for avoiding waste of carbon.

This assembly carries no current. It is mounted on two long steel tubes, each three-fourths of an inch in diameter. The above described clamp may be quickly pulled backward or forward a total of 15¼ inches, which is the length of the carbon it will feed at one grip. The lamp is made to accommodate 22-inch carbons, up to any diameter used for high intensity projection.

The carbon clamp may be instantly moved forward or backward merely by manipulating a releasing lever, which holds it in engagement with the long positive feed worm. The carbon may be used up to within 3½ inches of its total length.

The positive contacts are of electrolic copper, are of suitable dimensions, and being deeply ribbed at the top have very large heat radiating surfaces. The total electrical contact with the positive carbon is twice a half-inch on each side, or a total of two inches.

Another improvement is that the front end of the carbon does not rest upon any part of the lamp casting. Instead, it is carried by a small, semi-circular carrier of nickel cast iron, which rests in the lamp casting, costs very little and may be quickly removed and replaced with a new one. The current carrying contact is held against the carbon by a long, powerful double spring, which is quite thoroughly protected from the heat of the arc.

The baffle plate arrangement consists of three ascoloy plates, each quickly and easily removable.

The cable and lugs are at the rear, far removed from the arc, at least a distance of 18 inches. The current is carried by copper bus-bars from cable to positive carbon clamp lugs. The positive one of which runs through a striking magnet and passes forward, making a turn that carries the full load current and has the effect of neutralizing stray magnetic fields around the arc.

And now for the striking magnet. At the left real corner floor level of the lamphouse is the motor which drives the carbon feeding mechanism. Also on the rear end of its shaft is a fan, which serves to supply the lamphouse with ventilation. Just in front of this, also at approximately floor level, is a cylindrically shaped housing containing a powerful electro-magnet, or "solenoid," which operates the arc striking mechanism. Either of two methods may be employed in striking the arc.

At the end of a run the projectionist may bring the negative carbon up into contact with the positive crater, leaving it thus, under which condition, when the main switch is closed, the aforesaid solenoid will operate a mechanism that will shove the negative carbon down and away, thus striking the arc automatically and without any act upon the part of the projectionist, except for closing the main switch. The automatic action will set the arc at exactly proper length, where it will be thereafter kept by the carbon feeding mechanism.

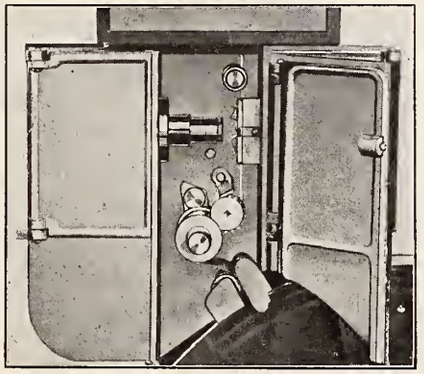
If preferred, the projectionist may leave the carbons apart, close the main switch and bring them together in the usual way, whereupon the solenoid will act as above set forth. It is a very clever arrangement and seemingly not likely to get out of order.



And now we come to something new. The arc may be controlled automatically in two different ways but primarily it is intended that it be done by means of a thermostat. That is to say, it is intended that the arc be controlled by its own light. Carried by a sturdy standard attached to the lamphouse floor is a small lens located about four inches to the left of the positive carbon tip and immediately opposite the edge of the crater rim. Just back of this lens is a reflector, so angled that the light reaching it through the lens is reflected at right angles backward to a thermostat located in a small housing, in the front side of which is a small opening to admit the light ray. The lens picks up a side view of the positive carbon crater and passes it through to the mirror or reflector, which shoots it back at right-angles through the aforesaid opening a distance of approximately 12 inches, to the thermostat, and because the distance from crater to lens is about four inches and the distance from mirror to thermostat about 12 inches, and because the reflection bends the beam at right angles, the effect is that as the crater burns away, the distance it recedes from the condenser is increased three times at the thermostat.

In other words, if the crater burns away a distance of, say, one sixty-fourth of an inch, the image at the thermostat would move sidewise three sixty-fourths of an inch, which of course has the effect of starting the thermostat working, with only a very slight alteration in crater position. This crater image, of course, is always moving, because the crater is constantly burning away, and as the crater burns away, the image falls nearer and nearer in upon the thermostat, until a certain set of electrical contacts are brought together, which cuts out resistance in the motor circuit and speeds up the motor, until the crater is again brought forward to its normal position, whereupon the contacts open again and the motor resumes its normal rate of speed. This constitutes what may be termed arc-control by means of automatic focusing. It is all very unique, very simple and seemingly very substantial.

In case one for any reason desires to do so, the carbons may be controlled in the usual way by increasing or decreasing the motor speed by means of a potentiometer knob on the back wall of the lamp house.

In order that the arc length be maintained at the desired value, the speed of the feed of the negative carbon may be regulated entirely independently of the positive feed and rotation. This is done by merely moving a small lever carried on a graduated scale in a position convenient to the projectionist. This feed regulation may be varied in small amounts from 25% below the normal feed, to 25% above normal feed.

All the bearings of the lamp are made of self-lubricating bushings. The gears are enclosed. THE RANGE OF AUDIBLE SOUND

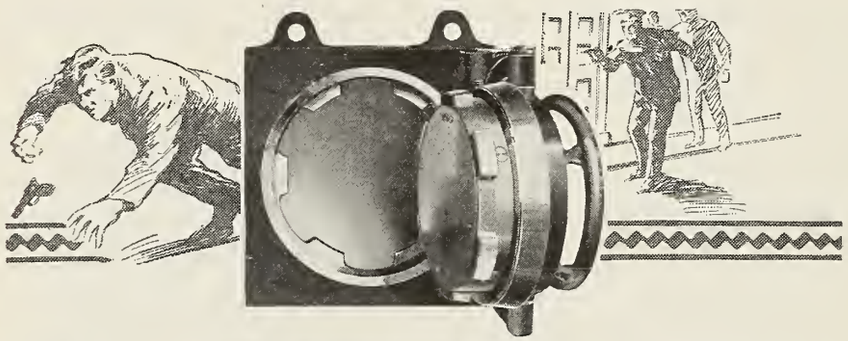
AT A RECENT meeting of the New York branch of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, I took occasion to ask H. A. Frederick, transmission instruments director of the Bell Laboratories, a question concerning the range of frequencies in music which are audible to the human ear. I understood Mr. Frederick's answer to indicate that the range of frequencies audible to the human ear is not definitely known, and later I printed some comments on this matter. Now before me lies a letter from Mr. Frederick that sets this whole matter forth very clearly, simply and understandably. He says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have just head your account of the recent meeting of the New York section of the S.M.P.E. I am enclosing a reprint of an article by Mr. Snow, and another of an article by Messrs. Sivian, Dunn and White, which I think may go some ways in answering your question.

"There are, of course, two classical definitions of 'sound.' In one it is defined as 'a wave motion in an elastic material medium. In the other definition, it is defined as 'also the sensation produced through the ear by a wave motion as defined above.'

"When we speak of the sounds present in music, I think we refer, tacitly or otherwise, to the latter definition. If this is the case, either the frequencies present in music are those which one can hear and will differ depending on whom 'one' happens to be. I am quite sure that I can hear frequencies in music from about 30 cycles to about 14,000. I am quite sure some people can hear frequencies from perhaps 20 cycles to 20,000 cycles.



"As people grow older, their audiogram usually shows a progressive loss in the sensitivity of the ear to the higher frequencies, so that their upper limit falls lower and lower. In addition, even in a person who can hear up to 20,000 cycles, their ears are much less sensitive to that frequency than to frequencies between 1,000 and 4,000 cycles, and require a much more intense sound in order for the sound to be heard; that is, even though weak sounds can be heard by such a person in the lower frequency range, only very powerful sounds can be heard at very high frequencies.

"If we were to attempt to define the frequencies in music on the basis of the first definition above given, I fear we would find that the result would bear little or no relation to anything which we could recognize in our musical experience in listening to such sounds.

"I believe a simple answer can hardly be given to your question as to what frequencies are present in music. The reason is not so much that we do not know what frequencies are present, as that a careful, specific and detailed definition as to just what is meant must first be given before any answer can take on significance."

I take occasion to thank Mr. Frederick for his very lucid and careful explanation. I do not think, however, that I did really ask what frequencies are present in music, but instead, what audible frequencies are present. The question I intended to, and believe did, ask is this: "What is the highest, and what is the lowest frequency that is audible to the human ear," and this Mr. Frederick has answered in very understandable fashion.

It seems that, as appears reasonable, this depends very largely upon what might be termed individual hearing capacity. The lowest known audible sound limit, perhaps is 20 cycles, and the highest 20,000 cycles. In other words, so far as we at present know, all sound below 20 cycles and above 20,000 cycles is inaudible to the human ear. I present this to those many who have

GUIDE ADJUSTMENT SEEMS INDICATED

S. F. DARTMANN of Lawrenceville, La., is having trouble which he describes as follows:

"My sound machinery has been working just fine until last week. Last Tuesday evening I for the first time noticed a sort of humming sound. It has gradually got worse until now it is pretty bad. It seems to be a rather shrill sound.

"This is only a small town. We have no service engineer, and I don't know anyone else to apply to except you. I have your Bluebooks and can't find this trouble mentioned. The manager said write to you, and if you can tell us what is wrong, we will pay you."

This inquiry fits into the department, hence there is no charge (though those who want immediate answers should send a stamped, self-addressed envelope).

From your description I think your sound track is not centered over the sound aperture. If it is not, the remedy is to adjust the guides which hold the film in position laterally as it passes through the sound gate. This is easily done, though I can't tell you exactly how in your case, because you have not told me what make of sound equipment you have. Anyhow, just loosen the guides and alter their position laterally (sidewise) slightly and try the sound. If it is louder you have moved the guides the wrong way. Move them a bit at a time until the objectionable sound disappears, then tighten the guides in place.

What is happening is that either the edges of the picture frames, or the edges of the sprocket holes are a bit out over the sound aperture.

S. M. P. E. PAPERS? WELL, QUITE A FEW

JOHN L. DANIELS of Chicago, asks, "Will you tell us just what papers you have prepared and read before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. I am under the impression you have covered projection matters pretty thoroughly before that body. In conversation with a Chicago projectionist recently he made the assertion that you had not read any papers before that body. I don't believe that, but would like to know."

Whether I have "covered the subject of projection" can be answered with an emphatic no, because no one individual could possibly do that. Examination of the published S.M.P.E. papers shows that I have prepared and read before that society a total of 19 papers, as follows:

"Theoretical versus Practical as Applied to Standardization and Some of the Things to Be Considered as Proper Subjects for Standardization," April, 1918; "The Projection Room and Its Requirements," November, 1919; "Some Phases of the Optical System of the Projector," April, 1919; "The Various Effects of Over-speeding Projection," May, 1920; "Need for Improvement in Present Practice as Regards Film Reels," October, 1921; "Projection and Its Importance to the Industry," May, 1922; "Effect of Projection Distance and Projection Angle upon the Screen Image," October, 1923; "Importance of Synchronizing Projection and Camera Speeds," October, 1923; "Difficulties Encountered in the Attempt to Standardize Theatre Screen Illumination," May, 1924; "The Projection Room Expense Account," September, 1924; "What Happened in the Beginning," May, 1925; "Importance of the Village Theatre," October, 1925; "The Useful Life of Film," September, 1926; "The Supervisor of Projection," February, 1927; "Some Faults Demanding Attention," July, 1927; "Why Expert Knowledge and High Grade Intelligence is Essential in the Theatre Projection Room," September, 1927; "The Importance of Good Projection to the Producer," April, 1928; "The Effect of Sound Synchronization Upon Projection," September, 1928; "Need for Improvement in Projection Equipment and Maintainance," May, 1929.

That completes the total of 19 papers. Only three men have equaled my paper production record—C. Francis Jenkins, with a total of 22 papers; J. I. Crabtree 28 papers; and Loyd A. Jones, 22 papers. C. E. Ives comes next with a total of 10 papers published.

ON THE STANDARD RELEASE PRINT

ELMER E. TINKHAM, projectionist of the Bijou theatre in Pittsfield, Me., writes, "I notice in BETTER THEATRES you ask that we set forth faults to be found with the Standard Release Print. It does seem too bad now that we have such a good thing as the Standard Release Print, it cannot be kept in good condition.

"Personally I believe the blame lies both with projectionists and producers. The chief fault I find is the absence of the cue marks on alternating reels, brought about by the doubling-up process. I cannot kick about the doubling up, though, as I do it myself, though only when the cue marks are missing. If I receive a print in which the cue marks are okay, I have enough respect for that print to refuse to double.

"Paramount exchanges are certainly due a lot of credit because of the manner in which their prints are kept up. That is to say, at least our Maine exchanges keep them in excellent condition. Since the arrival of the Standard Release Print I have not doubled up either a Paramount feature or a comedy. The prints received always have the leaders and trailers, also the cue marks are never missing.

The only trouble I find with Paramount prints is the splicing in of leader with frame lines across the sound track. It is bad enough to have a frame line across the track, but when you get that little triangle also, and project sometimes as many as 15 frames of this leader, it sounds like—er—well, a machine gun. I have written the exchange about this without result. It seems to me it would be just as easy to put the leader on right as wrong, though in this I may be in error. When I receive a print in this condition, the leader is cut off and sent back to the exchange attached to the reel band.

"And now back to the Standard Release Print. As Friend McWay says, in doubling-up, the leaders are cut and respliced, thus destroying as least a couple of frames. I have received prints with only five or six feet of leader. It seems to me that if Paramount can keep these prints in good condition, the others ought to be able to do the same. Making shipments on 2,000-foot reels would help. Most projectionists double-up films, for which they cannot be much blamed, especially if they are working alone. I believe the next step in the maintainence of the Standard Release Print is, as you say, for the producers to release their product on 2,000-foot reels.

"I am working in the only theatre in a town of about 1,500 population, with a fair rural district to draw from. The nearest theatre is seven miles away, at Newport. Waterville is the nearest city, 22 miles away. We have two performances each night, six nights a week, with matinees on Monday, Wednesday and Saturdays."

A most interesting letter and one I would like to comment on at length, but space will only permit me to say that after examining the sample of leader Tinkham sent me, I cannot compliment the intelligence of the person who attached it. The leader itself is all right, but it is attached upside down. Just remove that leader and attach it the-other-end-to and it will be quite all right. As it is, however, it would certainly set up an ear-splitting racket if projected.

I certainly agree with Friend Tinkham that there is no earthly reason why the other exchanges cannot send films to theatres in just as good a condition as Paramount does. Unfortunately, however, not all of them do. Paramount is indeed entitled to the hearty thanks and appreciation of every projectionist because of the fact that they do keep their prints in good condition. Tinkham is by no manner of means the only projectionist who has made note of that fact. Also, he is not the only one who treats Paramount films with respect, because Paramount shows respect for projection and projectionists. Turn about is fair play.

A CASE OF FLUTTERING SOUND

FROM ST. LOUIS comes this letter: "Dear Richardson, four of us are joining in asking your advice. Please do not publish our names, though, for we would get 'razzed.' Here is the dirty work: Last week we had a production in which, every once in a while, in three of the reels, there would be a rather high-pitched fluttering sound lasting from a short time to as much as a minute. It did not sound much like the engine of an airplane, but nearer that than anything else we can think of. In the three reels this happened seven times, every time they were used. All the other reels were okay. They were Reels 2, 4 and 5.

"We have examined the equipment but have been unable to find anything wrong. We could call in the service engineer, but he would probably give us a call-down for not finding it ourselves. Can you help us, Old Timer?"

Your trouble is, I believe, very simple. It is, unless I am in error, due entirely to faulty printing of the film. Either the picture edges (frame edges) or the sprocket hole edges are extending into the sound track at certain points. The fact that the other reels and other productions run perfectly is conclusive evidence that the sound gate film guides are all right.

Several cases of this sort of faulty printing have been reported to this department, though this is the first time it has been said to occur so many times in one production. The cases are rare, however. Just what causes such an error I have been unable to ascertain, though I have written three producers concerning it. Each has claimed that no such fault ever appeared in any of his prints—dear me, no!

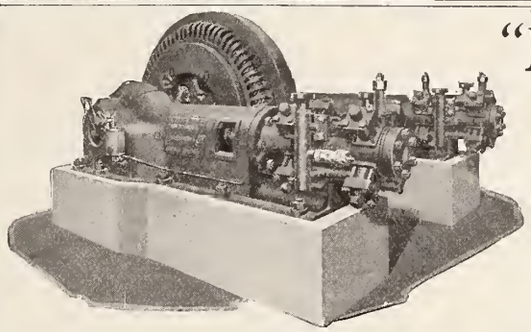
Equipment News and Comment

NEW SOUND HEADS

● The theatre sound equipment field has been entered by the Le Roy Sound Equipment Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., with sound heads designed for Simplex and Powers standard, and Holmes portable, projectors.

The case is made entirely of aluminum. The film rollers are ball bearing and designed for guiding the film against the front edge guide. The front edge guide can be adjusted for wear. The film sprocket guide roller locks in an out-of-the-way position to facilitate threading.

The UX base type of photoelectric cell is employed. The exciter lamp is mounted for simple adjustment. There are no contact springs in the exciter lamp circuit. The circuit is brought directly to the contact pin in the lamp socket. The sound head door opens to the right instead of the left, and a glass window in the door allows vision of the sound head interior, which is illuminated by the exciter lamp.



A balanced fly-wheel is mounted on an extra-large, steel shaft, which carries the sound head film sprocket. The sprocket shaft runs in long bronze bearings. The drive belts are round, of the endless woven type.

For the Holmes equipment, there is no changing of doors or magazine when installing the head on the projector. The film is drawn through the sound head by means of a sprocket, not depending on the rewind.

ON CONVERTERS

● In a letter from S. H. Martin, president of the Northwestern Electric Company, response is made to the general trend of the statements of Irving Samuels, president of the Automatic Devices Company, as published in these columns in the issue of December 19. "Since Mr. Samuels takes a position in favor of motor-generator sets," writes Mr. Martin, "I wish to answer his objections and bring out points in favor of the converter." Inasmuch as there is nothing more instructive as expression of varied points of view, Mr. Martin's opinions are herewith welcomed. He says:

"A converter is highly efficient for the multiple operation of arc lamps and will actually save its own cost over any motor-generator operating projection lamps in this way. Mr. Samuel's statement that the converter's efficiency is only 6% higher,

In 1917 Balaban & Katz showed the way by being the first theatre owners to adopt air cooling and conditioning for the comfort and enjoyment of their movie patrons during the summer season.

They contracted with the Wittenmeier Machinery Company of Chicago for cooling plants for their Riviera and Central Park theatres. These were the first theatres on record where mechanical refrigeration was used to provide a cool, cheerful and invigorating inside atmosphere.

Fifteen years later Balaban and Katz still select Wittenmeier equipment (250 tons) for their latest de luxe Chicago theatre unit, the Southtown. There's a reason! Wittenmeier design and patents on air cooling and conditioning plants cover unique applications and offer you worth while savings in first cost, operating cost and improved air conditions.

while it might be true of a very large converter, it is not true for capacities used in projection work, where the smaller sizes will show 10% higher efficiency at full load; and, since the load consists of only one lamp most of the time, the comparisons at one-half to two-thhirds load are so much in favor of the converter that we guarantee an average saving of 10% on sizes commonly used.

"The inherent characteristics of converter to come, in step, either polarity does not make it an 'unstable piece of apparatus' when the polarity can be corrected by simply pushing a button or throwing over a switch. It takes only five seconds to bring our converter into step, and allowing five more for correcting polarity, where is the motor-generator set that can be started and d c. voltage adjusted to proper point in ten seconds?

"While it is true that the d.c. voltage on a converter follows the a.c. variations, it has never been a handicap for the reason that the power companies regulate their line voltage within close limits and will gladly correct any serious line drop when called to their attention. Projection has always been good in the downtown direct current districts of large cities where the current is supplied through converters. The line drop has not bothered in either case, and the automatic arc feed has made the small variations unnoticeable. The converter has the advantage of a fixed voltage, hot or cold, whereas a generator automatically drops its voltage while warming up necessitating adjustments of the voltage during this period."

FILM SCALES

● A scale to show at a glance the approximate footage and length of time necessary to project the regular show and trailers, has been brought out by King Cole's Entertainment Service, Inc., of New York. The scale has a small slide which rests upon the rim of the reel, while the scale itself is pushed down until contact is made with the film. The reading at the point of the slot on the slide gives the approximate footage and the running time at 90 feet per minute.

SHIPPING SCREENS

● Some extremely useful information of quite surprising nature came the other day from the Beaded Screen Corporation of New York, and it is herewith passed along—particularly because it seems to represent real investigation in an effort to be of utmost service to the purchaser of screens. Here 'tis:

"'Ship fast freight'. As far as we can ascertain, there are only two railroad lines that actually handle fast freight shipments, and then only over their own lines. It is a notorious fact that there is little if any difference in the time required for delivery between fast freight and ordinary freight.

"'Ship via ( ) Forwarding Company'. A shipment made this way must be delivered by us to New York City for which a charge varying from one to three dollars is made. Except where the consignee has personal contact with the suggested forwarding company, this method of shipment does not expedite delivery.

"'Ship freight'. Freight is the slowest of all methods of shipment. It is impossible to determine the length of time a freight shipment will take as the variation in time runs from one to two weeks.

"'Ship by boat'. Goods shipped by boat, unless packed for export, are liable to varying conditions of moisture and dryness. It is the riskiest of all methods of transportation for an article as fragile and delicate as a sound screen.

"Comparative Costs. We have shipped thousands of screens all over the world, and know from experience the safest, quickest and most economical method of shipment.

"The freight tariff for motion picture screens is double first class freight rate. We must deliver from our factory to the freight yard at this end. Then there is the cost of delivery from the freight yard to your door at your end. We find that these trucking expenses at our end and at your end run from $2.00 for a 9x12 screen to $4.50 for an 18x24 screen.

"We have invariably found that the express rate for door to door delivery is less than the combined freight and trucking cost. The time of delivery is certain in the case of express. Within a radius of 300 miles from this factory, express delivery is made within thirty hours from the time of shipment. To all other points, the time required for transit is about one day longer than the time required for passenger transportation to the given destination.

"An average size screen, shipped by express, will cost approximately $2 for door to door delivery within the 300-mile zone. Outside of that zone, the cost averages 75c per 100 miles."

CANE ACOUSTIC TILE

● A cane fibre type of acoustic tile has been developed by The Celotex Company, manufacturers of Acousti-Celotex, of Chicago. This tile is made from felted cane fibres and is perforated with 441 holes per square foot.

The U. S. Bureau of Standards gives the sound absorption coefficients for the three classes available, as .08, .15 and .18 for 128 frequencies; .18, .24, and .33 for 256 frequencies; .48, .62 and .84 for 512 frequencies, these indices becoming more equal until they reach .81, .74 and .57 for 4,096 frequencies—reversing the order noted for the smaller number of frequencies. The tile is classed according to thickness as single, double and triple.

BY WAY OF NEWS

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WILL YOU be kind enough to give me an answer to my question in the next issue of BETTER THEATRES?

I want to re-seat my house, and have been consulting with several chair manufacturers as the acoustics in my theatre are not the best. I inquired whether this could be improved by installing a certain kind of a seat.

Some tell me that the acoustical properties of a theatre can be improved by installing a certain seat, and others tell me that a certain seat will give the same sound effects whether the house is partially or entirely occupied.

Do you really think that a theatre seat has anything to do with good sound qualities? Awaiting your reply and thanking you for same.—S. M. B.

The Answer:

THE SALESMEN representing the different chair manufacturers whom you consulted certainly gave you the correct information. The sound properties in a theatre change considerably with the capacity of the audience, and as the audience plays a great part in the acoustics, the more people there are in the audience the greater the absorption.

Now any good manufacturer can properly design a chair with suitable material to equalize the absorption value of a person. I do not know whether such a seat is on the market among the more popular models, but I believe it would be rather expensive, as I think they come under special manufactured and designed seats. But I am sure that seats are being manufactured today which reduce the difference between a small and a large audience.

The Question:

REFERRING TO the department conducted by Mr. Peter M. Hu'sken in BETTER THEATRES, I have a proposition here regarding placing of screen and speaker for sound pictures that is causing some concern, as the owner of the building will not allow the taking up of any part of the stage by setting the screen and speakers forward, as the stage is small.

We have been running silent, but now either intend to go to sound or close down entirely. It occurs to me that possibly some alteration in the end of the building back of stage could be made at a reasonable cost, and I had in mind something of this kind:

Building a small room or box-like compartment of size of screen or larger and setting sound screen flush with end wall of building, using the 12x16 box or room for speaker; this of course, means the cutting of end wall and placing of box on outside of building.

What do you think of this idea, and what depth should this box-like room be for the storing of this speaker?

This building is approximately 80x40 feet, and not sealed, height about 30 feet. Building is trussed all overhead. Building gives good sound with non-sync outfit, but we wonder with sound pictures if this building should be sealed. Some of the engineers for the sound equipment people tell us the unsealed building makes no difference, but if it could be improved, we would like to have some idea of this.—W. M. R.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Answer:

IN SEVERAL small theatres a horn room has been built in back of the stage, and there is no reason why in your case this method could not be used also.

Of course you will have to cut an opening in the rear wall of the stage. The space required for a horn room is approximately 12 feet in length and 60 feet in depth, and the height according to the size of screen you are using. It is, however, not necessary to make the horn room the size of the screen, as a door could be installed so as to give access to horns for adjustment without removing the screen.

This horn room can be built at a very economical cost, with 9-inch brick or hollow tile walls, using concrete slab roof.

I do not agree with some of the engineers for sound equipment, that it does not make any difference whether your auditorium is sealed or not. You state in your inquiry that your trusses are exposed and no ceiling installed. I do not think that the trusses will help the acoustical quality of your house, and I feel very confident that after you have installed the ceiling you certainly will notice a great improvement in the sound.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN planning to install a cooling system in my theatre, but when I received estimates of cost for same they were so high that it was impossible for me to make the installation.

My house needs it very badly, not only because it gets very warm in this locality during the summer months, but my competitor installed a cooling system last year and I noticed a great falling off in my box office receipts. So after considering this matter, I thought I had a great idea to build a large insulated box in my fan room and fill same with ice and let the fan blow the air through the ice. I could have done this for a small amount of money, and I thought I had my problem solved, but now several people who are supposed to know tell me this would not work at all.

If you have heard of any such installation, will you please give me your opinion of same, or advise me of any other method of installing a cooling system at a low cost. —L. T. S.

The Answer:

YOU ARE NOT the only exhibitor who has had a "great idea" of cooling his theatre with ice. I know of several such instances, but by investigation I found that they generally did not continue this method very long—perhaps largely due to the supply of ice needed or on account of the large ice bills.

You know that in hot summer weather, ice does not last very long, especially when warm air is blown through it, and besides there are other things to be taken into consideration outside of cooling the air.

There are several ways of installing excellent cooling systems. The most expensive way is to refrigerate the air through coils. A less expensive way is to install an air washer, provided, that your fans are of the proper size.

where children attend unaccompanied by parents. This type of seat construction will withstand abuse to which chairs are often subjected. In a box spring seat the springs are usually fastened directly to the box bottom, and the top of the springs should be fastened to the burlap covering. It is important that the springs be properly tied in place. Box spring seats are chosen for use in a great many very good houses. It is better policy to have a good box spring seat than to have a cheaply designed spring edge seat.

For the theatre that is built on a sumptuous scale a spring edge or deluxe type seat is more appropriate. The classification "spring edge seats" covers that type which has a free standing border wire around the edge of the unit. The springs are not directly fastened to the frame. This type of seat is for those who want a luxurious seat at an economical price. The deluxe type spring seat differs from this only in that its design and construction are more expensive and consequently its use somewhat more limited. The deluxe seat is generally reserved for those very luxurious chairs having spring backs.

As the spring construction becomes more luxurious it becomes more necessary that the construction be good. It is natural that the higher the seat structure the greater the strains and thrusts to which it is subjected, and the more flexing it must withstand. Consequently, to attain the same length of service or life the construction is highly important. Properly designed, spring edge seats make the most desirable seat.

From the standpoint of elimination of maintenance costs in spring edge seats, the spring unit is very important. It must be so designed that the springs will be properly held in place. On a spring edge seat the springs are fastened at the bottom to steel strips and at the top by links which run between coils, and between the coils and border wire. These connecting links should be of such a design as to permit the necessary flexibility and yet fulfill the function of holding the springs in their proper place. All coils should be so designed that no turn of the spiral can come in contact with another, thus causing a clicking noise. Excessive "shimmy" and softness should be avoided. If the padding over the spring unit is not sufficiently resilient and is not properly placed the seat will become lumpy and uncomfortable.

Part of the duty of the padding material is to protect the cover from the spring. In any seat there is motion between the seat and the cover; and if the border wire, the spring, or the connecting links come in contact with the cover or are only separated from the cover by a thin hard substance, they will cause the upholstering material to wear out in its backing. In velour and plush fabrics this consists of wearing the pile tuft through or of working the pile fibres out through the backing.

An obscure but important item in seat construction is the bottom board or cover for the underside of the seat. The increase in the general use of a steel seat bottom has eliminated what was once a common source of annoyance and expense. The old wooden seat bottom boards were a constant hazard to clothing, particularly silk stockings. This was also true of slotted head screws. The modern seat incurs no such annoyance or liability.

The seat of a theatre chair is subjected to constant slamming up and down. If maintenance is to be reduced to a minimum the fastening between the seat arm and the seat should be secure. Usually upholstered seats are fastened to seat arms by means of wood screws; these should be of a sufficient number and length to insure against loosening of the seat from the brackets or seat arms. This possible source of trouble will be mentioned more fully under hinge construction to be discussed in an article soon to follow.

With the trend toward more luxurious seats, demand has also been for more comfortable backs. There are, broadly speaking, four types of backs: plywood, inserted panel, full upholstered, and spring back.

The plywood back is gradually disappearing from use in theatres because of demand for better furnishings and because of its ruinous effect on acoustics.

The inserted panel back is quite popular in the smaller, less elaborate theatres. The first cost is somewhat less than that of the full upholstered back, while a greater range of upholstering materials can be satisfactorily used with it. Inasmuch as this back has a wood edge, the upholstering material is not subjected to the severe wear which comes along the top of the back by the people rubbing along the top of the back in passing in and out of the row.

The fully upholstered back gives more the appearance of a household chair and is gaining in favor because of its finer appearance, greater comfort, and reasonable price. Experience has shown that the most practical fully upholstered backs are those having a rear facing panel of wood or steel. Upholstery covered back panels have been used very satisfactorily where the covering material is of a character assuring long wearing life; but unless material of that character is selected, it is better to confine backs to those in which the covering is carried over the edge of the back but is tucked in between the back and the back panel.

The popularity and use of the full spring backs is rapidly increasing. Because the pitch of the back is somewhat straighter to compensate for extra thickness and to allow equal access to and from chair row, the amount of weight or pressure which an occupant places against a back is slight. Therefore, the springs should be very soft. Ample provision should be made for keeping them in place and the border wire around them should be sufficiently strong to prevent the whole unit from being pushed out of place. In the design of any back, and particularly in a spring back, great care should be taken to eliminate all possible hard surfaces and sharp points which may wear against the upholstering material. In a spring back, as in a spring seat, there is motion between the covering material, the stuffing material and springs. Every caution must be taken to reduce the effect of this wear to a minimum.

Most backs being used today have either a plywood or steel back panel. In order to maintain their handsome appearance as long as possible, these parts should be finished in lacquers or enamels which have been proved durable. Ordinarily a lacquered surface may be expected to look better for a longer period of time than a pigment enameled surface.

It is, of course, the upholstering material which comes directly in contact with the occupant and which must withstand the effect of use. It must also withstand the wear of people passing in and out of the row, which in some parts of a house is greater than the former.

At the present time a great variety of upholstering materials is being offered for use on theatre chairs. Only a small portion of the upholstering materials being manufactured for furniture will prove satisfactory for use on theatre chairs. From the viewpoint of many theatre owners, imitation leather is the most desirable material for seats. Comparatively, it is low in first cost, is smooth and permits easy movement on the seat. Because of its smooth surface, it does not absorb and retain dirt as do porous fabrics. Its cleaning presents no problem. It is possible to freshen the appearance of this type of material and give the house a cleaner look by going over the imitation leather now and then with lukewarm water and a mild soap containing no lye. This is particularly desirable where confections or refreshments are dispensed in the theatre.

It is generally recommended that no special cleaners or dressings be used on imitation leather. Sometimes theatre owners are offered dressings to refinish the imitation leather. Ordinarily these give little improvement in appearance and it is often possible to ruin the material. There actually is a great difference in the ability of various imitation leathers being manufactured today to withstand the severe use which a theatre seat gets. It is highly important, therefore, that the purchaser of theatre chairs ascertain with care how and why the theatre chair manufacturer has selected his imitation leather, and form an opinion of how well informed the manufacturer is regarding the suitability of the stock he is using.

In recent years there has been a great increase in the number of chairs which have been upholstered in soft fabrics. We use this term "soft fabrics" to include all fabrics other than imitation leather.

Seat fabrics must withstand much more severe wear than those used on the backs. Either imitation leather should be used on the seats, or the owner should invest a sufficient amount to get a good, serviceable fabric material for the seat.

Cotton velours can be used with satisfaction on theatre chair seats. While good velours can be obtained at reasonable cost there are many which are not at all suitable for theatre chair use. They are made for drapery purposes and should not even be considered for chair coverings. Some velours which are satisfactory for backs are too light and flimsy to be considered for use on seats. The manufacturer should be able to demonstrate to the buyer the service wear to be reasonably expected of any material.

In recent years there has been a rapid increase in the use of rayon for upholstering fabrics. Although some pieces are all rayon, in most of these instances rayon is used in connection with cotton. Some rayon yarns are good yarns. Others are highly unsatisfactory. In other words, there are good and bad rayons just as there are good and bad cotton fabrics. The manufacturer should guard the purchaser against the use of unsuitable fabrics.

Mohair pile fabrics are usually classed as the longest wearing materials. Experience and tests substantiate this. In recent years there have been changes in construction which, coupled with a downward trend in the cost, have made it possible to produce mohairs at very reasonable prices. Objections have been offered to mohair that it is uncomfortable for use on seats, that it tends to stick to the clothing and that it prevents easy movement on the seat. It is also said to be uncomfortable in summer. However, the trend in recent years has been toward finer and softer yarns and toward more erect pile. This tends to reduce such objections. The big advantage in favor of mohair is that it retains its lustre and fresh and new appearance longer than any of the other materials commonly used for theatre chairs.

It is difficult to set forth rules by which a prospective purchaser can determine for himself whether or not an upholstering material will prove satisfactory in use. Perhaps these few principles will help. If long wear life under normal theatre chair use is expected, pile fabrics provide much more assurance than flat fabrics. Flat fabrics have a very definite place and are desirable from a number of standpoints. They are quite often very decorative. This is particularly true of the tapestries. Occasionally buyers are willing to exchange long life for this greater decorative effect. The present trend in household coverings is towards reps and imitation friezes. These fabrics might be considered more modern, more stylish, than the pile fabrics, but if they are to be considered, the purchaser should bear in mind that to get these additional factors of beauty and style he must be willing to sacrifice something in the wear life. The first principle, therefore, in considering soft coverings is: To be safe, stick to pile fabrics. The second principle is to select a good fabric in the particular class under consideration. It is generally unwise to buy the cheapest fabric made in its particular class. For example, it is usually safer to buy a good jacquard velour than to buy a cheap mohair. It is possible to buy a mohair for the same price as a medium class jacquard, but it is probable the medium priced jacquard will give greater satisfaction.

In selecting a fabric some consideration should be given to the class of patrons which are to use the house. The same principle applies to colors. If a theatre is serving a class of patronage whose clothes are liable to be dirty, or if confections or refreshments are sold in the theatre, light colors should be avoided. It is good practice to avoid delicate shades entirely. Brightness can be obtained without having seating areas of light color. In general, mohairs can be used in lighter colors than cottons because the mohair yarn is smoother and holds less dirt. Most of the fabrics used for theatre chairs can be kept in a sanitary condition by regular use of a good vacuum cleaner. Most of the pile fabrics are washable, but if washing is undertaken it is important that chairs be thoroughly dry before using again. It is particularly important that the cotton padding beneath the covering material be dried as well, otherwise they may mildew. It is generally considered the best practice in washing pile fabrics to use a soap froth instead of sudsy water, in other words, a very much higher percentage of soap than is used in ordinary washing. Only mild soap containing no lye should be used for theatre chairs.

VENTILATING FAN

● An adjustable volume ventilating fan has been marketed by the Vallen Electrical Company of Akron, designed especially for duct installations.

The fan shaft is at right angles to the motor driving shaft, with power transmitted through specially constructed gears to provide a positive drive. All shafts are carried on ball bearings.

A feature of the fan is adjustable pitch blades. The pitch of the blades can be adjusted to exhaust air (hot or cold), steam, fumes, spray, dust, odors, etc.

SIGN ANIMATOR

● An electric sign animator, or flasher, based on the simple principle of the "Jacob's ladder" known to every high school student of physics, has been brought out by Q-R-S-Neon of Chicago.

The device consists of two vertical rods set at a slight angle to each other, forming a V. Both rods are supported at the bottom by an insulating base. The closest point between the two rods is at the bottom. When strong voltage is applied to both rods, the current jumps or arcs from one rod to the other. The air around and immediately above the arc becomes heated, forming a partial vacuum. The arc then climbs up both rods and into this vacuum. As the air heating process continues, the arc proceeds to climb upward along both rods until it reaches the top of the V, where it breaks and starts over again at the bottom.

The arc generates heat in the rods and after it has traveled from bottom to top several times, the rods are brought up to a constant temperature. This permits the movement of the arc to become regular and uniform (providing, of course, that there are no air currents present, which would have a tendency to interrupt the uniformity of travel). By enclosing the rods in a protected chamber, with openings in both the top and bottom, distracting air currents are eliminated. The speed with which the air passes through governs the speed with which the arc climbs.

INDIRECT FIXTURE

● The Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company of Cleveland, has developed an indirect lighting fixture of semi-modernistic design, called a "Louverlux." It embodies a Lunalux globe for reflecting and diffusing the light, and a series of louvers to direct the remaining light toward the ceiling. The hanger is furnished with either chain or tubing, and lengths appropriate for any mounting height can be supplied.

The keeper-ring method of supporting the globe is employed. This is to keep out bugs and to eliminate globe breakage due to unequal expansion and contraction.

The louvers are a separate unit and can be attached or detached at will without removing the globe.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEM

● Simplification of the chore of keeping books is something to be welcomed by the average exhibitor, so an accounting system that was conceived for just such a purpose is worth reporting. In a Seymour, Ind., newspaper we note an account of it, the product, we assume, of years of experience as an exhibitor of Mrs. E. M. Eagleston, manager of the Majestic in that town.

The first series consists of a theatre ledger, an invoice record of film products and a dating book for films. The invoice record of film products gives a record of all films, the date they are shown, and columns are also provided for the receipts, expenses, and other financial details in connection with these films.

The theatre ledger includes columns for detailed entries as to receipts and expenditures for each day of the year, and a form is also given for computing the year's business from which income tax records may be quickly taken. The ledger is made up for a period of two years, with two income tax records.

Reynolds electric flower effect.

FLOWER EFFECTS

● A novel lighting effect accessory has been evolved by the Reynolds Electric Company of Chicago, in the form of color hoods, rings and flower-petal spill shields which, when arranged according to some pattern, resemble a variegated flower.

The various parts can be put together in a variety of patterns and color combinations, and are available for wattages of as high as 60, and in some cases, as high as 100.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● In case any of those directly interested have not noted reports of the time and place of the next convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers this announcement may be taken to be as good as official: The Spring convention will be held in Washington, D. C., during the height of the Washington Bi-Centennial celebration, from May 9 to 12. Further information may be had from W. C. Kunzmann, chairman of the convention committee. Nate Golden, assistant chief of the Motion Picture Division of the U. S. Department of Commerce, has been appointed chairman of the arrangements committee.

At the second convention of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, held in Cleveland last month, Willis H. Carrier, retiring president of that organization and head of the Carrier Engineering Corporation, manufacturers of air conditioning systems, was awarded the F. Paul Anderson gold medal for scientific achievement in that field.

George H. Bucher has been elected vice president and general manager of the Westinghouse Electric International Company. He has been assistant general manager, and his newest promotion comes after 23 years with the Westinghouse electrical organization.

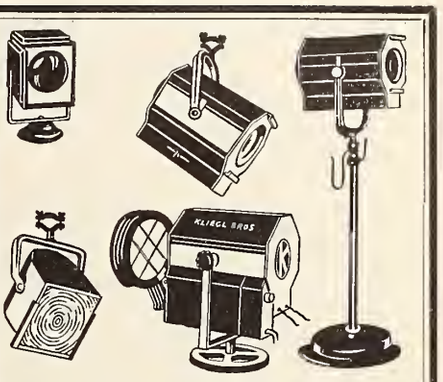
proof be positive, but the person accused of the crime may be convicted purely on circumstantial evidence. So held the higher court in State v. Hardin (300 Pac. 347).



In this case a person named Hardin, accused of forging a receipt, was shown to have had exclusive possession of the receipt. In other words, no other person had an opportunity to forge the name to the receipt. In view of this testimony the higher court held Hardin guilty of the crime of forgery, and said:

"While it was necessary for the state to show that the defendant signed the name of Tom Lorenzen to the receipt and that he did so without authority and with criminal intent, it was not obliged to rely upon direct proof. The jury is permitted to draw reasonable inferences from facts proven. The state was entitled to show by circumstantial evidence that defendant signed the name of Tom Lorenzen without authority."

Contracts Made by Manager

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether or not a corporation or private theatre owner is liable for contracts made by employes without proper authority of the board of directors or private owner. Generally speaking, a corporation or private theatre owner is liable for all contracts made by the manager of a department, or branch, so long as such contracts are within the scope of his authority. Moreover, a contract is valid and binding although the manager was not specially authorized to enter into the agreement, providing it is wtihin his general authority and relates to the conduction of the corporation's business.

For example, in the late case of Municipal v. Zachry (294 Pac. 114), it was disclosed that a manager employed by a corporation entered into a contract by the terms of which he employed an attorney to represent the corporation in legal matters. The manager agreed that the corporation would pay the attorney $1,250 for the services to be rendered. Later the corporation refused to pay the bill presented by the attorney on the grounds that the manager had exceeded his authority when entering into the contract without having the approval of the board of directors of the corporation. The corporation further alleged that the manager had no authority to make employment contracts.

The attorney contended that the manager was a local manager and in charge of the affairs of the company and, as such local manager, therefore had authority to employ him. The lower court held the corporation liable for services rendered by the attorney and the higher court upheld this decision.

Effect of Law Violation

MANY STATES have enacted laws which require corporations, whose headquarters are outside the state, to comply with certain requirements, such as filing certain informative papers with the Secretary of State. Usually, these laws specify that foreign corporations which fail to abide by these requirements forfeit their right to file suit against citizens of the state. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Short Films Syndicate Company v. Standard Film Service Company (176 N. E. 893).

The facts are that a theatre owner and a film distributor entered into a written contract by the terms of which the latter leased the theatre owner certain moving picture films. The theatre owner failed to fulfill the obligations of the contract and the film distributor filed suit to recover damages. During the trial it was disclosed that the film distributor was located outside the state and had failed to comply with a state law which provided:

"Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state it shall procure from the Secretary of State a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state. . . . No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has such certificate."

Therefore, the higher court held the theatre owner not liable, since the film distributor was not legally entitled to file suit within the state.

Agreement to Sell Enforceable

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a contract is not rendered void because it contains two or more clauses under which the contracting parties assume varied kinds of obligations. This rule of the law is applicable with respect to leases and the sale of theatre equipment.

For instance, in Seches v. Bard (4 P. [2d] 167), it was shown that a man named Bard was interested in the building of three theatres. Bard, together with other persons, decided to organize a corporation to acquire other motion picture theatres. Therefore, Bard contracted with a motion picture corporation wherein he agreed to assign his lease of the theatres to the corporation and sell certain of the theatre equipment and personal property in consideration of a certain amount in cash and a specified number of shares of corporation stock.

Later litigation arose over the question whether a contract of this nature is valid and enforceable. In holding the contract valid, the court said:

"The lease transferred was valid consideration for the stock. . . . It is quite natural that the value of a lease should depend upon future returns from the property. . . . One part cannot be separated from the other. The agreement had as its object the consolidation of a number of theatres, and the provisions as to the three new theatres and the stock issued for their leases cannot be severed from the balance of the contract."

Liability of Architect

THE LAW requires an architect to exercise ordinary care in preparation of plans and specifications. Moreover, he must be reasonably competent

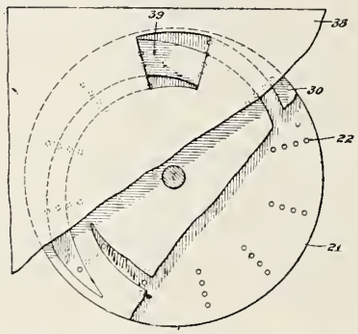
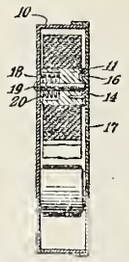
New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,802,595. AUTOMATIC PHOTOGRAPHIC SOUND REPRODUCING MECHANISM. Lee De Forest, New York, N. Y., assignor to De Forest Phonofilm Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed Feb. 18, 1928. Serial No. 255,397. 20 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.3.)



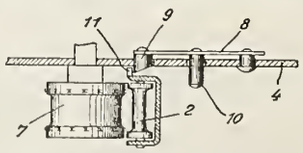
8. In a sound reproducing device employing a photographic film having a plurality of sound records thereon, the combination with a movable slit block of means for moving the film past said slit successively in opposite directions and means for moving the slit block transversely of the film on each reversal of the film to align the slit with the proper record on the film.

1,805,948. MOTION PICTURE PRINTING MACHINE. George Lane, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., assignor, by mesne assignments, to Audio-Cinema, Incorporated, Long Island City, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed June 27, 1928. Serial No. 288,695. 2 Claims. (Cl. 95—75.)



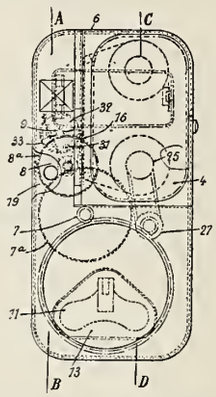
1. In a film strip printing machine, means having a printing aperature for the passage of light to the film, and means controlling the passage of light through said printing aperture comprising a member adjustable relative to said printing aperature, said member having a plurality of aperatures spaced apart along the same and out of alignment in respect to the direction of the movement of adjustment of said member thereof, said member when adjusted bringing said apertures to register separately with the printing aperture for printing upon areas of said film which are disaligned longitudinally thereof, one area being for the motion pictures and the other for the sound track, substantially as described.

1,800,057. TELEVISION. Harold P. Donle, Meriden, Conn., assignor to Radio Inventions, Inc., a Corporation of New York. Filed Dec. 26, 1928, Serial No. 328,337. 8 Claims. (Cl. 178—6.)



1. A television apparatus comprising a scanning disc having spirally disposed apertures, a shutter mounted on the same axis and having spirally disposed slots whose angular length is less than 360 degrees and means for rotating the disc and shutter at different relative speeds.

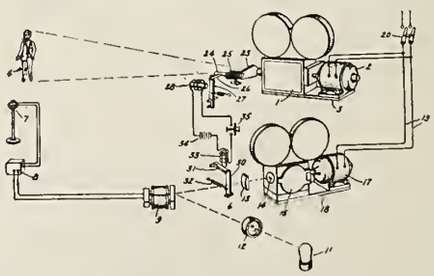
1,802,598. FILM MAGAZINE. Emanuel Goldberg, Dresden-Loschwitz, Germany, assignor to Zeiss Ikon Aktiengesellschaft, Dresden, Germany. Filed Aug. 27, 1929, Serial No. 388,678, and in Germany Oct. 15, 1928. 3 Claims. (Cl. 242—71.)



3. A device for preventing accidential unrolling of a film from its spool by the influence of its inherent spirally acting force under shocks during transportation of the film magazine comprising a core, a means on said core constituting a female member, a cover, a male member formed on said cover adapted to engage said female member to prevent accidental relative movements between cover and spool.

1,805,579. FILM TRANSPORTING DEVICE IN A MOTION PICTURE APPARATUS. Leo Goldhammer, Munich, Germany, assignor to Agfa Ansco Corporation, Binghamton, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed July 8, 1929, Serial No. 376,765, and in Germany July 10, 1928. 1 Claim. (Cl. 88—17.)

In a film transporting device in motion picture apparatus a film transporting drum, a swinging holder containing pressure rollers for pressing the film towards the film transporting drum, a bolt pivotally fixing one end of the roller-holder to the base-plate, a spring pressing the roller-holder in its open portion away from the transporting drum, a locking pin and a releasing button mounted on a leaf-spring, which locking pin engages the roller-holder in its operative position.



1,808,566. POCKET VIEW-TAKING CINEMATOGRAPHIC CAMERA WITH SPRING-MOTOR. Andre Noel Merle, Vincennes, France, assignor to Pathe Cinema, Anciens Etablissements Pathe Freres, Paris, France. Filed Apr. 25, 1929, Serial No. 357,892, and in France May 7, 1928. 3 Claims. (Cl. 88—17.)

3. In a cinematographic camera, in combination a spring motor, a film case containing a winding reel and an unwinding reel, said spring motor and said reels being placed edge to edge substantially in line relatively to each other, two main plates disposed on either side of said spring motor and film case and adapted to support said two members, a box only slightly wider than one of said two members, and adapted to contain said plates with said members, and, disposed between said main plates: a shutter mechanism, a claw mechanism and an objective lens.

1,771,940. FILM REFERENCE MARKER. Lewis T. Robinson, Niskayuna, N. Y., assignor to General Electric Company, a Corporation of New York. Filed Apr. 5, 1927. Serial No. 181,182 2 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.2.)

1. In combination a moving picture camera and a sound recorder each adapted to have a film upon which the respective picture and sound records are made and each having a light opening through which the respective films are exposed, a shutter for each of said openings biased to a position uncovering the corresponding opening, latches arranged to retain the shutters each in a position covering the respective openings associated therewith, and electromagnetic means for simultaneously operating said latches to cause the simultaneous release of said shutters.

cago; rubber tile and linoleum by Thos Molding Floor Company, Chicago; vitreous marble by Vitrolite Products, Chicago; sprinkler system by Grinnell; stage equipment and organ lift by Peter Clark, New York; refrigeration by Wittenmeier, Chicago; seating by Heywood-Wakefield, Chicago; lighting control by Major, Chicago; signs by Lu-Mi-Nus, Chicago; drinking water coolers by General Electric; Simplex projectors; Western Electric sound system; projection arcs by Hall & Connolly; spots and effect machines by Brenkert; projection and emergency power supply equipment by Century Electric.

Incorporated in the projection power equipment of the Southtown is a special duplex control board for controlling the output of the generators. This was designed by J. H. Goldberg of Paramount Publix. The projection power is supplied by two 4-bearing, 300/450-ampere, 100-volt Roth Actodetectors driven by 50-hp., 220/440-rpm., 3-phase, 60-cycle Century motors. The voltage of the generators is higher than usually used by Publix, but was adopted for the Southtown because of the distance the motor-generators are installed from the projection room.

The generators are mounted on common special ribbed bedplates with, and directly connected by, flexible couplings to squirrel cage induction motors. Rigid iron bedplates were used to maintain perfect bearing alignment. The pedplates are arranged for insulation from the foundation, with sound deadening material.

The generator has four main poles made of annealed laminated electric sheet steel, assembled and riveted under pressure. There are also four interpoles or commutating poles. These coils are put through a dehydrating process which consists of an over-night heating in an oven, and while in this dried-out condition, they are dipped and baked once before taping. After taping, the coils are again heated, and while hot, are dipped and baked twice in 220° Fahrenheit for 12 hours. The frame is cast of special dynamo steel.

The armature core is built up of annealed insulated electric sheet steel laminations, assembled under pressure and keyed to the armature shaft or spider. Several fibre discs are provided at each end of the core to prevent injury to the windings. Triple insulated cells are used in the armature slots, which consists of two .010 leatheroid strips, and one .010 empire cloth. In addition, there is pressed board between individual coils. Insulated, formed coils are wound by hand into the slots. The completed armature is treated and baked for 12 hours. The commutator consists of hard drawn copper bars of especially liberal dimensions. It is insulated with mica, in a steel shell and pressed on the armature shaft.

The generator is constructed to deliver 450 amperes for a period of 15 minutes, alternating with a normal (or less) load. It is compounded to give a slightly higher voltage at normal load than at no load, in order to make up for the line loss.

The cooling system of the Southtown, by Wittenmeir, embraces the carbonic system of mechanical refrigeration, with the direct expansion method. All air, both fresh and recirculated, is passed through the dehumidifiers. There are two dehumidifiers, one for the lobby and one for the auditorium. That for the lobby has a capacity of 95,400 cubic feet per minute, while the capacity of the other is 26,000 c.f.m. The total refrigerating capacity of the plant, which is installed as two units, is 250 tons —one unit, 150 tons; the other, 100 tons. The compressors are of horizontal, semi-enclosed, single-cylinder type operated by V-belt drives. The condensers are of shell and tube type.

and efficient in performance of his work. In other words, if an architect contracts to prepare plans and specifications which subsequently result in a defective theatre building, the theatre owner may sue the architect and recover damages.

For illustration, in the late case of Cornteldt v. Rihacek (177 N. E. 522), it was shown that a property owner employed an architect to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of a theatre building. Before entering into this contract the architect represented and guaranteed that he was a man of much experience in the preparation of plans and the construction of theatre buildings. The property owner informed him that he knew nothing whatever about that kind of construction and that he would have to rely on the architect's experience and representations in the matter.

After completion of the building the property owner discovered that the theatre was defective in seven different places of construction. Suit was filed by the theatre owner and the lower court held the architect liable for $1,000 damages. The theatre owner appealed to the higher court on the contention that defects resulting from the defective and carelessly prepared plans and specifications amounted to at least $5,000. The higher court considered all of the testimony and promptly reversed the lower court's verdict.

THEATRE LEASE CONTRACT LAW

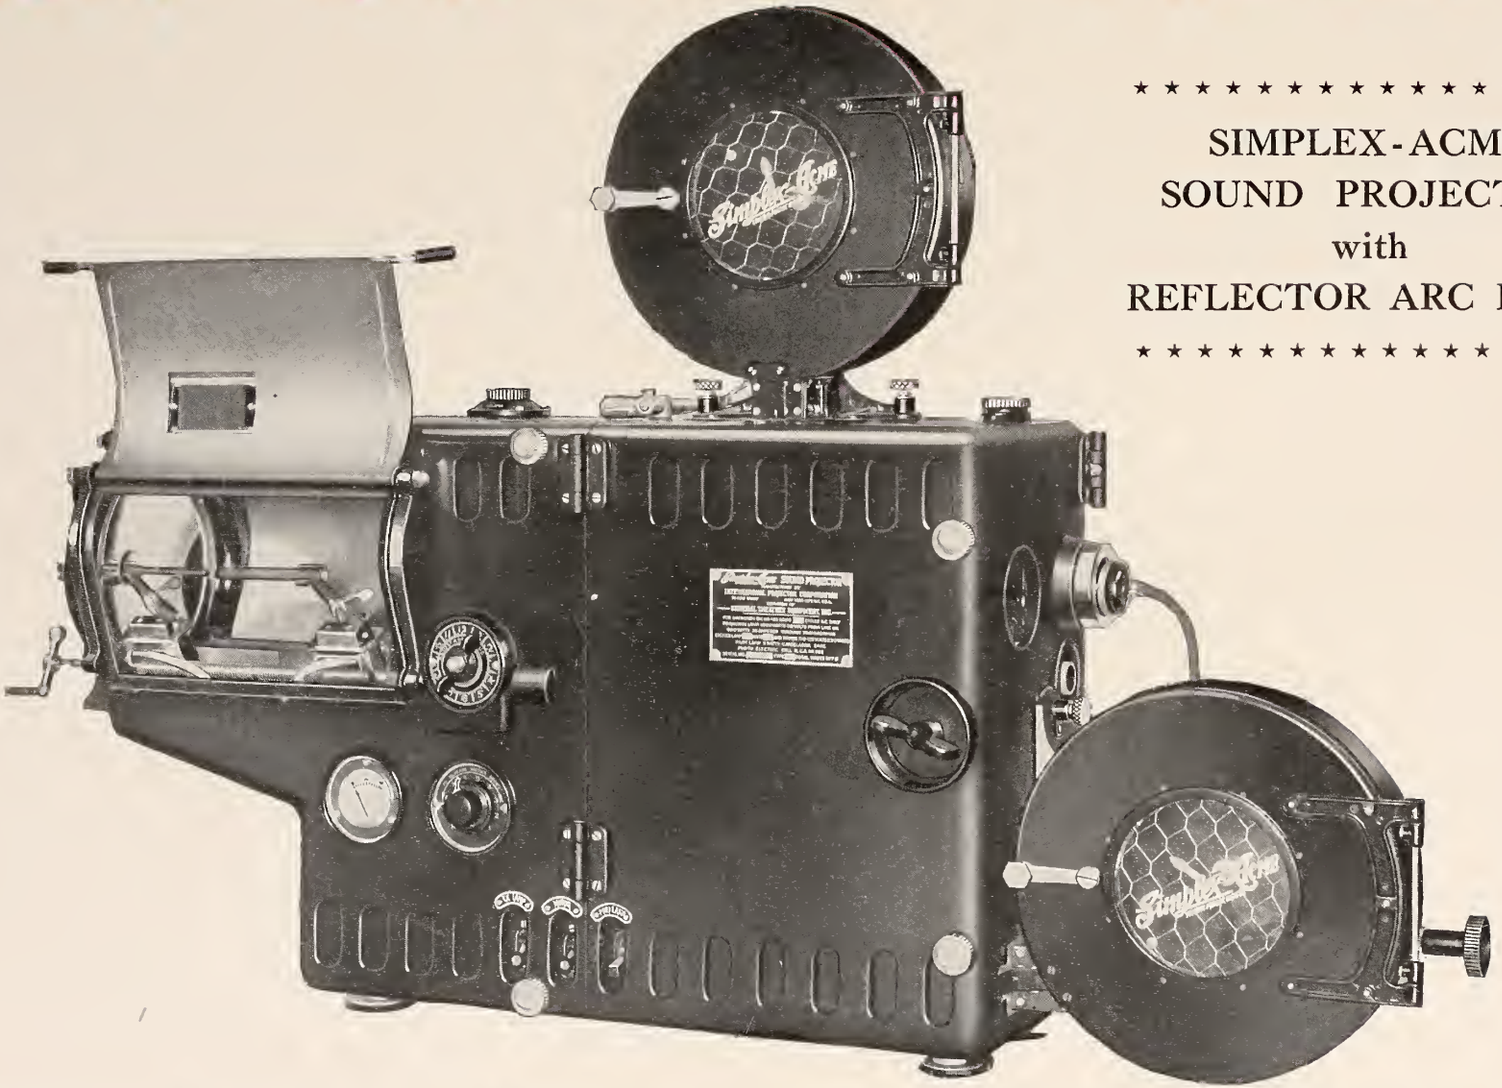
A MORTGAGE is not necessarily invalid because a purchaser of the mortgaged property cannot obtain from the court record precise knowledge as to the nature of the encumbrance. In other words, where the mortgage is not given to secure a debt it is sufficient if its terms are such as will put any one interested upon an inquiry which, pursued with reasonable diligence, will lead to the discovery of the true nature and amount of the encumbrance.

For this reason and rule of the law it has been held that the purpose of the usual state laws requiring leases for more than one year to be recorded is to render them ineffectual as to creditors and bona fide purchasers unless they are so recorded. A bona fide purchaser is one who buys property of another without notice that some third party has a right to or interest in such property, and pays a full and fair price for the same before he has notice of the claim or interest of such other.

Therefore, with respect to both mortgages and leases it is established that a person who purchases theatre property is bound by the terms of any recorded instrument which may indicate that such property is encumbered and the purchaser is bound to use due care and diligence to learn the nature of the encumbrances. This is true, although the mortgage or lease does not clearly indicate the encumbrances. For instance, in Andretta v. Fox New England Theatres (155 Atl. 848), it was disclosed that a state law provides:

"No lease of any building or land for more than one year shall be effectual against any person other than the lessor and his heirs, unless it shall be in writing, executed, attested, acknowledged and recorded in the same manner as a deed of land."

A theatre owner executed a lease to a theatre operator of the theatre building for the term of twenty-five years. The lease contract contained a clause that the annual rent was to be "of the amount prescribed in a separate agreement dated of even date herewith and executed by both parties hereto." The separate agreement so referred to was signed simultaneously with the lease. Only the lease was recorded.



Subsequently a person named Andretta purchased the theatre property and believed that he was entitled to breach the lease contract and compel the theatre operator to vacate the premises because the lease contract did not contain a complete statement of the annual rentals and a portion of the contract recorded was incomplete.

However, on account of the fact that Andretta could have obtained information, by referring to the recorded lease, that separate instruments contained full information regarding the amount of the rent, the court held the lease contract valid.

★RE-NAMED

"THE MAN I KILLED"

For the first time in entertainment history theatre patrons have literally demanded a new title for a great motion picture!

The thousands who have seen and been moved by "The Man I Killed" have taken such a personal interest in its success that they have actually insisted on a new title for the picture . . . one more worthy of the greatness of its drama and magnificent love-story!

In deference to these many requests "THE MAN I KILLED" is re-named —

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 106, No. 8 — February 20, 1932

WHOSE OX IS GORED?

THE Christian Century has just presented a vigorous editorial outgiving of high indignation based on charges that the radio is censoring utterances of clergymen on the air. "Is nothing to be allowed on the air that antagonizes majority views, or the views of social and political powers?" the editorial asks.

Let us have free speech for the clergy by all means. However, we seem to recall that it is this same Christian Century which has long so ardently advocated federal control of the motion picture. It is also this same Christian Century which has termed the motion pictures "Ambassadors of Ill-Will," and which coined the alliteration "The Menace of the Movies."

Words on the air and shadows on a screen have about the same substance, the same endurance and basically are entitled to about the same rights.

FOR DIVERSITY

SIGNIFICANT reflections will be aroused by some passages of a decidedly well tempered and competent discussion of the financial status and prospects of the motion picture presented by the Herald Tribune of New York. In the course of this article the comment is made that:

"It may be that the nature of the picture business prevents a continuous state of stability, owing to the speculative nature of the amusement enterprise as a whole."

It may be observed that "as a whole" there is no necessity for the picture business being speculative. It has been speculative and will continue to be speculative so long as what a euphemist calls "trends" are permitted to dominate operations, particularly production operations.

Roulette is admittedly speculative, for the individual player. It is not, however, speculative for the bank at Monte Carlo. The bank does not play favorite numbers, does not follow winners, does not try out systems. The bank is eternally and profitably on the side of the grand average, an average created by the automatic diversity of bets resulting from playing the whole board.

Beside all the more reasonable factors working toward the wide adoption of styles and trends in production is the simple element of propinquity and infection of impulses because of the close-knit nature of the Hollywood community. Considered in terms of its scope the final decisions on the creative product of the screen are rendered by a decidedly small and limited array of executives. They are neighbors. They know each other intimately. They watch each other alertly, either in cooperative sympathy or in intense rivalry, or both. That the colors of concept should fringe, run and tend to merge is inevitable. Like conditions tending to identity of coloration in product do not obtain in either the industry of literature or the industry of the stage, the only other comparable art merchandising institutions.

Reverting to terms of roulette, the counters of the book and the stage are scattered over the board, but the motion picture tends to stack its bets on one color or one number. Today it is rouge, tomorrow it is noir.

In the world of the stage, to mention names of producers was equivalent to designating within reasonable limits the character of the production. That is still true to a marked degree of publishers of the printed word today. In their differing specializations they make up a sum total seasonal output of wide diversity. To readers there is a decidedly definite expectation of certain different sorts of books under the names Knopf, Harper, Bobbs-Merrill, Putnam and so forth. The total of them make up programs, which is to say a season's reading, or a library if you like.

In the world of the motion picture there appears to be a tendency of each producer to proceed in the selection of material with either too little or else vastly too much relation to what his competitors are choosing. Ideas are not that scarce. They merely seem to be.

All this is of fundamental importance to the exhibitor. Today, and ever since the pictures began, the theatre has been unable to do much of a job programing its offering with an eye to real diversity of material and the contrasts of appeal which are the essence of show merchandising.

NOT THE GUINEA'S STAMP

"SWING Back to $150,000 Cost Days Seen on Coast," relates the headline on a Hollywood dispatch. That would be most interesting and exciting news if the exhibitor had ever been able to observe any important relation between the cost of a picture and its earning power. The important element, intelligent dramatic construction, just happens to be a factor to which Price Waterhouse has not yet been able to apply a yardstick. Also all the costs that go on the books do not necessarily go into the film can. Bookkeeping, as it is kept, should be listed among the arts.

MORE CINDERELLAS

THE country now has a good five-cent cigar, and what it needs next are more good, Cinderella type stars. It is increasingly evident, after many years of observation, that the only persons who can take their sex raw are savages, criminals and the more highly sophisticated gentry. The grand average that makes up the box office audience wants it surrounded with those conventions and customs to which it always has been accustomed. It is not necessarily a strictly moral sense which makes them demand this; it is rather the viewpoint impressed by the long rule of custom and convention.

This means, translated into motion pictures, that the stories in general ought to be modernizations of the Laura Jean Libby school of story and versions of such dramatic themes as are involved in "East Lynne," "Shore Acres," "Way Down East" and "The Old Homestead."

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

WHO'S FAT?

THE NEWS of SAN FRANCISCO chooses to have a bit of diversion with Harry Carr, onetime motion picture personage and a member of the staff of the Los Angeles Times. The News editorializes:

Gone are the days when a pretty face and figure could carry a girl to fame and fortune in the films. Says Harry Carr in the Los Angeles Times:

"Being a 'beautiful and striking brunette' doesn't get a girl anything on the screen—except, perhaps, a date with a bootlegger. There are enough beautiful girls carrying trays in Hollywood to start a beauty pageant.

"Of the great stars of the screen, one is a woman with a flat, uninspiring face, another has eyes that are slightly crossed, another is freckled like a turkey egg, another has such a bad complexion that they have to kalsomine her before she goes before the camera. Still another is fat and verging on middle age."

We dare Mr. Carr to tell us who he is talking about.

NUISANCE

THE CHRONICLE of SAN FRANCISCO is annoyed at suggestions of more taxation for motor cars and for motion pictures, editorially remarking:

When the automobile is already paying far more than its share of taxes and is building the roads of the Nation at its own expense it certainly looks as though Uncle Sam ought to lay off. The motor goose is already plucked of a big batch of tax feathers. It is entitled to squawk at the prospect of more.

Irritating also is the proposal to lower the exemption on amusement ticket taxes. If the Treasury proposal is carried out the people will pay taxes on tickets even for the cheapest movies. This ought not to be. The people are entitled to their entertainment and the poorest people ought not to be mulcted for taking a little beneficial pleasure from a movie. This will be a plain nuisance tax and as applied to the cheaper entertainment tickets will probably cost more to collect than it is worth.

THE CHRONICLE of AUGUSTA in GEORGIA thinks rather well of some of the cultural influences of the motion picture, and at the conclusion of a long editorial on historical pictures, says:

. . . While we would not consider the moving picture as able to take the place of the printed word, since it cannot cover in detail the events of a long period of time, but must, of necessity, single out episodes and outstanding events in the lives of a people or of individuals, still the value of the picture as an adjunct to the historians in the study of the subject is very great. Indeed, the motion picture whets our appetite for more knowledge, for we would hazard a guess that more people have read the life of Alexander Hamilton since the George Arliss portrayal than had done so before in 50 years, while the "Birth of a Nation" caused hundreds of thousands to turn back the pages of history and read again of Reconstruction and what it did for the South.

MYSTERY!

THE TIMES of BROOKLYN reviews the results obtained by an invitation to picture patrons to express themselves on the class of productions they preferred:

. . . We anticipated the clamor would be for more straight drama of the love-story variety but we were wrong.

A large majority of those who replied to our request prefer detective mysteries, with romances (those with happy endings) a fairly close second. Spy thrillers have many adherents, perhaps because of the current success of Greta Garbo in "Mata Hari."

The most surprising feature of the returns was the large following who crave more pictures of newspaper life. Many of the writers mentioned "The Front Page," "Five Star Final" and even "Gentlemen of the Press."

BUCK PASSERS

THE WORLD HERALD of OMAHA finds charming editorial provocation in "Are These Our Children?", and deals with a theme of parental responsibility that the industry might use for an answer more often than it does, in the following words:

It was a good picture perhaps, depending wholly upon the point of view of the individual spectator. Of course, it was an overdrawn picture of the youth of today, but pictures must be overdrawn to attract money to the box office. But if the picture was intended to offer an explanation of why youth is wild, or offer a remedy for what many deem to be an extremely dangerous situation, it was a miserable failure.

That youth today is living at a fast pace cannot be denied. Youth simply has to go some if it keeps up with the old folks. But the reason for this condition, deplorable or ordinary, as you please, does not lie in prohibition. It is not an aftermath of the war. It is the natural result of a rapidly growing American habit—that of "passing the buck." And as "buck passers" the American people beat the world.

For years parents deemed it one of the chief duties to teach their children temperance, to point out the evils of strong drink, to take them to hear impassioned temperance lecturers, and point out to them the horrible example seen stumbling along the streets. But that was too slow, and father and mother had other, and to them more important duties. So, prohibition and passing the buck to officers of the law. Time was, and not so long ago, when parents assumed the duty of seeing to it that their children were home at a reasonable hour in the evening. Then came the time when the parents had so many social obligations that they couldn't be on hand to see that the children were home at the required hour. So the curfew whistle and the town marshal were delegated to perform the parental function of herding the children off the streets at a specified hour of the evening. Deportment used to be one of the chief things that parents insisted upon their children learning and learning it at home. Now that duty is passed along to the school teacher, who already has too many duties to perform. Religious instruction and training was at one period of American history a duty assumed by parents. Now an hour every Sunday morning is deemed sufficient. Other examples, almost without number, might be cited.

Yet thousands of parents will view "Are These Our Children?" and then ask themselves: "It's simply awful, but what can we do about it?"

But the answer is obvious. Quit passing the buck!

EDITOR BLOWS UP IN SHENANDOAH VALLEY; THERE MEETS A SHOWMAN

Calls Broadway Hit No Promise; Newspaper Managing Editor Points to Bank Statements to Show Business Gains

Manager McKinney at Warners' Virginia in Harrisonburg Recalls How Lack of Doublet Brought Tragic End to Career

By TERRY RAMSAYE
Editor of Motion Picture Herald

After a year at his desk in the office of Quigley Publications, high over Broadway and the dizzy traffic eddies of Columbus Circle, the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD has decided to put New York and the metropolitan state of mind behind to go feel the pulse of the country and to hear at first hand from the exhibitors of the lesser centers and along the highways and byways concerning their interests, prospects and problems.

A good-natured management is of course expected to view it as entirely accidental that this editor should elect to make his tour of inquiry from New York's worst winter month into the balmy regions of the Southland. It is perhaps the influence of the example of a number of able general sales managers from Broadway who find the Florida situation demanding personal attention at this season.

At any rate the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD has taken to the open road for the warmer elsewhere, traveling without schedule, plan or destination, to listen to the voice of the country. He will be heard from, from time to time, with his portable typewriter perched alongside the washbowl and pitcher.

Here is the romantic valley of Virginia, the Shenandoah of song and saga, rich in resource and trade and probably, among like regions, the least aware, in a motion picture sense, of what New York market writers call "the depression" and what the soft-spoken Virginians sometimes delicately mention as "the reconstruction." The Shenandoah Valley may at times be excited, but never depressed. Some centuries of history prove it.

'Way back in the days of Virginia's colonial grandeur, the gay Governor Spotswood bedecked himself in a riding suit of green velvet, his soft leather Russian boots and a plumed hat, to set forth with a company of merry gentlemen to climb the Blue Ridge and see what might be on the other side. They came at last to a mighty summit and looked down on the silvery flood of the Shenandoah and lush valley empire. It is recorded in the ancient "Chronicle" that on that summit "We drank the King's health in champagne, and fired a volley; we drank all the rest of the Royal Family's health in claret and fired a volley; we drank the Governor's health in rum punch and fired a volley."

While the conservative "Chronicle" does not so state, it is probable that after that the shooting became general.

In time came my Lord Thomas Fairfax in splendid scarlet velvet breeches and golden waistcoat to make the valley his domain and Winchester headquarters for a high-handed but perhaps kindly government. George Washington, the young surveyor, worked from this base, and in later years made some military history here. Then the great valley grew into what Civil War history was to call "the granary of the Confederacy" and here Early and Sheridan fought it out. But in this fertile soil the scars of war soon healed and wealth and prosperity came again to the Shenandoah.

Three years ago came Warner Brothers, acquiring theatres and purveying entertainment to the prospering valley. This was not an invasion, but rather a return of Warner interests to their homeland. The home of the family is not so far away at Lynchburg, Va., and there an uncle, I. Eichelbaum, continues in a business he established many a decade ago.

As a climax to all this romance and history of the Shenandoah Valley, I came snorting in under a full head of gasoline the other morning and blew off a cylinder head with a blast that must have made the adjacent mountain rocks reminiscent of Governor Spotswood's volleying party.

So it comes that while the mechanicians are trying to find what gave my Knight the willies, I am swapping yarns with that robust cinemaland adventurer, Charles H. McKinney, manager of Warner Brothers' Virginia theatre in the blithe little city of Harrisonburg.

Mr. McKinney's office is a roomy cove in the big lobby, where, as the patrons enter and emerge, he exchanges greetings in the grand warm manner of Virginia, and appears to know them all. I suspect that McKinney from the vantage of his cordial desk probably sells as many seats per year as his industrious exploitation up and down the Lee-Jackson highway. The Virginia is operated most definitely on a policy of being "some place to go," and as a local institution.

This meeting with McKinney in the Valley of the Shenandoah becomes a matter of inconsequential coincidence, because it was ever so many years ago, when I, then a Chicago newspaper man, and a considerable colony of Selig Polyscope company actors, lived at the Hotel Shenandoah in Chicago. And Charlie McKinney was a Selig player then. That was in the days when Selig was a mighty name in screenland, with his Chicago stages busy with Mabel Taliaferro, Tom Kerrigan, Jack Nelson, William Farnum, Tom Santschi and all that brave company.

We recalled again, while the Virginia's seats were filling with the second audience for "Taxi" with James Cagney, how McKinney concluded his career as an actor one morning at the Selig studio over in Western avenue, Chicago. He was playing a background atmosphere bit in "The Tale of Two Cities" under the direction of the then famous Otis Turner. The story had been pushed back a few centuries and moved to Rome. So McKinney was attired in hose and doublet and carried a shield. Only the shield and his well turned legs in tight hose registered in the picture.

The picture was finished and there was quite a party up at the Green Mills gardens. Then came the dawn and a rush call for retakes, because Mr. Turner had had a brand new idea. McKinney dashed to the studio, and recalling his place in the scene, saved time and troubles to a fevered brow by dressing only in the hose and shield, with his pyjama coat lightly tucked into the top of the long hose—which he deemed photographically sufficient.

Then abruptly Turner changed the business, and McKinney found himself in defense against an attack by dagger, in the hands of the sturdy Mr. Santschi.

When Otis Turner looked at the rushes on the retake the most conspicuous spot in the scene was made bright by the unclothed posterior of Mr. McKinney, who was, the while, face-down on his shield under Santschi's menacing dagger. That concluded Mr. McKinney's histrionic career on the screen. He went out, you might say, on his face. Again you might not. It depends on the point of view, or mayhap the aspect.

It's a long, long trail from the days of Selig in Chicago to the days of Warner in the Shenandoah, and all the way, it has been a journey of showmanship for McKinney. He has seen meanwhile a career of roadshow management and the concerns of what we still carelessly call "the legitimate" from Yakima, Washington, to Portland, Maine, and the way stations between. He is, then, one of that considerable army of experienced showmen which the motion picture has taken over even as it has taken away "the road" and assimilated the amusement industry.

In a way such theatres as the Virginia in Harrisonburg may be considered in terms of showmanship as "stationary roadshows." The consumer market is just about that.

"In Harrisonburg," observes McKinney, "the Broadway hit is no promise at all. Give me the pictures that flop on Broadway and never mind the big hits. And primarily, too, this is a woman interest audience. Even

EDITOR BLOWS UP IN SHENANDOAH

'The Champ,' a grand piece of work, was too much a man's picture to do its best here. They want stories of romance and sentiment and only a touch of sophistication, just enough so they know it is not an old-fashioned thing, that's all. They want no gang pictures, no screen rackets. They want life they know something about and pertaining to some elements of the lives they live themselves. The sophistication of the material taken from the modern stage with its narrow metropolitan appeal is not merchandise here."

Mr. McKinney finds, too, even within the confines of the Shenandoah Valley, some lines of audience demarcation. Saturdays at the Virginia are devoted to programs for the farmer folk who make that their day in town. The program is made up of material of special bucolic appeal, outdoor action stuff, including a serial.

"They want to see fast riding—they want to see shooting and excitement—they want to hear the clatter of the horses and they want to hear the cattle bellow," observes McKinney.

On Saturday the town people stay away and the house is filled with the country folk for all performances. The show is all for them, and McKinney is looking for more material to bring them in. He'd like to have another "farmers' day" each week.

The Virginia's admission price is 40 cents for adults and 10 cents for children, a distinctly healthy figure for a small town theatre and a tribute to the state of affairs in this sector of the Shenandoah Valley. Up at the gateway of the Valley at Winchester, what with developing competition the top admission is 25 cents and a merry young box office war is on—considerably to the profit of the film exchanges, the newspapers which carry the advertising thrusts, and the public.

The competition at Winchester is between Warner Brothers with the Capitol and Colonial and Henry Havel, an independent new to the show business, and amply financed, with the Palace.

In Harrisonburg, McKinney finds newspaper space his best advertising medium. He has a few postings on each side of town on the Lee-Jackson highway. The paper is the News-Record, a morning daily with some nine thousand circulation in a city of about seven thousand, and its community. The morning paper's distribution is sufficiently early to affect attendance from the remoter parts of the district for that night's show. McKinney finds newspaper space gives more action per dollar than any other medium and uses a wide range of considerable lineage.

John Crown, managing editor of the News-Record, thinks the upturn has come for the Valley and cites bank statements to support the opinion. Diversified farming and poultry, which is a crop hot or cold, wet or dry, is the answer. He observes that his region is being rather better served by the motion picture now than in the earlier years and the silent era.

"Give me the pictures that flop on Broadway and never mind the big hits," was the philosophy of exhibition in a smaller city as voiced to Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, by Charles H. McKinney, manager of Warner Brothers' Virginia theatre at Harrisonburg, Va.

"In Harrisonburg," said Mr. McKinney, "the Broadway hit is no promise at all. And primarily, too, this is a woman interest audience.

"They want stories of romance and sentiment and only a touch of sophistication, just enough so they know it is not an old-fashioned thing, that's all. They want no gang pictures, no screen rackets. They want life they know something about and pertaining to some elements of the lives they live themselves. The sophistication of the material taken from the modern stage with its narrow metropolitan appeal is not merchandise here."

the motion picture is not a social issue and that, when subject matter justifies, it is possible to enlist the cooperation of public groups and the clergy. On occasion a majority of the ministers are willing to mention a meritorious coming attraction from the pulpit. In this connection McKinney is planning a special campaign on "The Man Who Played God" with George Arliss.

Mr. McKinney, along with some twelve thousand-and-odd other exhibitors, is a constant reader and user of the service of Motion Picture Herald, including J. C. Jenkins' column, and Charles E. Lewis' Round Table pages. McKinney's office is decorated by Round Table Club membership certificate No. 4379. He finds the release chart pages a prime necessity and recalls with painful words to the editor a couple of errors therein contained.

What with the apples, the hogs, the poultry, the cattle, the sheep and the hay and corn, the Valley of the Shenandoah is doing very well and taking its movies regularly. The motion picture along the Lee-Jackson highway gets the same relative degree of conversational attention as the opera and Lily Pons gets on New York's upper East Side. The business men of Harrisonburg are agog with merriment this week because some exploiteer up at Winchester had a sweet little telephone voice seek to date up some of that town's bankers and magnates to meet "Emma" at the stage door. That helped "Emma" do business in Harrisonburg, too.

Eastman Kodak Gives Dividend

Eastman Kodak has declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 on its common stock, omitting the regular extra dividend of 75 cents. The regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 was declared on the preferred stock.

Testimony Ended In Tri-Ergon Suit Against DeForest

Testimony in the suit brought by the American Tri-Ergon Corporation of New York against the General Talking Picture Corporation, Dr. Lee DeForest and De Forest Phonofilm, Inc., before Judge John P. Nields in federal court at Wilmington, Del., has been completed. Argument will be held later.

The trial revolved about the use of the glow lamp in the operation of a machine to record sound photographically. In the latter part of 1919 DeForest submitted his application for a talking picture apparatus recording machine and in his specifications he mentions the use of an arc light. The Tri-Ergon Corporation contends that three German scientists, Drs. Joseph Engel, Joseph Massolle and Hans Vogt of Berlin were prior inventors of such a machine and that they should have received the patent.

Tri-Ergon through its witness, Dr. William C. Ballard, professor of electrical engineering at Cornell University, contended that had the scientists followed the specification of Dr. DeForest's application in the use of an enclosed arc light, they would have gone astray, away from the glow lamp which today is the important feature of apparatus.

Wisconsin Bureau Sues 15 Companies

Charges of alleged conspiracy, discrimination and coercion against 15 film and theatre companies operating in Wisconsin are listed in a formal complaint issued by the state department of agriculture and markets at Madison, Wis., this week. The complaint follows a preliminary investigation by the state department of agriculture and markets.

Named in the complaint are Fox Film Corporation, Paramount - Publix, M-G-M RKO Pathe, Universal, Columbia, Tiffany, Vitagraph, First National, Vitaphone Distributing Corp., United Artists, Midwesco Theatres, Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc., Orpheum Theatre Co., Madison, and the Madcine Theatre Corp.

It is alleged in the complaint that circuit theatres and exchanges named are forcing independent theatre owners out of business. The first meeting pursuant to the complaint will be held in Milwaukee March 10, and subsequent meetings may be held in other sections of the state, it was said.

Gabriel L. Hess, counsel for the MPPDA, withheld comment pending formal serving of the complaints.

COOPERATION WILL SPEED INDUSTRY THROUGH "GROWING PAINS": TINKER

Fox President, Academy Guest, Says Responsibilities to Stockholders Have Demanded Many Corrective Measures

Full cooperation among the three elements—Hollywood, representing production, Wall Street, the investment public, and Main Street, the consuming public—will determine the speed with which the motion picture industry will pass through the "final stage of growing pains" and "emerge as a tried and true member of the great industrial fraternity of this country," said Edward R. Tinker, president of Fox Film Corporation, at a luncheon given in his honor last week at the Hollywood Roosevelt hotel by members of the board and leaders of the branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Mr. Tinker, introduced by Louis B. Mayer, president of the producers' association on the Coast, complimented the Academy as representing the best ideals of the industry, adding that it "has accepted its responsibilities without evasion and has manifested a quality of leadership which serves us well in such times as these." He said that the Academy, "organized and developed on the principles of the finest of the ancient guilds," may "appropriately represent the industry in the urgent business of developing mutual understanding and good faith among Hollywood, Wall Street and Main Street."

Tells of Corrective Measures

The president of Fox went on to explain these classifications:

"In reality these names are merely symbols. Hollywood stands for production. Wall Street represents the stock ownership of the business. Through Wall Street our securities are placed in the hands of the investment public. Main Street signifies that most essential element in every industry; namely, the consuming public.

"It happens that this industry is reaching its final stage of structural development at a time when all business is being subjected to the closest public scrutiny. Some of the corrective measures that have been taken in the recent past, and those that must be taken in the immediate future, at times may seem drastic.

"We must not lose sight, however, of the fact that we all have legal and moral responsibiilties to our stockholders, just as we have to the public and to those whom we employ. Stockholders today are in a mood to enforce their legal rights and to demand that we fulfill our moral obligations to them. It may be that some of these corrective measures now being taken voluntarily by management might soon be imposed upon it by legal process. In this situation an ounce of prevention may be worth more than a pound of cure."

Pointing out that it has been the experience of business that each industry has written its own ethics out of a "painful process of trial and error," Mr. Tinker cited the case of the motor industry that developed its present soundness and stability only after a "turmoil of passed dividends, dissatisfied stockholders, reduced salaries and overhead charges," and expressed his belief that the motion picture business "is passing through this final stage."

"It is a strange fact," Mr. Tinker declared, "that no industry ever inherited its ethics. For some reason, the lessons which older businesses have learned seem never to serve the new industry. All of the codes and practices which eventually give character and stability to a business are developed by the painful process of trial and error.

"Today the film industry is the young growing giant which holds the center of the stage.

"I have been repeatedly told that it is so different from any other line of human endeavor that it is a law unto itself and that economic law and business experience, governing other enterprises, are not applicable. How familiar all this sounds to one active in those days when the motor industry was the young growing giant, so big and strong that it also was a law unto itself. There seemed unbounded demand for its product, be it good, bad or indifferent. Its improvements and developments came with astounding rapidity. Its leaders, arising from all walks of life, became, to the public, the marvels of the age.

"Then came the awakening. It became apparent that only those managements and organizations which could produce the best articles in a given class at the lowest price and could market the same through the most efficient distributing organization could survive. Out of this turmoil of passed dividends, dissatisfied stockholders, reduced salaries and overhead charges, arose the new giant motor industry of today, sound and stable.

"I believe that at this moment the film industry is passing through this final stage of growing pains and will soon emerge as a tried and true member of the great industrial fraternity of this country.

"The speed with which this will be accomplished depends largely upon the cooperation which can be attained within the industry itself, and in securing this cooperation, this Academy can be, and undoubtedly will be, one of the most potent influences. It is, indeed, an honor to be a member of such an organization."

Tells of Fox Contract Cases

Of recent reports that the Fox corporation had informed certain of its contract employees that their contracts were void, Mr. Tinker frankly explained the situation as follows:

"In our own organization a situation recently arose which required prompt action. Corporation bylaws are drawn for the protection of stockholders. Therefore they have the right to require that executives comply with said bylaws and any board of directors which does not enforce such compliance, particularly in times like the present, is liable to find itself in a most embarrassing position.

"It recently developed that certain executives of the Fox corporation have been lax in this respect and even continued such laxness after the creation of the finance committee, one of whose chief functions was the final approval of contracts. Immediately upon discovery of this carelessness, the committee ordered a full investigation and at the first meeting of the present board held thereafter, the directors approved all previously unapproved contracts involving actors and actresses and all such contracts of directors, supervisors, writers, cameramen, etc., except seven. Because of the exceptional conditions around these seven, good business judgment required that readjustments be made before their further consideration by the board. But in order that this condition should work no injustice on the individuals, they were advised that their employment was not terminated and their rate of compensation was continued. Mutually satisfactory arrangements with some of these individuals have already been concluded and negotiations are in progress with the remainder.

Declares Motion Picture Business Soon Will Emerge as "Tried and True Member of Great Industrial Fraternity"

For Employees' Own Protection

"In addition to the above mentioned seven contracts, a number of the executives, who were responsible for this condition, have been required to take up with the board a readjustment of their own situations.

"Certainly, it is for their own protection as well as that of the corporation, that they should not be placed in a position of negotiating contracts among themselves without submission to the board of directors, who are the representatives of the stockholders and who must act in accordance with the bylaws of the company which are instituted for the protection of the stockholders.

"These adjustments are not to be construed as a denial of the sanctity of contract. It is quite possible that a contract may be drawn under conditions and executed in a fashion which denies its sanctity from the beginning."

Mr. Mayer, in introducing the speaker, said that the many years of large and successful economic experience of Mr. Tinker would be of value to the entire industry, that the affiliation of such men with the business was indicative of its increasing importance and strength.

M. C. Levee, president of the Academy, proffered to Mr. Tinker the complete cooperation of Academy members. Cecil B. deMille, home from a world tour, declared that the work of the Academy is appreciated throughout the world. He added that he was one of the first to interest Mr. Tinker in the motion picture business and predicted that he would bring wisdom and stability to the business.

Other guests of honor were Richard A. Rowland, Glen Griswold, D. E. McIntire and Al Rockett.

DIALOGUE VITAL TO TALKING FILMS SAYS EUGENE WALTER, PLAYWRIGHT

Every Element of Pictorial Value Is Dependent Upon What Characters Say and How They Say It, He Declares

The following article is by Eugene Walter, a leading playwright who has been responsible for such stage successes as "The Easiest Way" and "Paid in Full." In addition to a long experience in the American theatre, Mr. Walter has spent considerable time in a close-up inspection of play writing and play making in Hollywood. His discussion is presented as an expert and interesting viewpoint upon matters which are vital to the welfare of the motion picture.—Editor's Note.

By EUGENE WALTER

The question has been asked if, in my opinion, a picture can be made, following much the same technical form as that in which a play is produced in the theatre, necessarily amplifying, to a very great degree, the realism and change of scene. In other words, if a story is compact and concerns a limited number of people, is it necessary to go to the expense of introducing irrelevant scenes of large dimensions in order to satisfy what have generally been considered motion picture necessities?

It has been pointed out to me that one of the greatest difficulties to be overcome in the picture business of today is the expense of production, and wastage of time by the elaboration of scenes, as well as the useless and interminable discussions commonly called "conferences" concerning the development of theme and story.

Must Carry Creative Inspiration

In the first place, the premise that 500 good talking pictures can be written each year is not sound; and second, it has been a rule, proven beyond a question of a doubt, that discussion and interference destroy individuality, and hence original work cannot be too greatly muddled by outside influence, and still retain its inherent merit and appeal.

The dividing line between creation and interpretation is sharp and distinct. It has been a wellknown fact that great conductors of orchestras enhance the value by interpreting the work of master musicians, but in no instance could these conductors amend, change, or rewrite these masterpieces without creating havoc. They can be made more compact by cutting, which after all is a process of editing, but fundamentally they must carry the inspiration and thought that creates the subject, and this is true in all forms of work, including the writing of books, plays, music, talking pictures, essays, poetry, or what-have-you.

So distinctly is this recognized by the producers of plays that they have willingly signed a contract with dramatists of real ability in which they agree that no changes shall be made in the text without the written consent of the author. While this contract, called a Minimum Basis Agreement of the Dramatists' Guild of the Authors' League of America, has only been in existence for five or six years, nevertheless playwrights have insisted upon this clause in their contracts for the last forty years, and when their ability has been proven, there has never been any hesitation on the part of a producing manager to willingly concede this point.

> "With the talking picture all scenes, action, feeling and, in fact, every element of pictorial value is subservient and dependent upon what the characters say and how they say it. . . . The question of dialogue cannot be regarded as a mere requisite to a talking picture; it is the bone and sinew, the very substance of the story."
> "One of the great sources of expense has been the insistence upon great mass scenes at a cost of thousands of dollars, when perhaps a scene between two people, in dialogue, in the corner of a room would put over with real drama the same thought and eliminate that false 'note' in the magnitude of an irrelevant incident. . . ."

In the silent motion picture, the director was not wholly an interpretative force. His scenario was handed to him in a form which required creative amplification, and with his camera and his players, the responsibility was placed upon him to take this raw material and weld it into a pantomimic and scenic creation, acceptable to the motion picture public. The result of this situation was that the director became omnipotent. He carried in his head the plans of his picture, because all action and movement were necessarily amplifications of a script reduced to fundamentals in the relation of a story.

As a result, he ceased to be a purely interpretative factor, and became a creative necessity. That much for the silent motion picture.

All Subservient to Dialogue

But there are no more silent pictures. They are talking pictures, and the difference is as great as a course of study in a deaf and dumb asylum and one in a school of oratory. The human being does not communicate definitely by expression of eye, face, or gesture. He has reached his predominating position in the world because he can talk, read, and write; and the minute a human being talks, his superiority on this mundane sphere is established. Nothing else that we know of can talk, or read, or write. Civilization owes itself, and the entire debt of progress, to this means of intercommunication.

Therefore, with a talking picture, all the scenes, action, feeling, and in fact every element of pictorial value is subservient and dependent upon what the characters say, and how they say it. The mood of speech supplements the mood of vision, and the mood of vision becomes automatically an accompaniment of the mood of speech. No matter how any player screens, gesticulates, or fulfills any of the other requisites of the silent picture, if the right thing isn't said at the right time, and in the right way, he or she ceases to be important or interesting. And no matter how unpleasantly such a player may look, always provided he is not repulsive in his appearances, if thoughts come from him in words and with delivery, attack, and timing that stir the fires of emotion, arouse admiration, and all the finer instincts of human life, that player will make a hit with his audience, and nobody on God's green earth is going to stop it.

Says Appeal Is Directly and Violently to Intellect, and Director Must Be Skillful and Interpretative Artist

Therefore, the question of dialogue can not be regarded as a mere requisite to a talking picture; it is the bone and sinew, the very substance of the story. A play is a story told in dialogue, and a talking picture is precisely the same thing, with the added value of knocking out the four walls of the stage, and allowing realism and a tremendous increase of scene and movement to carry the illusion—but what is said, and how it is said is the crux of the talking picture; and whether it be comedy, melodrama, or tragedy—it must be written and interpreted exactly in the same manner as it would be if put upon the stage of the theatre. Exposition of theme must be made in conflict; plot must be self-revealing in conflict; and suspense must be real, and based on the same fundamental rules that guide suspense in the making of a play.

"Too Many Cooks . . ."

The interjection of innumerable people into the production of a good piece of work, more often hurts than helps it; and the old adage of "too many cooks spoil the pot" is really applicable to the talking picture. The writer, if he is given liberty, and has ability, must find his own form of expression, and this form must be so that, when correctly directed, it assumes the proportion of dramatic performance.

One of the saddest commentaries on the talking picture is the manner of its direction. Picture after picture goes from reel to reel in a monotone. In an effort to "be natural," people escape all the punch of drama or the pointing of laughs, and only occasionally—when a stage actor or actress of unquestionable ability, or a director who understands the pointing of dialogue has the picture in hand—does the story have a fair show to be correctly presented.

If the eye were sensitive to the motion picture, surely the ear is as sensitive to the talking picture. Speeches that are sharped and flatted let down scenes as much as a half dozen fiddles out of tune in an orchestra. Tempo that is not correct is as deadly as the same in music, and no matter how glorious the setting, how magnificent the pantomime—one sour note will kick the illusion out of the picture.

One of the great sources of expense has been the insistence upon great mass scenes, at the cost of thousands of dollars, when perhaps a scene between two people in dialogue, in the corner of a room, would put over, with real drama, the same thought, and eliminate that false "note" in the magnitude of an irrelevant incident introduced for the sole purpose of spending money, for pictorial bigness, at the expense of dramatic greatness.

Concrete Appeal in Talkers

The theatre, with the spoken word, is not a new institution, and yet, from the days of the Greek drama, it hasn't fundamentally changed, either in the manner of its writing, or the manner of its interpretation; and it is an acknowledged precedent that the successful play must make the audience an integral part of the story, by firing its imagination, so that it loses itself in the interest of the drama being enacted before it, irrespective of its character or mood. What happens between acts or scenes, or lapses of time, does not confuse an audience, but accelerates that valuable imagination; and by the correct writing of dialogue, the playwright and the players make that audience a part of the illusion—take them out of the theatre and place them in the story which is being shown before them. Immediately they are called back to the theatre—then the illusion, if not entirely dispelled is, to a certain extent, made less convincing.

The silent picture, no matter how gorgeously it was done, was a vehicle to stimulate impression; but the talking picture has a concrete dramatic appeal. In other words, the appeal of the silent motion picture was to the eye, and such emotions as could be aroused by the eye; while that of the talking picture appeals violently and directly to the intellect. Emotions arouse the activity of mentality, stir the soul, and have all the elements of understanding that the human being has become cognizant of since he has been able to form words from noises that come from his throat.

Limitations Removed

All this leads, then, to the practical proposition of the form of telling a talking picture, and of changing that form so that the drama will remain between the people vitally interested and so that irrelevant scenes, placed merely for pictorial value of big effects, will be eliminated as no longer having the value of novelty, and which actually hold up the development of the story, and let down the interest of the auditor.

This does not mean that every advantage should not be taken of the camera's ability to change the scene, providing it is not overworked, and does not intrude upon the value of dialogue written in conflict to reveal plot, which stimulates the audience's imagination.

The talking picture has done away with the limitations—and the very crude limitations—of the proscenium arch, and the stage with an approximate depth of thirty feet, as a setting for the telling of the story. It has cast aside the daubing of bad scenic painters, and in its place has opened up a tremendous latitude for realism of scene; but beyond that it has not changed, nor will it change, the fundamental necessities of writing the spoken word in the form of dramatic dialogue, bringing conflict, change of mood, tempo, and tone.

> "* * * The appeal of the silent motion picture was to the eye and such emotions as could be aroused by the eye; while that of the talking picture is violently and directly to the intellect."
> "* * * The creative element so necessary to the silent motion picture director has been taken from him and he should be first, last and all the time a skillful, interpretative artist. No director of the spoken word can rise any higher than the words allow him, but he can sink infinitely deeper."

The first act of a play always needs the skillful exposition of plot. With the talking picture this is much easier, but once the drama is established, and the conflict (whether it be in comedy or otherwise) between persons, presents a problem which is to be solved with the final reel. The same rules of writing, as far as these people are concerned, obtain in the talking picture as those which have been used for so many centuries in the stage play.

Now when it comes to directors, the lamentable condition to be considered is that many of them have confined their training wholly to the eye and they do not understand nor sympathize with the requirements of the ear. Punch, drama, and laughs are lost because of a common level of tone and tempo which they, unfortunately, believe to be natural but which, again unfortunately, becomes very depressing when given in over-doses.

In the talking picture, as in the play, there is a rhythm of tone—a crescendo and a diminuendo—which should not be overlooked, and every advantage should be taken of the emotional possibilities of tone, in order to get the punch of the picture over. The recording machines are able to do this, and there is no more excuse for a flat performance on the talking screen than there is for a flat performance on the theatre stage.

Writing and Directing

This comes down, then, to a matter of writing and directing. In the silent motion picture, the director was not entirely dependent upon the script, but there is no man, director or playwright, who can improvise dialogue for every situation, have it properly rehearsed and delivered. It must be on paper, its possibilities studied, and every advantage taken for its dramatic presentation.

In other words, the creative element so necessary to the silent motion picture director has been taken from him, and he should be first, last, and all the time, a skillful interpretative artist. No director of the spoken word can rise any higher than the words allow him, but he can sink infinitely deeper. To be out of tune is as fatal in this regard as it is in any other art which is communicated to the intellect and emotions through the sense of hearing.

I might go further, and indicate that a quick scene between characters can be written, and with interesting conflict, that will span and take care of many of the expensive scenes which are now paraded before the audience, and which will give zip and punch and dramatic force to the story—but one can't have his cake and eat it. Either the picture is written as a talking picture, with all other elements subservient to speech, or else it is written as a pictorial effort, with the speech of the characters subservient to the picture.

In other words, if the latter is the case, we would be right back to the point of speaking titles instead of having them printed; but if the former is the case, then the story must be told in dialogue and all action be subservient to, or dependent upon that dialogue and the manner of its delivery.

The more an audience is made to play with the people on the screen, or on the stage, the more intense is the interest and the further it is taken out of its real surroundings in the theatre—and when it can be lifted entirely from the consciousness of the fact that it is sitting in a theatre chair, and become absorbed in that which is going on in front of them as a thing of life and living events, then the result is a positive success of magnificent proportions.

The implication has been repeated that because of the change from silent to sound pictures the director has been deprived of a part of the importance attached to his former status.

Interpretation Requires Genius

It is pointed out that he must follow the script and therefore being relieved of creative responsibility he no longer occupies the same vital position as in the days of the silent picture. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, the contrary seems to me to be the case.

Interpretation of works of art—musical or otherwise—requires genius of the highest order; such artists as Paderewski, Toscanini, Belasco, Sir Henry Irving, Caruso, and a long list of others equally as famous, as gifted and inspired as any composer or writer, must be credited with the superlative talent that is surely theirs. The director of the talking picture is intensely more important than in the old silent days. With abbreviated rehearsals such as are necessary in the talking pictures, the responsibility of definite casting before the players are really tried in the parts and the rapid change of scene to fit the disclosure of the story told in dialogue, enormously increase the difficulty of his task to attain the right pitch, tempo, and relationship. Then add the photographic problems and his task is made many times as difficult and complicated as staging an ordinary play with weeks of rehearsals, limitations of scenes, and the illusion of stage lights as compared to the relentless truth of the camera. No director of talking pictures need think he has or is DISTINGUISHED VISITORS. Sam Sax, production chief of the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn, as host to Doris Warner, daughter of H. M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers; and Diana Churchill (right), daughter of Winston Churchill, the British statesman.

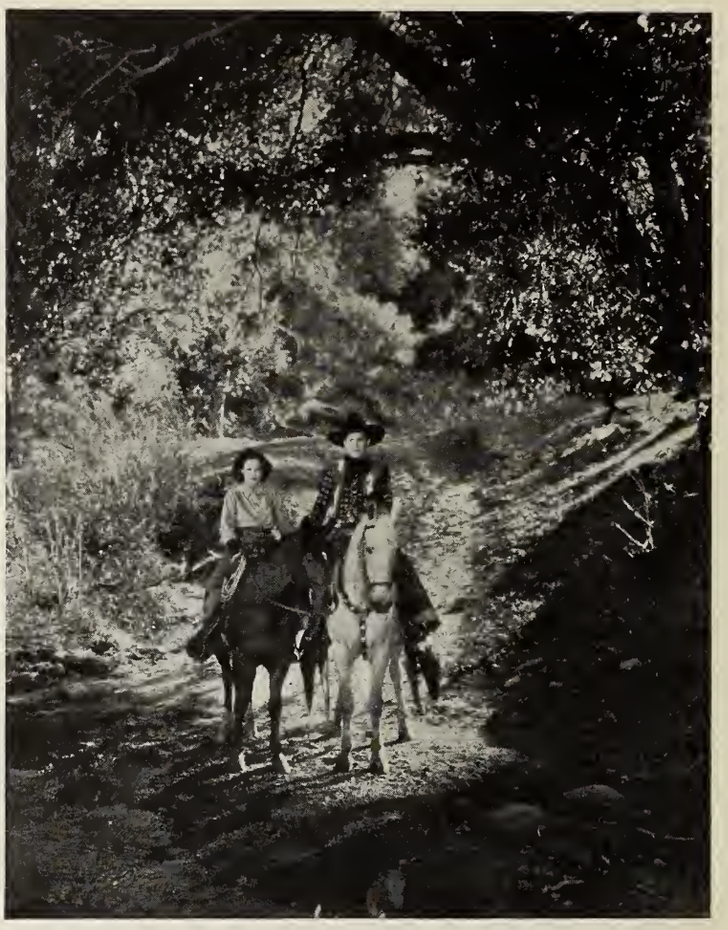
PREMIERE-ING. (Right) Mary Pickford and Louella Parsons, commentator on motion picture affairs for the Hearst newspapers, arriving for the Western premiere of United Artists' "Arrowsmith," Samuel Goldwyn production based on the novel by Sinclair Lewis, and previously given its world premiere in New York.



SNEAKING HOME. Sneaking a look, at any rate. They are Barbara Stanwyck, Columbia star, and hubby Frank Fay, arriving in New York for a brief stay following Miss Stanwyck's completion of "Shopworn."

MAID O' MEXICO. And one of extraordinary lineage, too! Christened Dolores, her last name is Calles, recalling to mind the name of the former president of Mexico and inviting one to wonder what the connection is, if any. Miss Calles has become a screen player—a comedienne, despite the spirit of this portrait, making her debut in Educational's Mermaid Comedies.

MODERN FISHING. An advance demonstration, showing Ruth Hall, Warner player, over the Pacific in the blimp, "Volunteer." Settling the ship close to the water, the pilot killed the motors, and Miss Hall took out her tackle for a sally at the tuna and baracuda.

TAKING LOVE FOR A RIDE. In the good old Western way, before the automobile and modern gangster gave other meanings to both of these media of transport. Showing Ken Maynard, star of Tiffany's "Whistlin' Dan," and his feminine lead, Joyzelle.

LOOKING HERSELF OVER. A couple of young screen players named Phyllis Crane thus proved to be charming no matter how you pick up your magazines. Miss Crane is one of Educational's featured Mermaids.

STARRED. (Below) Study of a new star, Kay Francis, who has been assigned her first name-role for the screen by Warner Brothers. Miss Francis will have as her initial starring vehicle a production entitled "A Dangerous Brunette"—the Viennese photographer Ference apparently offering this mood by way of contrast.

DOUBLE CLOSEUP. One by the cinematographer, and the other—the one you see here. While the motion camera (shown at right) was shooting Marian Marsh, Warner player, the still photographer did a little kibitzing, with the above result.

DOUBLE EXPOSURE. Another bit of this issue's penchant for two-time photography—here presenting a new portrait (or shall we say portraits?) of Joan Crawford, M-G-M star.

SIGNED. (Below) A new Tiffany player whom we are advised to classify as of the "ethereal type." She is Charlotte Henry, who, though rather a newcomer to the screen, has been steadily claiming more and more important roles. She has been placed under contract by Tiffany for a part in "Lena Rivers."

OPPOSITE NEW STAR. George Brent, who has been cast opposite Joan Blondell in her first starring vehicle for Warner Brothers, "Miss Pinkerton of Scotland Yard."

VACATION OVER. Janet Gaynor, Fox star, arriving in New York harbor following a two-months vacation touring Europe. She is shown with her husband, Lydell Peck, and her mother, Mrs. Laura Gaynor, who accompanied her on the trip. She is scheduled to begin soon on a new picture.

THE "ACT OF GOD" BABY NOW. Helen Hayes, long a stage favorite who made her screen debut recently in M-G-M's "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," and her daughter Mary. Miss Hayes is now starring on the stage in New York, but is expected to continue her screen career.

MEYDAM IN U.S. TO DECIDE FATE OF UFA CIRCUIT AND FILM SALES

General Manager for Distribution Will Study Educational And Non-Theatrical Market; France, Not U. S. Important

William Meydam, Ufa executive now in New York from Berlin, soon will determine the nature of Ufa's future activities in the American market. This action follows four years of "pioneering," since sound started, in the theatre field in the United States and in the distribution of German talkers, during which time an occasional Ufa feature has been distributed nationally by a domestic distributor.

Prior to sound, Ufa had made noticeable inroads in the market here with silent features produced at Berlin, and in which English titles later were inserted for America. Since sound, however, the market in the United States for foreign talkers has been limited chiefly to showings at "little theatres" and in foreign neighborhoods of key cities. Ufa has opened several theatres throughout the country for exclusive screening of German talkers.

Non-Theatrical Field Emphasized

The fate of these theatres and of the company's distribution structure here will be determined by Mr. Meydam, who is general manager of distribution for Ufa and in charge of company affairs outside of Germany. In any event, it is expected that Ufa's future activities in the American market will include wholesale participation in the educational and non-theatrical fields, and with this thought in mind, Mr. Meydam will spend considerable time studying these possibilities. The company has established a reputation abroad for the educational short reels made by it, and in view of the shortage of non-theatrical pictures, which is admittedly impairing progress in developing an educational market in the United States, Ufa executives feel that an invasion of that phase of motion pictures may be advisable.

Interviewed at the Hotel Roosevelt upon his arrival in New York, Mr. Meydam denied that the company is contemplating a complete cessation of American distributing activities, as had been reported. His visit, he said, is not to "junk" the distribution setup here, but to establish proper channels through which it might work. Whether this will be done by further expansion along lines of independent state right operation, or by a deal with a national distributor has not been determined.

"We do not know what we are going to do," he said, "because we do not know what is to be done. However, we are not going out of the United States market."

At this point, Mr. Meydam turned to a discussion of economics and the American film industry. Meydam believes that companies here are suffering from "share in the head." "You cannot make pictures when financial troubles are hovering overhead," he said.

"Conditions in Germany, as is well known, are very tight. However, good pictures will draw plenty to the box office. Theatregoers are shopping more than ever before and will not attend the screening of material which is bad, or in-between. Smaller theatres in Germany, too, are suffering more than larger houses which are better able to pay for elaborate programs around which they build up a strong appeal for patronage."

"Ufa's condition in Germany is healthy," he said. "We have 110 strategically located theatres—the next largest circuit has 35 houses—and we have no financial troubles to bother us. The banker's influence is negligible, with the German Bank holding but a small interest. All other entanglements and influence of banking institutions were eliminated quite some time ago when we repaid money which they had advanced. We paid for, without borrowing, all costs entailed in the changeover from silent to sound operation, both production and theatre.

3,500 Sound Houses in Germany

"In Germany there are 3,500 sound theatres and only 200 silent theatres operating. Theatres closed total 1,300 among which are hundreds of antiquated structures.

"The United States, from the standpoint of worldwide distribution, is not as important to Ufa today as is France, which represents the largest single market for our product outside of Germany itself. Ufa produces pictures in French and German and distributes on a wide scale in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Bulgaria, Germany, Hungary, Poland, South America, the Balkans, Denmark, several in Russia, and in Japan, Dutch East Indies, Norway, Spain, Italy, Egypt, Luxembourg, Portugal, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Austria, and elsewhere.

"We do not dub-in French dialogue to German prints, but reconstruct the entire production machinery, producing a new version in which French players appear."

Capitalized at $15,000,000, Ufa paid a 6 per cent dividend last year. According to Mr. Meydam, the company gets back its production costs and a profit on product distributed in Germany alone, where last year the gross jumped 6,000,000 marks over the previous year.

Adverse Decision May Bring Appeal in Canadian Action

It is quite openly stated in Toronto that an appeal to the Canadian supreme court will be entered by the accused in the event that an adverse decision is rendered against the three individuals and 15 organizations recently tried at Toronto on charges of alleged trade conspiracy and alleged combine practice.

The decision is expected to be handed down by Justice Garrow on March 7.

Shanghai Theatres Suffer

Six of the 25 Shanghai theatres equipped for sound are closed due to location in the area affected by hostilities, and the others are open on afternoons only by reason of the martial law regulations now in effect in the Chinese City, it is reported by Julean Arnold, commercial attache of the department of commerce in Shanghai.

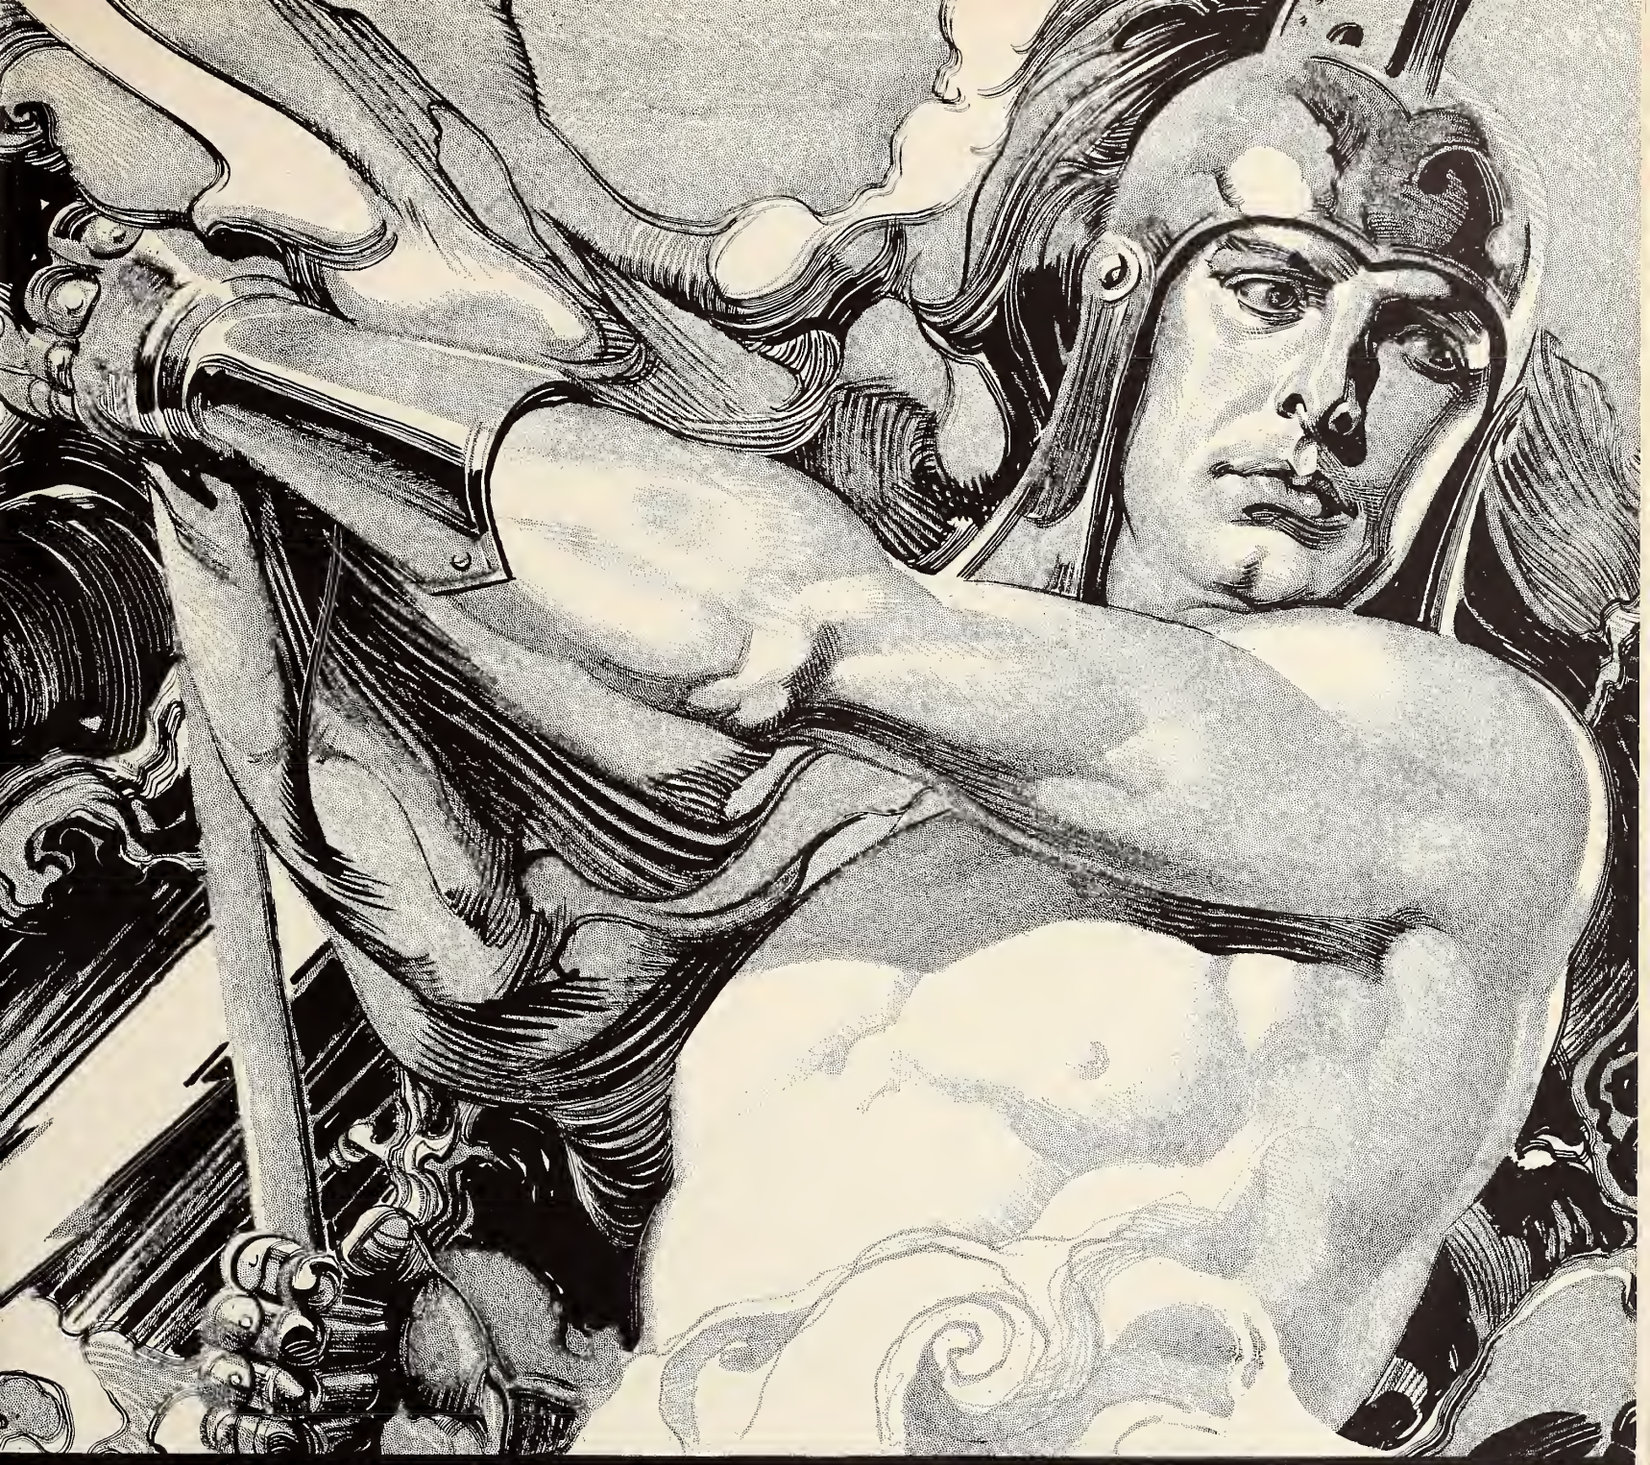
desired to take a backward step. It is a tremendous advance, hemmed in with innumerable difficulties, problems, irritations, and complexity of duties. If he had a big job in the silent days, it assumed herculean proportions when sound became a perfected adjunct to his profession. There is as great genius in interpretative art as in the so-called creative art and frequently those who compose and write are ignorant of a thousand hidden beauties in the text until the director brings them to consciousness. But the ear and the eye must coordinate in perfect harmony.

When men reach this stage of training talking pictures will be of a high standard, but when the ear is sacrificed for the indulgence of the eye or vice versa, disaster and boredom will be the inevitable result.

Arliss Film Opens In 150 Cities Feb. 20



The George Arliss Warner vehicle, "The Man Who Played God," will be shown in 150 key cities on February 20, national release date.

Major Albert Warner, temporarily in charge of Warner-First National distribution, received at the home office a copy of a highly commendatory letter, originally sent to Jack L. Warner at the Coast plant, concerning "The Man Who Played God." The letter came from Mrs. Lynn C. Denny, chairman of the film division of the California Federation of Women's Clubs.

The letter read in part: "A magnificent picture that inspires my sincere admiration for the ideals which prompted its filming. . . . I have always been confident that when the public demands them, better pictures will be produced." The chairman states that she asked several representatives of various women's organizations to indicate their reactions. They said in part: "The ideal picture that we as mothers and club women have been looking forward to for years." "A family picture that we recommend wholeheartedly." "A flawless picture—the cleanest, most human, most delightful entertainment ever screened."

Moe Silver, Warner theatre executive in charge of the western territory, left the home office Wednesday for Cleveland, Chicago and Milwaukee to check on activities for "The Man Who Played God," opening there February 19.

The next Arliss picture is expected to get under way at the Coast studio very shortly. It is expected the film will be an adaptation of the Clare Kummer stage play, "A Successful Calamity."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Certain singers, popularly known as "crooners," and including Bing Crosby, Russ Columbo, et al, are unable to perform successfully on a theatre stage without the aid of a microphone hooked to an amplification system which embraces two dynamic speakers set on each side of the proscenium arch.

The installation, made especially for the occasion by Erpi at a cost of $500—and upwards—amplifies the voice of the crooner who controls the volume by signaling to an operator in the projection booth. Signals include touching a handkerchief, ruffling the hair, thrusting a hand in the pocket, etc.

When Tom Mix's recent illness reached a stage of seriousness, Universal ceased taking contracts from exhibitors.

The company claims there are 6,109 contracts for Mix Westerns now on the company's books. The absolute maximum that any picture could play is from 8,000 to 8,500, it is said.

An interesting feature of the book is that neither author wrote a word of it. The philosophic dialogues are stenographic reports of actual conversations.

Following a request by President Sam Katz, Publix theatre operators in the field have declared a moratorium on long distance calls for the Lenten period.

From a department store at Dayton, Ohio, we get the idea for a new kind of moratorium, and one which should benefit the picture industry, at least a little.

"How about a moratorium on rumors?" asks the Elder & Johnston store, which recently purchased space for a large display newspaper ad in which that concern authored an interesting idea centered about "the terrific harm that rumor can have on institutions and a community."

The store, apparently, also has been the target for ruthless rumor mongers. "Right now," the ad states, "we deny each and every rumor about us (even those we haven't heard)."

Continually bothered by what he describes as "doorway chiselers," a rather ingenious theatre manager had printed a number of cards, reading:

"Though they roar, yet they shall not PASS"
—Jeremiah 5:22
"The wicked shall no more PASS"
—Nahum 1:15
"This generation shall not PASS"
—Mark 12:30
"Suffer not a man to PASS"
—Judges 3:28
"Thou shalt not PASS"
—Numbers 30:18
"None shall ever PASS"
—Isaiah 35:15
"SO HE PAID HIS FARE AND WENT"
—Jonah 1:13

The cashier and doorman were plentifully supplied with the cards for distribution to those who asked to pass, and from that time on, all paid their "fare"—or else!

JACQUELINE LOGAN, Georgie Jessel, Arthur Hornblow and the Four Wallace Brothers attracted a goodly crowd last week to the AMPA luncheon at Sardi's. The Wallace Brothers sang; Miss Logan asked for reciprocity between America and England; Jessel kidded and Hornblow talked about writers and Ben Hecht. Ed Finney was the interlocutor.

Miss Logan, now in New York from London, where she is directing and starring in pictures for BIP, hopes that within six months we in New York will either be British-film conscious or unconscious. She has been away from our shores for quite some time and appears to enjoy London, where she has become a full-fledged producer—a long way from understudying in Shubert's "Floradora" revival back in 1920.

Hornblow explained that a cut on his chin was received while standing between Samuel Goldwyn and Ben Hecht. He described Hollywood and production, during which a stirring plea was voiced on behalf of the screen writer. Hornblow, who is chief production executive for Goldwyn at United Artists, flayed the Hechts of the writing profession for their unkindliness toward the Movie Capital and called "Once in a Lifetime" a "literary prostitution."

At this point, some one asked Hornblow what a studio supervisor does, and the meaning of the title.

"Hollywood's name for a supervisor is 'patsy,'" he replied. "He takes the rap if a picture is bad and he's unheard of if it is successful. The supervisor dies young."

Evidently, the radio business is having its "infancy" troubles, for Jessel predicted that some day soon it, too, will have a "Once in a Lifetime."

Ad chiefs and copy writers of film companies should be interested in the results of a contest to be conducted by "Advertising Age." This publication seeks an official definition of the word "advertising" for inclusion in the standard dictionary, and, in this respect, its editors point out that "the main trouble with advertising right now, in the belief of some of its most eminent practitioners, is that for a lot of people, it is just another word in the dictionary!"

Gene Clifford, formerly with the New York Times, and known quite well in New York picture circles, has opened headquarters at 45 West 45th Street, where he will conduct a public relations service.

Current economy measures at studios do not even begin to compare with those of a certain producer of an earlier age, who is known to have stayed long into evening, after all studio workers had departed, in order to salvage bakers' delicacies which had been used in producing pie-throwing sequences. The pastry, and "prop" sandwiches, too, were usually found next morning in the producer's pantry at home.

He collected bent nails and hammered them straight for further use and, according to a former associate of this producer who now is with a national company in New York, there was one incident which widely eclipsed all others.

The scene called for cabaret props including champagne buckets with the indispensable cracked ice set about the wine. The producer sternly refused to purchase ice and instead used glass from broken milk bottles!

Today, this producer is living comfortably on the income of an estimated fortune of $3,000,000—and he labors no more!

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR JANUARY

IT was no less an observer of public taste in fiction than H. L. Mencken who said that "a good character sketch is always a good story." The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Emma," further exploiting Marie Dressler, conforms to this prescription of a "good story," besides adding that requisite of plot that makes for the action of the cinema. "Hell Divers," on the other hand, is of the "thriller" type, though not restricted, of course, to the limitations of so specific a class. These widely divergent types, emanating from the same studio, were listed by the key box offices as the leading "draw pictures" of January. The vogue of the "shock film" made Paramount's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" January's successor to Universal's "Frankenstein"—in the terms of the box office. Then M-G-M further entered the month's champion roster by contributing "Mata Hari" with Greta Garbo plus Ramon Novarro. Fairly serious stuff, all these, which Fox met again with that representative of "sweetness and light"—Janet Gaynor, whose "Delicious," co-starring Charles Farrell, continued its leadership over from December. On similar lines, as to emotional appeal, is First National's "Union Depot," which rounds out the list of 1932's first champions.

EIGHT PROBLEMS OF INDEPENDENT WILL COME UP AT ALLIED MEETING

SMPE Taking Up Release Prints and House Operation

Problems confronting the industry in regard to release prints and theatre operating practices will receive special consideration during the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held in Washington, D. C., May 9-12. Another session will be devoted to photographic problems, according to O. M. Glunt, chairman of the papers committee.

It is believed by the society that the poor quality of release prints has complicated the work of the projectionist and has affected theatre attendance. The papers committee plans to secure authorities to present papers on this general subject. Leaders in theatre operation will also be secured to deliver papers before that session.

A number of changes have been tentatively planned for the meeting this year. There will be no business sessions on the opening morning of the convention, this being reserved for registration and organization work. On Monday afternoon attention will be given to business and committee reports. The theatre operating practices session will be held Tuesday afternoon. A session will be held Wednesday morning at the department of commerce where government officials will speak. A House visit is being planned for Wednesday afternoon. The Thursday morning session will be confined to the problems of release prints. The photographic session will be held Thursday afternoon. For the evening sessions, it is planned to show previews of motion pictures Monday and Tuesday evenings. A session will also be held Tuesday evening at the bureau of standards. The semi-annual banquet will be held Wednesday evening in the Gold Room of the Wardman-Park Hotel. Entertainment has been arranged, with golfing and tennis facilities available.

Peace Expected in Union Studio Tilt

The union labor situation in Hollywood this week took a turn for the better, following the submission of a plan by IATSE officials to studio heads and producers who have been fighting for a reduction in wage scales of various studio craftsmen, including cameramen, painters, stage hands, assistants, carpenters and others. Under the plan, union help would accept a reduction of 50 cents a day, equivalent to $3 per week, on condition that all other conditions are agreed upon, including working hours. It is understood in Hollywood that producers are agreeing to demands made by union labor that the salaries of writers, actors and directors be reduced.

Steffes Says Hays, Lightman and Other MPTOA Officers Are Being Invited to Detroit Convention March 8 to 10

Eight leading problems of independent exhibitors are cited by W. A. Steffes, president of Allied States Association, in a bulletin circulated to exhibitor organizations not affiliated with Allied, with assurance that discussions of all eight subjects will be included in the forums of Allied's national convention at Detroit, March 8, 9 and 10. Steffes emphasized in his bulletin that membership in Allied is not essential to participation in the Detroit discussions, and announced that Will H. Hays, as president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, together with M. A. Lightman and other officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, would be extended invitations to attend.

Mr. Hays, who is now in Hollywood, said he had received no invitation to attend the Allied convention. Uncertainty as to the length of time he would be required to remain on the West Coast prevented him from saying whether or not he would attend in the event an invitation was received. Mr. Lightman, now in New York preparing for MPTOA's convention at Washington, next month, likewise said that no personal invitation had been received, but indicated some likelihood of attending in the event one was forthcoming.

Eight Problems Named

The eight problems confronting independents, as listed by Steffes, are: protection, percentage, contracts, poor pictures, elimination of producers from exhibition by disposal of theatres to independents, theatre taxation, block booking, double features, and music tax and copyright statutes.

Steffes' bulletin urged that various officers of the MPTOA personally lead their delegations of independent exhibitor members to Allied's Detroit meeting. Several of these officers said that they did not consider the bulletin to be a personal invitation to attend, inasmuch as copies of the bulletin were made available for publication in the trade press. However, some of the MPTOA leaders declared that if they received personal invitations they would attend the Detroit meeting of Allied.

Richey Defends Price Cutting

Exception to the condemnation of price cutting made by the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, is taken by H. M. Richey, business manager of Allied, who defends the small exhibitor forced to adopt this policy as a last resort. Richey said that the subject of price cutting and discussions of the factors responsible for it will be important phases of convention business at Detroit. He issued an invitation to the Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware organization to send representatives to the meetings to present their solution of the price-cutting problem.

Richey's statement attributed price cutting to several factors, among them being current economic conditions which require lower charges, by admission reductions, double featuring, and bargain programs in prior-run circuit theatres. Richey contended that elaborate stage shows and personal appearances of stars on the same programs with first-run pictures make it impossible for the small exhibitor to maintain his former admission price levels.

Skouras on Coast; Caballero in Firm; Alperson Assigned

Arrival in Los Angeles of the Skouras brothers on Monday will mark the first active participation of the new operators in 550 Fox properties which were turned over recently to the Skourases for management. It is expected price revisions will be made and new policies decided upon for the entire circuit, including the possible switch of vaudeville from many theatres now operating on a combination policy.

Charles Caballero, former managing director of the Roxy theatre, New York, has affiliated himself with the Skouras circuit in an executive capacity with the purchase of an interest in Central New York Theatres Corporation, operating company for the former up-state Schine theatres. The theatres recently passed to the management of Skouras Bros.

Spyros P. Skouras has officially announced the association of Edward L. Alperson, formerly Warner general sales manager, in a general executive capacity, according to Charles P. Carroll, connected with Skouras Brothers in New York.

In Milwaukee last week, Spyros Skouras announced that no employees of Fox Milwaukee theatres would be dismissed under the Skouras operation.

New Jersey Allied Launching Co-ops

Cooperative film and theatre supply buying will be launched soon by Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey. There are now 49 members of the cooperative supply buying group, which will become active immediately. Film buying activities will be discussed within the next few weeks.

The New Jersey Allied unit opened New York headquarters at 303 West 42 Street during the week, and held open house there for New York exhibitors on Tuesday, eight joining. A delegation of 25 will attend the Allied national convention.

LIGHTMAN AND STEFFES DOUBT MERGER MOVE AT CONVENTIONS

But Presidents of MPTOA and Allied States Say Effort to Consolidate Exhibitor Organizations Is Still Probable

"No company is big enough to ignore concerted exhibitor action this year," declared M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in predicting that the organization's convention this year would be "the most significant and representative" MPTOA gathering ever held. Lightman said that 25 exhibitor units would be represented at the convention, which will be held in Washington, March 14, 15 and 16. This representation would be almost double that in attendance at last year's meeting.

Lightman said that weighty exhibitor opinion inclines to the belief that significant action of importance to the entire industry will materialize at the Washington convention. He said the opinion is based on the guarantee of a hearing and free speech for every exhibitor who attends the convention and on the fact that "the condition of the industry today is such that any real, constructive effort on the part of exhibitors must receive the proper attention of all factions."

Consolidation Move Held Probable

Both Lightman and Al Steffes, president of Allied States Association, which convenes in Detroit, March 8-10, said that no discussion of a consolidation of the two national exhibitor organizations had been held this year, or was expected to be introduced during the conventions, but both believe such a move to be still probable. A consolidation of the two organizations was discussed last year but was rejected by Allied members when the proposal was submitted to them at their national convention.

"No merger has been discussed this year," Lightman said, "and I do not expect the subject to be brought up during the convention, although I believe such a move to be still practical and probable."

"I know nothing of a merger movement contemplated to occur at this year's conventions," Steffes said. "Nevertheless, if this subject is brought up on the convention floor it will receive proper and due consideration from all theatre owners present."

More National in Scope

This year's MPTOA convention will be more national in scope than any previous one, Lightman said. In addition to the attendance of regularly affiliated units, several non-member organizations will send delegations this year to participate in discussions on the formation of a new national organization, and representatives of various other exhibitor groups which never before attended a national convention of this organization will also send representatives. Among the delegations to attend will be those from Dallas, Cincinnati, Columbus, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Buffalo. In addition, at least five more state units than were represented last year will attend.

The MPTO of Connecticut, newly affiliated unit, will send 15 delegates, among whom will be Edward Levy, secretary and business manager of the association, who will have a place on the convention program. Attorney Levy will speak on the subject of "Elementary Law That Every Exhibitor Should Know." The convention business program will cover every phase of industry activities, Lightman said. Prominent on the program will be discussions concerning reorganization of the directorate of the MPTOA on the basis of representation of five independents to one circuit member of the board. The plan to be voted on calls for a directorate which would be composed of 20 to 25 independent exhibitors and five circuit representatives. It is this reapportionment of independent representation which Lightman believes is responsible for the new and increased attendance in prospect for the coming convention.

Open Forums Assured

"This convention will be one of free speech," Lightman said. "Any exhibitor can come to it prepared to speak his mind on any subject he may choose at any of the open forums. He will be assured of a courteous hearing unless his remarks are patently destructive in character.

"Great significance attaches to whatever action may be taken at this year's convention as any real, constructive effort now on the part of exhibitors must receive careful and proper attention from all factions within the industry. The condition of the industry is of such a nature today that no company is big enough to ignore a constructive move launched by a representative exhibitor body."

Among the subjects which will receive major consideration at the business sessions will be block booking, protection and zoning, score charges, sales practices and contracts. Convention discussions on block booking, it is believed, will be marked by repetition of a plea for the defeat of the Brookhart bill made by Lightman this week. Lightman contends that circuits would be benefited by passage of the Brookhart bill, and that the present method of buying is preferable to the situation which would be created by enactment of the measure. Lightman favors a form of block booking with cancellation privileges provided.

Warns of Federal Control

"It is enough in itself to reject any such proposal (as the Brookhart bill) inasmuch as it invites governmental control and supervision of our industry," Lightman said. "In addition, independent exhibitors would be at a serious disadvantage if they were obliged to buy one picture at a time, and particularly after the picture is made, as circuits would be able to play them more quickly and control their availability to independents. Also, complete control of protection would be passed to circuits, as nothing could prevent distributors from selling circuits quickly and delaying sales to independents in any manner that they choose. Likewise, film costs would be increased tremendously to cover the extra selling costs involved in selling pictures singly. Rentals would also be boosted by the increase in competitive buying each time a picture was made."

"I believe," he added, "that neighborhood theatres and small town exhibitors should be permitted to cancel a certain number of socalled 'clucks', racial and undesirable features. It is the only sane and sensible manner in which any stability can be assured an independent exhibitor."

Summing up, Lightman said that his position in regard to block booking was that he stood "unalterably opposed to a system of enforcing 100 per cent contracts tying-in of both features and shorts. Further, I am just as opposed to the enforcing of a 100 per cent sale of a block of pictures for an entire season without a reasonable elimination clause."

MPTO Meets at Washington March 10; No Company Big Enough to Ignore Concerted Exhibitor Action: Lightman

1932 Budget For Copyright Bureau Voted Unanimously

Approval, without reductions, of the 1932 budget of the Copyright Protection Bureau was unanimously voted by the general sales managers of all national distributors at a meeting in New York this week. The appropriation will be the same as was available to the Bureau last year.

In spite of efforts of national distributors to effect economies in expenditures at this time, no serious opposition to the Bureau's budget was encountered. Indications are that the generally effective work of the Bureau's investigators in gathering evidence against violators of copyright decided the sales executives against curtailing the Bureau's operations by reducing the 1932 budget. Investigation of picture holdovers and the falsification of box office returns, arising out of unauthorized exhibitions, were particularly numerous and effective during the year. The continuance and desirability of percentage engagements is regarded by many sales executives as being dependent to an important degree upon the alertness of the Bureau and its operatives. The psychological effect of curtailing the Bureau's activities, it was believed, would lead to increased violations of copyright by minimizing the chances of detection of irregularities, and a reduced budget was also regarded by the sales executives as being inadvisable for this reason.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE response from organized groups interested in the development of the "School and Screen" plan has been matched with magnificent interest by exhibitors all over the country. Out of the influx of mail a new and extraordinary highlight has presented itself. From one community after another we have word that the individual clubs, feeling their own helplessness in influencing citywide audiences, have decided to merge, with the result that now we have a whole new crop of Better Films Councils, Leagues of Clubs, Federation of Clubs, functioning with a fine pulling together of the oars. This presents a brand new situation. Where the voice of one small group, crying out in behalf of worthwhile films for children or family audiences, was a voice crying in the wilderness, the concerted chorus of voices becomes a clarion note that cannot go unheard.

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage young people to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

54 Club Groups Represented

Within the past week, for instance, the women's clubs of Westchester County, New York, at a meeting to discuss better pictures in their theatres, succeeded in gathering together the executive officers of thirty-three clubs, at a meeting at which the editor of this department was asked to be the guest speaker. This group decided that it would be increased power to invite, as members of their working committee, representatives of the men's clubs of the same territory, presenting the formidable total of fifty-four established club groups in Westchester. Members of a subcommittee were appointed to call on the local theatre men proposing "School and Screen's" plan. It would have to be a very dull business man who would ignore a proposition from so impressive a potential audience.

Last week at a luncheon of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, this same plan was presented to the men who are the professional interpreters of motion pictures to the exhibitor and, through them, to their public. In this instance, too, there was an awakening to the possibilities in this whole field of action. The exploitation men were quick to see that a new agency had arisen which may be reckoned with successfully. In both instances these influences, like powerful broadcasting stations, are sending out messages. It remains for the final adjustment to bring these wave lengths into harmony, and when that is accomplished a new era in public responsibility for the support of better pictures will have dawned.

Three Productions

To club women, as well as to those representatives of the motion picture industry, ready to advance this whole program in behalf of the finer pictures, there is a cheering message in this month's productions. The pictures selected for the "School and Screen" service for February are: "Washington, the Man and the Capital," a Warner Brothers educational feature commemorating the Bi-Centennial of George Washington; Paramount's "Broken Lullaby," which was released under the title "The Man I Killed"; and Warners' outstanding film drama, "The Man Who Played God." The first of these lends itself ordinarily with fine grace to "School and Screen" service. The other two have nothing of educational value in themselves, if one considers educational value simply in terms of history, geography and mathematics.

But we believe these pictures to have an educational value of decided importance to those young people who are our adult audiences of tomorrow. They are notable examples of splendid cinematic achievement. They are unusual examples of the art of directing; of restraint, of characterization and artistic detail. They stand in contrast to the cheaper and more common productions. They are examples of good taste in the art of motion picture making. We believe that these things should be pointed out to young people; that teachers, parents, club women, exhibitors, and all those interested in the building up of intelligent audiences for worthwhile pictures, should be in a position to point out to young people those elements which go into the making of the best things of the screen.

Moray Reports Demand For Vitaphone Washington Short

Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, returned to the Warner home office, reports unusual demand for the Washington Bi-Centennial short, "Washington, the Man and the Capital."

Moray says Congressman Sol Bloom, heading the celebration committee, informed him that after viewing the short, he addressed a letter to each of the 3,700 Bi-Centennial committees, in which he said, "no local . . . celebration can be considered complete without 'Washington, the Man and the Capital,' made by Warner Brothers."

The Vitaphone two-reel picture will be shown at all Warner metropolitan New York theatres during the week of February 18, which date will mark the opening of the Bi-Centennial to be appropriately celebrated throughout the country.

Mrs. McGoldrick Addresses Forum Of 400 N. Y. Clubs

At a motion picture forum discussion, held under the auspices of the City Federation of Women's Clubs at the Hotel Astor, on Monday February 15, Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's "School and Screen," was a guest speaker on that subject. William Orr, scenario editor of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, presented as his topic, "Plot and Story in Scenario Making." Following both addresses there was a lively discussion by the members present, each one of whom was a motion picture chairman of the club she represented.

The City Federation totals 400 clubs in its membership, one-half of which have active motion picture chairmen. These, with their club's executive officers, attend the Federation's monthly conferences. Among those groups taking part in this conference were:

"Washington, The Man and the Capital"

Warner Bros.

Leading Players: Clarence Whitehill, as George Wahington; Grace Van Auker as Martha Washington.

In this year of the George Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration every public school, club and organized group is interested in films that commemorate Washington, the Man. Warner Brothers has filled this need in a particular way with its excellent short subject, "Washington, the Man and the Capital," a two-reel feature which has been made with specific care and artistic detail. Clarence Whitehill, a baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, because of his striking resemblance to the First President, was selected for the role of George Washington. He re-enacts in the picture the historical scenes that took place at Mount Vernon, particularly during those days when Alexander Hamilton was pressing upon Washington the need of his acceptance of the first presidency of the New Republic. Students of history remember that the Commander of the Colonial armies having retired to the peace of his home on the Potomac, was loath to accept this great new responsibility. The scene leading up to Washington's decision is a most dramatic and impressive bit of historical story. The second half of this patriotic picture presents the visioned city of Washington as the first president dreamed that it might be.

The film is only two reels in length, but it is a most important contribution to any intelligently planned program during this year of official celebration in honor of Washington.

1. What is the meaning of Bi-Centennial?
2. To what period of Washington's career does it refer?
3. What famous picture is shown at the opening of the film?
4. How is the historical story introduced on the screen?
5. In what state was the home of Washington located?
6. On the banks of what river?
7. Describe its outward appearance.
8. Describe one room in its interior; furniture, lamps, rugs and ornaments.
9. At the time of the picture's opening, what is the great problem confronting Washington?
10. What was the "Ratification by New York" of which Alexander Hamilton spoke to Washington?
11. Describe Washington's costume worn in his study at Mount Vernon.
12. Where is Valley Forge located?
13. What was the predicament of the armies encamped in Valley Forge?
14. How did this effect Washington?
15. Tell the story of Washington's gift to the soldier in the little tavern.
16. Describe the installation of Washington as the first President.
17. What particular thing did you notice about this installation?
18. Who planned the architectural design of the city of Washington?
19. Did the first President ever live in the White House?
20. Name ten buildings which are now monuments of Governmental importance in the Capital city.

Write a composition of 250 words on "Washington, the Man."

(This is an assignment for elementary grades.)

"Broken Lullaby"

Paramount

Leading Players: Lionel Barrymore, Nancy Carroll, Philip Holmes.

"Broken Lullaby" is the new name given by Paramount to its exceptional production which was released under the title "The Man I Killed." It was directed by Ernst Lubitsch. This is an extraordinary bit of screen artistry, brilliant, subtle, and intriguing. It tells the story of a young musician who was conscripted during the World War. Everything in his nature revolted at war as he found it. When the charge of the enemy poured young German soldiers into the trench that he was defending, it was necessary for him to kill his man. It was an intimate struggle. It seared his soul. He became agonized over the thing that he had done and felt that he must go to the people of the young man, who was a musician like himself, and make restitution. This is a psychological study accomplished with beautiful restraint and the very essence of fine feeling.

1. What type of drama is "Broken Lullaby"?
2. Of what architectural design is the pictured Cathedral?
3. How did the director encompass a feeling of loneliness in the Cathedral?
4. What detail did you notice particularly when the Cathedral was crowded with soldiers in uniform?
5. What is the great problem of the picture?
6. How is the problem presented by the camera? A. What is a camera flash-back? B. In this instance what story does the flash-back tell?
7. Is this bit of story telling a dramatic necessity?
8. If you were the director of this picture would you have had the boy's entrance into the German household deferred so many times or would you have had him received at once?
9. What purpose was gained by the deferred entrance?
10. Describe the cemetery in detail. (This is important, for it tells the story of a director's care for detail.) There is one flaw in the directing in this scene. Did you notice it?
11. What season of the year did it represent?
12. How was this seasonal effect accomplished?
13. What did you think of the characterization of the old doctor by Lionel Barrymore?
14. What would you say of the acting of Nancy Carroll in this, one of her most unusual and trying roles?
15. What impressed you most about the doctor's wife?
16. What three things did you particularly notice in the closed bedroom of the dead German soldier?
17. Were these photographic achievements, or subtleties accomplished by the director?
18. Name three moments of dramatic restraint that you noticed in this picture.
19. What was the dramatic climax?
20. For what does this picture seem to you most notable?

Write 250 words on "The Greater Motion Picture."

(This is a high school or college assignment.)

"The Man Who Played God"

Warner Bros.

Leading Players: George Arliss, Violet Hemming, Bette Davis, Louise Closser Hale.

"The Man Who Played God" presents George Arliss who, with superb artistry, has reached a new pinnacle in motion picture making. It is the story of the great musician who, because of the throwing of a bomb, becomes deaf. His life work is wiped out. His music is stripped from him. He seems to have been deserted by God. In a passion of rebellion he turns his back on life. He scoffs at the God who could work this cruelty upon him. But gradually, out of the depths of his misery, light comes. He discovers that there are other suffering people in the world, and that it is perhaps a greater art to help fellow human beings out of their wretchedness.

1. Name three pictures in which George Arliss has played.
2. How does this one rank with his other performances?
3. Who wrote the original play of this story? Who acted in it? Who directed this film? (This is by way of a memory test.)
4. Describe five incidents emphasizing the popularity of Royale, the musician.
5. Why are these incidents important to the story that follows?
6. By what methods did the director accomplish a feeling of tenseness on the night of the concert?
7. What was your feeling at the playing of the first concert number?
8. Do you believe Arliss actually played this number or did he brilliantly act it?
9. If he acted it, how do you think this result was achieved by the microphones? (There is a whole story in synchronization in an episode of this kind. It is worth while knowing more about.)
10. Why did you think the "Moonlight Sonata" was an important musical selection for the moment of dramatic crisis?
11. How did the musician play the Sonata during the first conscious moments of his deafness? (These were finely dramatic moments.)
12. Describe the plot of this play in a short paragraph.
13. What type of play do you consider it to be—melodramatic, psychological, or light entertainment?
14. What did you consider the best characterization in this film?
15. Give reasons for your choice.
16. What characteristics make Mr. Arliss an outstanding actor?
17. What did you consider the picture's greatest moment?
18. Name five instances in the picture representing fine technique in directing.
19. Do you consider this a family audience picture? Why?
20. What did you think of this picture's methods of photography?; its angle of viewpoint?

Write a composition of 250 words on: "The Philosophy of Kindness"; or "Artistry on the Screen."

(This is a high school and college assignment.)

SEE BRITISH RENTERS PREPARING TO RECOGNIZE 'CO-OP' PRINCIPLE

Council of Society Suggests Settlement in Exhibitor Case Regarded by C.E.A as Test; Situation Is a Delicate One

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Does the Kine Renters Society contemplate revision of its declared opposition to the principle of cooperative booking?

The question is suggested by a decision reached after a very long sitting of the KRS Council this week, at which consideration to what the Cine Exhibitors regard as a test case was followed by an official KRS announcement that its Council had decided "to recommend a settlement which they felt would be satisfactory to the particular exhibitor in question."

He is Mr. Urquehart, a Scottish exhibitor, who after having booked his films for some time past through a recognized booking agent, sought to appoint a successor to that agent, but met with stolid refusal on the part of the KRS members to do business with his new nominee, on the grounds that the person he proposed to appoint did not hold a substantial financial interest in the theatres for which he would be expected to book.

This condition has only recently been insisted upon by the members of the KRS and is frankly designed to establish as a general principle the KRS refusal to book films through the recently formed Film Industries Cooperative Society.

KRS Changes Attitude

For some time past the KRS has booked films to various theatres through the intermediary of booking agents who had no kind of financial interest in the theatre for which they booked. Suddenly when the Co-op loomed with its threat of a united combine of independent British exhibitors, the KRS discovered a reason to vary its practice, because manifestly it could not do business with some small booking agents having no direct interest in the halls for whom they booked, and decline upon principle to do business in the same way with a society which sought to arrange bookings for exhibitor members in whose theatres the society or its directors had no direct interest.

Situation Delicate

At the moment the exact proposals whereby the KRS hopes to obtain a settlement in the case of Mr. Urquhart, are not disclosed. But short of a recognition of the principle that Mr. Urquhart, as a representative exhibitor, is at liberty to run the booking business connected with his own hall in exactly the way he thinks fit, it does not appear that any solution will have been found. For by virtue of the fact that his case has been taken up and supported solidly by the General Council of the Cine Exhibitors Association, Mr. Urquhart seems committed to accept only such settlement as will satisfy the members of that General Council.

And they are unlikely to accept anything which does not commit the distributors to a broad recognition of the exhibitor's right to book his films through any booking agent—subject to financial guarantees—whom he himself may select.

The situation, an exceedingly delicate one, is also intensely interesting and involves a principle upon which the whole industry is awaiting a process of clarification. Hostility to the KRS dictatorship which has been attempted in this matter, and the KRS reluctance to negotiate a reduction in the general level of film rentals, has engendered a state of revolt among British exhibitors, and only statesmanlike policy will preserve the industry from serious reactions.

Will Hays Sees Class as Well as Mass Entertainment in '32 Feature Product

The production schedule for 1932 will be featured by class, as well as mass entertainment, said Will H. Hays on his arrival in Hollywood Monday on his regular semi-annual visit, and to attend the annual meeting of the producers' association.

The full text of Hays' statement follows:

"Instead of leveling entertainment to a fixed common denominator, the industry is stepping up its entertainment standards to meet the needs of every element of the potential motion picture audience," Hays said. "Such pictures are turning millions of casual movie-goers and non-attenders into regular patrons.

"Many of the pictures now in the theatres or coming from the studios are attracting entirely new audiences. Pictures of a dramatic and intellectual calibre that would not have been successful popular entertainment a few years ago are now being received with enthusiastic approval by the regular motion picture patrons as well as tapping new strata of attendance for motion picture theatres. Experimentation in mechanics, lighting, photography, sound effects, has been succeeded by equal boldness of courageous enterprise in the field of story experimentation.

"Ten years of self-regulation and study of the public's wishes, together with unselfish cooperation by thousands of volunteer enthusiasts in the task of raising the standard of demand, have encouraged us to produce those pictures which have already in the new year so forcefully challenged attention.

"In this time of stress and strain the screen has made most impressive artistic progress. The quality of our world entertainment is at a higher level now than at any time in history—and that level constantly rises. The motion picture industry will meet its purely industrial problems with no less courage.

"The expression of public taste reflected to the motion picture industry through the widespread organization of group leadership has helped greatly. Such leadership is aiding in shaping community taste toward higher levels of entertainment. It would be conservative to say that a volunteer army of more than 30,000 serving on various cooperating committees is working with the industry toward the same objective of developing the widest possible acceptance of these high entertainment standards.

"We have still far to travel to reach the ultimate goal, but all must applaud the definite milestones of progress evident in the great pictures of 1932."

Production Moving Outdoors, Say Paramount Plant Chiefs

The demand on the part of the public for more concentration on outdoor locations and less interior settings for pictures, has resulted in the sending of an unprecedented number of players to location, according to Paramount Coast studio executives.

The perfection of present sound equipment, making it possible to handle sound recording outside with good result, has led to the adaptation of the popular trend in picture production, it is pointed out.

Copyright Hearings To Conclude Soon

The House patents committee at Washington plans to hold a series of hearings in an effort to conclude its public hearings on copyright legislation this month. Various interests not heretofore appearing will have an opportunity to present their views.

Representatives of the motion picture industry are expected to appear before the committee on February 24 to indicate how they would be affected by the bill. The authors, composers and publisher will follow two days later. Radio and dramatic interests will also be given the chance to speak.

"Open Door" Policy for Radio In Handling Outside Product

RKO, establishing an "open door" policy in distribution of product, regardless of source, has acquired "Sunshine Susie," produced in England by Gainsborough, and plans additional deals.

Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of Radio, said "We will handle product no matter where it comes from or who makes it if it is up to snuff."

IMPASSE REACHED IN DEVELOPING NON-THEATRICAL SOUND MARKET

No Definite Prospect of Large Scale Installation This Year, Says Erpi Official; Await Assurance of Libraries and Mart

"There is no definite prospect of any large scale installation of non-theatrical equipment for the immediate future—it might even be said for this year," according to an official of Electrical Research Products, Inc., despite the fact that sound equipment manufacturers announce they are prepared both to make and market non-theatrical sets in quantities sufficient to care for even "unforeseen demands."

Halting the immediate development of the market, an Erpi spokesman explained, is the fact that purchasers and manufacturers have arrived at an impasse at which neither is in a position to make the first move in correcting the situation. Both must await a supply of films. Markets will not be extensive until complete educational film libraries are available—and their existence is far from being a reality at the moment. It appears obvious, said the Erpi executive, that, until they are created, large potential purchasers of non-theatrical equipment will remain unwilling to buy in large quantities.

Want Market Assured

On the other hand, manufacturers, it was explained, cannot see their way clear to investing heavily in the preparation of complete scholastic film libraries until a market for both film and equipment is assured. Erpi, for one, already has spent a considerable sum in pioneering in an effort to determine possibilities of the field. Many experimental films were made in this connection, but with completion of this pioneering movement, the company now feels that since it is solely an equipment concern, further efforts for the creation of a source of film supply should emanate from film makers.

"This situation has 'stymied' the immediate large scale development of the non-theatrical market, and its solution must await natural developments, which will take time," the Erpi official said.

He compared the present situation in the development of non-theatrical markets with that which existed for some time immediately after the introduction of sound and during the period when only comparatively few companies marketed sound pictures.

Experimenting in Schools

"There was little inducement then," he said, "for an exhibitor to make a large investment in sound equipment for which he would be able to obtain pictures only at lengthy intervals, and before the value of sound pictures to the exhibitor had been definitely established. The present situation in the non-theatrical field is much the same, and can be changed only by natural occurrences which will come with time. There is no definite prospect of any large scale installation of non-theatrical equipment for the immediate future—it might even be said for this year."

The equipment activities of the large manufacturers of non-theatrical equipment are now being centered on experimental work in schools in an effort first to demonstrate to this important potential market the value of visual education by motion pictures. Demonstrations, tests and experiments are being planned for school rooms nationally by Erpi and RCA Photophone. This foundational work is now the most active phase of equipment manufacturers' interest in non-theatrical markets.

Educational's Project Under Way

As announced two weeks ago, the Educational Picture interests headed by E. W. Hammons have in work a plan for the development of a nationwide system of distributing classroom films and pictures for other forms of non-theatrical entertainment. This would be done through the regular theatrical exchanges of Educational, although the company, as pointed out previously, has no intention of interfering with its present activities in the regular theatrical field. Educational's efforts along non-theatrical lines, according to its sponsors, are expected to aid considerably in opening the market.

In the meantime, non-theatrical activity may be expected from RCA Photophone and its various RKO interests, and from Fox, and UFA-Films, among others.

Speaking of the motion picture "as a means of communicating messages rather than just as a means of entertainment," P. L. Thomson, director of public relations of Western Electric, recently told the Boston Advertising Club that "business can employ the medium in three ways":

1. As a straight advertising and selling vehicle.
2. In the socalled management films designed to train salesmen or dealers in the character of the product or service offered.
3. As an institutional or goodwill building medium.

Western Electric News, house organ, in an article prepared from the Thomson address, points to the case of a manufacturer of piston rings who employed the screen for straight selling, with a 65 per cent increase of business credited to this method of presentation.

Of management films, "just now in greatest vogue," was cited the use of sound pictures by Studebaker, Buick, Dodge, Chevrolet, Hudson, Oakland, Graham-Paige, Cadillac and Oldsmobile.

And of the third classification:

"While these are not primarily entertainment, they are either news or are subjects of such human interest that they find acceptance in most theatres and before all types of schools, and other educational institutions, and this distribution can be secured through reliable organizations set up especially to provide it."

"EVERYONE'S" COMMENT ON QUIGLEY ARTICLE

"Less Heat and More Light—for Hollywood," article by Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, which appeared in the December 5 issue of the HERALD, is reprinted by Everyone's, trade publication of Australia, with the following commentary introduction:

"Exhibitors of Australia and New Zealand, contemplating the depreciation in the audience value of pictures available to them, have wondered what's happened to Hollywood, the source of the bulk of their supplies. Does the responsibility for failure lie with the bank control now exercised there? Or with production executives who are too safely ensconsed in remunerative jobs? Both may be contributing factors, but the truth is that Hollywood regards itself as the capital of the world, and surveys the rest of us astigmatically. Just by way of a change, Martin Quigley, editor of America's 'Motion Picture Herald,' has investigated Hollywood, and has told some home truths about the place."

Purchasers and Manufacturers Wait for Supply of Pictures to Be Built Up; Equipment Activities Centered on School Test

Boy's Cliff Scaling Venture Was Not Inspired by Films

The Boston Globe on January 27 devoted half a column to a news story headed "Movie-Struck Boy Climbs Up Cliff," the two opening paragraphs reading:

"Nine-year-old John Murray, 194 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, inspired by a moving picture he saw recently, tried to emulate a noted mountain climber yesterday afternoon and nearly lost his life.

"Clinging to a handful of rock 60 feet up the face of a cliff back of St. Peter's St., Jamaica Plain, he was seen by Arnold O'Malley, 13, of 19 St. Peter's St., and 20 minutes later was rescued by firemen of Ladder 10 after a call had been received from O'Malley at Fire Headquarters."

Investigation showed that the boy, John Murray, had not seen this venture in a motion picture. He is an orphan living with a Mrs. Donergan. John Donergan said the boy had been playing "Follow the leader" with other children. The firemen also said that they had heard no conversation to the effect that the boy was imitating anything seen in a motion picture. The boy Arnold O'Malley who called the fire department, also declared that at the time of the rescue he had heard no mention that John Murray had seen any mountain climbing in motion pictures.

ROSENZWEIG, GALLUP NOW WITH COLUMBIA

Rosenzweig General Sales Manager; Gallup Is Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation; Voight on Coast

Charles Rosenzweig and Bruce Gallup joined Columbia Pictures this week, Rosenzweig in the capacity of general sales manager, succeeding Lou Metzger, who resigned, and Gallup to serve as director of advertising, publicity and exploitation, filling the post left vacant by the resignation last week of Bert Ennis, who on Monday will join Vitaphone in the East.

Gallup is well known in the industry for his pioneering efforts in relation to motion picture advertising and is responsible for a sizable share of progress made by film advertising in recent years. As president of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, he worked tirelessly to raise the standards of advertising in motion pictures.

He was director of publicity, advertising and exploitation at the home office of Fox, First National, and then United Artists in New York for many years until he resigned several months ago. He returned to New York from a vacation in Hollywood this week.

Rosenzweig goes to Columbia from RKO, where he had been a vice-president and general sales manager. No decision has been made with regard to his successor in the Radio organization.

Rosenzweig has been identified with the distribution field for the past 15 years. His first association was with Universal as branch manager and later he became Eastern division manager. He next joined FBO as New York branch manager, subsequently becoming Eastern division manager and later general sales manager and vice-president.

On Monday President Harry Cohn of Columbia left for Hollywood to set in motion the machinery for 1932-1933 production. Walter Wanger, Columbia vice-president in charge of story and talent material, will follow him in about 10 days for lengthy production conferences, during which time next season's lineup will be completed. Vice-president Jack Cohn is in charge in the East, passing on general executive matters and supervising distribution.

Stopping off at Kansas City on Tuesday night, en route to Hollywood, Cohn said: "We have the money and I am going to do what I have always wanted to do. We can now put into execution plans for big stories, big stars and outstanding production." Cohn, who appeared to be very enthusiastic about the company's future, was accompanied westward by Eddie Buzzell and Charles Mintz, producer of short product.

Hubert Voight, former West Coast publicity representative for First National, has joined Columbia in an identical capacity. He is now in New York for conferences with home office executives and will depart for Hollywood again in a few days.

Voight has been well known in the industry for a number of years, having been connected with the publicity departments of several companies, both on the Coast and in New York.

For five years he was attached to the publicity department of MGM in New York, leaving there to go to Hollywood to accept the position of director of publicity at Warner-First National studios, where he has been for the past two years.

Voight flew to New York from the Coast and will return by the same route this week to take up his new duties immediately.

Hess Joins Publix; Orowitz Successor

The resignation of Jack Hess late last week as advertising, publicity and exploitation chief of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, to join Publix brought innumerable changes in this division of RKO, including the appointment of Eli M. Orowitz as Hess' successor. Several promotions were made and the department placed under supervision of the following:

Eli M. Orowitz—National director of advertising, publicity and exploitation, handling vaudeville exploitation as well as picture exploitation.

W. H. Adler—Assistant to Orowitz.

Arthur Housman—In charge of national exploitation on pictures.

Charles C. Courtney—Newspaper advertising on national film campaigns.

Arnold Van Lear—Publicity for Broadway houses.

Harry Mandel—Publicity for H. R. Emde's division, including Newark and Westchester houses.

John Cassady—Publicity for Charles McDonald's houses, including New York and Brooklyn.

John Dowd, William Usilton and John Pollack—Advertising, publicity and exploitation of vaudeville.

H. Rosenwald—Contact between picture and vaudeville division.

On Monday, Hess will join Publix, where he will assist Arthur Mayer, who is in charge of publicity and advertising.

Radio Plans 18 In March, April

RKO Radio Pictures plans a two-months' production drive which is expected to result in the completion of 18 features by April 1, making a total of 23 features completed and ready for release from January 1 to April 1. The schedule calls for 12 features to go into work by April 1, with five now shooting, in various stages of cutting and editing and a probable serial.

Participating in the production drive are 33 contract players, 23 writers and 16 directors. Now shooting are: "Symphony of Six Million," "The Bird of Paradise," "Veneer," (temp.), "Ghost Valley" (temp.), "The Beast" (temp.). Now being cut are: "The Lost Squadron," "Girl Crazy," "Lady with a Past," "Carnival Boat," "Saddle Buster."

Patent Conference Not Set

No date for a second international patent conference, proposed for New York, has been set as yet by equipment manufacturers, according to J. E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, Inc. If the meeting materializes, it will be held in the spring, Otterson said.

Endler Drops Suit Against Warners

Warners' home office in New York late last week issued the following statement:

"The petition for receivership of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., heretofore filed in the State Courts of Delaware by Jules Endler, was dismissed by the Chancellor of Delaware this morning at the request of the attorneys for Endler.

"Endler was not a stockholder of the corporation.

"Simultaneously another petition was filed by the same attorneys on behalf of one Marinus T. V. Newcastle. It is substantially a copy of the petition heretofore filed on behalf of Jules Endler.

"The complete denial heretofore made by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., of all the allegations contained in the petition filed on behalf of Endler will be immediately repeated in an answer to the petition now filed on behalf of Newcastle. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., will use every effort to push the matter to a speedy determination."

Latin America for U. S. Films: Loew

Arthur M. Loew, vice president of MGM, in charge of international affairs, returned to New York this week from a 16,000 mile South American air tour.

His study, he said, indicated "the supremacy of Hollywood product in Mexico, Central and South America is assured. The degree of technical perfection of our films, plus the loyalty of the Latin people to the stars who please them, place our pictures in first rank. Our Latin friends to the south are more steadfast in their allegiance to our stars than are even we."

Hal Roach accompanied Loew in the former's plane, piloted by Loew and Captain James B. Dickson. Important commercial cities in Latin America were studied from the standpoint of motion picture conditions.

House Passes Bill To Limit Influx of Alien Musicians

The House at Washington this week passed the measure applying the contract labor clauses of the immigration law to instrumental musicians, with no debate other than that necessary to explain the provisions of the bill.

Representative Johnson of Washington explained the purpose of the bill as a measure designed to prevent alien musicians from entering the country in the guise of professional artists; as such being exempt from the contract labor law.

Six Deals Closed for State Rights Distribution; Will Appear April 1; "Spot News" Emphasized, Says Whytock

Six state rights distribution deals already have been closed by the new American Newsreel and national distribution arrangements will be completed within the next 30 days, Charles Kranz, general sales manager, announced this week. The reel will make its first appearance April 1 in an initial exhibition group of approximately 400 theatres.

The state rights distribution plan was adopted for the reel after negotiations with Warner Bros. for its distribution failed to materialize. Columbia also was reported interested in distributing the reel, but no progress on a deal was made. State rights distribution deals subsequently were closed at Philadelphia, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo and Cincinnati. H. A. McCorry, vice president of American Newsreel, leaves New York for the West Coast this week to close distribution deals there, while eastern distribution arrangements will be completed by Kranz within a month with the signing of deals in New York and Boston.

"Spot News" Emphasized

The editorial policy of the reel will emphasize "spot news" value and will avoid use of "stunt" and "faked" footage, Ross D. Whytock, editor, said. Comparatively little sound footage will be used. The bulk of the material will have only accompanying dialogue by Lowell Thomas, radio personality.

A "skeleton" camera staff has been organized by Whytock and will be increased as required. Cameramen are being selected for their experience with silent newsreel, not only because little sound footage will be used but also because it is Whytock's belief that speedier and better news material can be gathered when cameramen are not burdened with sound recording equipment.

Foreign Staffs Being Arranged

Camera staffs have been assigned to twelve large cities regularly covered by all newsreels, and arrangements are being completed for foreign staffs. One cameraman has been assigned to the Balkan and Mesopotamian district, and other foreign assignments and connections are planned. Arrangements for regular receipt of footage from the Chinese war zone are complete.

American Newsreel is conducting negotiations for a part of the old Kinograms library.

Carrillo To Come East

Leo Carrillo will travel east under the management of Leo Morrison, after completing work on "Broken Wing" for Paramount. A vaudeville tour is under consideration for the player which would include the Palace in New York.

Court May Throw Out Government Anti-Trust Case

The federal government will have to take some action before the first week of March in its anti-trust suit against the Radio Corporation of America, General Electric Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company and others or allow the case to be dropped from the court calendar by Judge John P. Nields at Wilmington, Del.

H. C. Mahaffey, Jr., clerk of the court, has sent notices to all attorneys of record, about the rules of the Delaware district court that in all cases which have been pending for more than a year and no action taken during the year, an order of dismissal will be entered at the opening of the March term. The government filed its anti-trust suit against RCA and others in May, 1930, and since then practically no action has been taken.

The petition of the government charged a combination and conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate trade and commerce in radio communication and radio apparatus by means of contracts and agreements among the various defendants to pool and cross license patents. Attorney General Mitchell is expected to go before the Senate judiciary committee at Washington this week to acquaint members of that group of the status of the suit.

Monogram Session Opens on Monday

The eastern delegation to Monogram's sales convention being held at the Hotel Jung in New Orleans on February 22, 23 and 24, leaves New York on Saturday, arriving in New Orleans Sunday evening. A special car will carry the New York contingent to New Orleans.

In this delegation will be W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram; J. V. Ritchey, foreign vice president; Harry H. Thomas, vice president for exchanges; Albert Fiedler, treasurer; George Harvey, of Harvey-Jaedicker Service, advertising agents for Monogram; Albert K. Goodman, vice president of Motion Picture Accessories Corporation, and the following exchange managers: Otto Lederer, New Jersey; Morris Epstein, New York; Al Blofson, Philadelphia; Herman Rifkin, Boston; J. Berkowitz, Buffalo; B. H. Mills, Albany; Sam Flax, Washington. H. H. Everett of Charlotte, A. C. Bromberg, Atlanta, and Carl Floyd of Tampa will join the New York delegation at Atlanta. Others who will attend are: J. H. Alexander, Pittsburgh; J. S. Jossey and Nat Lefton of Cleveland; Sam Gorrell of Cincinnati; Irving Mandel of Chicago; Nat Steinberg and Barney Rosenthal of St. Louis; C. A. Schultz and Robert Withers of Kansas City; C. M. Parkhurst, Omaha; J. L. Stern, Minneapolis; J. T. Sheffield, Seattle; Floyd St. John of San Francisco; Leo Seichsnaydre of New Orleans; and Howard Stubbins of Los Angeles. Representing the producing units will be Trem Carr, Monogram vice president; I. E. Chadwick and C. C. Burr.

The Convention will open Monday, February 22 at 2:30. A business session has been scheduled at 10:30 and 2:30 daily for three days. The first annual Monogram "Birthday Dinner" will be held February 23.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"WAYWARD" is based on a type of plot so ancient that you can almost hear its joints creaking, yet, by reason of excellent treatment and convincing performances by Pauline Frederick and Nancy Carroll, it will be very acceptable entertainment for the masses. Don't overlook the fact that while big city critics may find fault with pictures of this type, they are, nevertheless, bread-and-butter pictures for theatres.

The title has very little meaning or strength at the box office. Its appeal will be due to the efforts and ability of the individual showman to build up a good newspaper advertising campaign for the picture. But to that title you can add for selling purposes such names as Nancy Carroll, Richard Arlen and Pauline Frederick. The latter has an unsympathetic role, but those who look farther must admire her sterling performance.

In "audience value" you will, I am sure, agree with me when I say that it is the type of entertainment that is acceptable everywhere. True, they will be able to guess every angle of the plot, it's all so obvious. But by reason of the winsome, appealing performance of Nancy Carroll it will leave your audience well pleased with a story that has a happy ending to suit the tastes of most people.

Although not exactly suitable for children, there is little in it to offend, or for Sunday showings, so spot it to suit yourself and then tie up those names with the title and see how impressive a campaign you can put over to get your regulars and the not-so-regular patrons to your theatre. This picture is worthy of being classed as "extremely popular entertainment."

"MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE" is not like "Frankenstein," but placed in the category of the usual thrillers, it may measure up to the mark. It is not as weird, eerie, scarey as "Frankenstein."

In the title you have a powerful selling slant, but we hardly advise anything like your "Frankenstein" campaign for this one. Don't warn them about not seeing it if they have weak hearts. That line may have been all right once, but twice would be three times too much. Just sell it on its natural resources and leave the fancy catch lines to the overworked press agents. "Murders In The Rue Morgue" as a name should have plenty of strength. Added to that title is Sidney Fox, whose excellent work in "Strictly Dishonorable" ought to count for a couple of extra kopeks in the cash till. Then there is Bela Lugosi, the villain of "Dracula."

The "audience value" is a different matter. There is not as much fast action and thrills as might have been expected. I found it mild entertainment.

If you expect to get the kids in then you'll have to lay off any copy (not that we are advising it) about scaring them to death. But, with the right kind of a campaign worked around the title, you ought to be able to get a goodly crowd.

"BUSINESS AND PLEASURE," Will Rogers is the whole show and it is fairly mild entertainment to those who go for Rogers in a big way.

The title can be played around with Rogers' name to build up some substantial b. o. value for it. It should have a convincing campaign to induce the customers to flock to the house to see it.

"Audience value" is comparatively weak. Rogers at times rises to great comedy heights. The remainder of the cast is not too strong in names or performance.

The youngsters may get a great kick out of some of the situations, especially the desert stuff, and there is nothing in the story to make Sunday showings inadvisable, so you have that rare advantage of being able to spot it where you please.

Make up your mind that (except in those spots where the star's name is sufficient to insure business) you must give it some support. Surround it with something that will help at the box office.

Tarzan the Ape Man

(MGM)

Jungle Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents a new Tarzan in its "Tarzan the Ape Man" before the natural background of Africa where much effort has been spent in obtaining the most beautiful spots of that jungle country for the mounting of nature in such artistic splendor that one can not help being startled over its beauty of composition.

The picture in many respects resembles "Trader Horn," though what that picture missed, "Tarzan" picks up and embellishes.

As evidenced by a capacity theatre audience that viewed the picture at the Uptown, the picture more than filled their expectations in measure of thrills and suspense employed in revealing the customs and manner in which natives and animals live in the African jungles. Some, however, laughed at the wrong time, but more at the implausibilities of certain situations used in telling the story, which after all becomes secondary in this type of production.

As for thrills, one can expect no more when they see Tarzan combat lions, tigers, crocodiles, hippos and other wild animals without the aid of a gun, but relying solely on his own physical resources and a knife to quiet any animal that might cross his path.

Johnny Weismuller, it was thought, not only looks the part of Tarzan, but performs equally as well and in the end shows his prowess in the art of swimming in a well constructed water chase in which he evades a school of man-eating alligators. This is exciting, but only one of many similar situations. Maureen O'Sullivan plays the feminine lead of the picture. Neil Hamilton and C. Aubrey Smith, in addition, comprise the small cast of whites in the production.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Novel by Edgar Rice Burroughs. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Adapted by Cyril Hume. Dialogue by Ivor Novello. Photographed by Harold Rosson and Clyde De Vinna. Release date, March 12, 1932.

Strangers in Love

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

From the manner in which the Uptown theatre audience accepted "Strangers in Love," Fredric March can chalk another mark to his list of screen successes. The reaction of that audience exemplified its appreciation for this actor in loud sweeps of applause each time he finished a piece of business. But he did not stand alone in this acclamation. Kay Francis was admired for her capable delineation of the secretary. Stuart Erwin as the hard-boiled buddy, Gertrude Howard as the colored servant, Juliette Compton as the vampire, George Barbier as the lovable father, Lucien Littlefield as the staid old professor and Sidney Toler as the stupid detective were all well received. All blend well in supporting March for the purpose of telling a story taken from the William J. Locke novel, "The Shorn Lamb."

Credit for the adaptation goes to that veteran writing team, Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt, who were thought to have handled the treatment with sufficient situations and timely dialogue to keep it moving from beginning to end under the direction of Lothar Mendez.

The story concerns twin brothers, both played by March by double exposure, until one dies from a heart attack after meeting the other who had not been home for several years. The prodigal son assumes the role of the dead brother and tries to carry on his life. This gives a strong foundation to build many amusing situations until the imposter is finally discovered at the climax of the picture.

The production was considered well photographed, containing many elaborate settings and a wild boat chase to pave the way for a climax.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Lothar Mendez. From the novel "The Shorn Lamb" by William J. Locke. Adapted by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt. Release date, March 4, 1932.

A Fool's Advice

(Warner's)

Comedy-Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

A packed house at Warners' Forum accorded Frank Fay's "A Fool's Advice" a most hearty reception, giving every indication that the independent producer's first attempt is good.

What seeme dto win the audience from the start was the human appeal of this small-town story, and the effectual manner in which the players delivered their lines. Somehow, there is a bond between Main Street and the human heart which has been very well brought out in this story of which Fay is the author.

The feature held sustained interest, with situations carrying expectancy of something about to occur any moment. The dialogue was clever enough to produce frequent mirthful outbursts, clearly indicating the audience was enjoying it.

Frank Fay, as our hero, won the hearts of the audience in the first scene on his bicycle. The simple quality he brings out in the character builds up sympathy for him with amazing swiftness.

The story itself is simple, but the verisimilitude is there. Two political factions are at war, seeking to elect a mayor. Fay, as Spencer Brown, loved by old and young in the home town, finishes the crooked forces with the use of a dictagraph he and his pal, played by George Meeker, have invented. The love element comes when Spencer learns that he and his best friend both love the same girl, so he takes it like a good fellow and lets his pal marry her.

Burton Churchill made a "hit" with the audience as Martin Sloane, people's choice for mayor, while debonair Hale Hamilton won recognition as George Diamond, rival candidate. Ruth Hall was thoroughly liked as the love interest.

Produced by Frank Fay. Written by Frank Fay. Adapted by Walter De Leon and Charles Belden. Directed by Ralph Cedar. Edited by Don Hayes. Cameraman, William Reeves. Production manager, Harvey C. Leavitt.

Hell's House

(B. F. Zeidman)

Juvenile Drama

Here is an independent production, the work of Bennie F. Zeidman, which held closely, and on numerous occasions completely gripped a reasonably large crowd at the New York Strand, Warner house. The piece, definitely a bit of propaganda in the direction of apparently much-needed reform among the boys' reform schools, was generally conceded to be most sincerely, capably performed by the leading players in particular, by the support in general.

Heading the cast, billing to the contrary notwithstanding, is young Junior Durkin, freckled, not handsome, but undeniably attractive for the utter humanness portrayed in his face and action. Unlike numerous juvenile performers, Junior lives his role, does not act it, it was obvious from the reaction of the audience.

In support are Pat O'Brien, as the Mr. Kelly, bounding, comical, jovial, in whom Junior develops an abiding faith that refuses to be shaken; Bette Davis, fragile, pretty sweetheart of O'Brien, good friend of Junior.

When Junior's mother is killed, he goes to the city to live with uncle-laborer, Charles Grapewin, and aunt, Emma Dunn, both well received for their efforts. O'Brien, boarder, gives Junior a job after uncle loses his, but the job is taking care of a cellar-bootlegging establishment run by O'Brien. The place is raided, Junior brought before the juvenile court. He refuses to talk, loyal to O'Brien, who, on his part, does nothing, fearing consequences. The boy goes to the state reform school, where much of the footage takes place, with remarkable effect, it was indicated. The cruelty, inhuman treatment which is the institution's practice are brought out sharply, effectively. Junior Coghlan, an inmate, becomes Durkin's pal, and the two work together splendidly, several said. Coghlan is sent to "solitary" for attempting to smuggle out a letter from Durkin to O'Brien.

The boy is dying in the close confinement, and Durkin escapes. O'Brien gets in touch with an editor, Morgan Wallace, who is seeking to reform the institution. Detectives find Durkin and Wallace gives O'Brien his choice, clearing the boy and going to jail, or keeping quiet and sending the lad back. O'Brien does the decent thing; but Coghlan has died. Durkin's story brings about a complete reform of the institution.

Intense in its dramatic effect, the film, though almost unrelieved by comedy, was thought strikingly real.

Produced by Bennie F. Zeidman. Story and direction by Howard Higgin. Adaptation, screen play by Paul Gangelin, B. Harrison Orkow. Editor, Edward Schroeder. Cameraman, Allen S. Siegal. Art director, Edward Jewell. Production manager, Harvey C. Leavitt. Release date, February 10, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

Texas Gun Fighter

(Tiffany)

Western

"Texas Gun Fighter" is the sobriquet that has been won by Ken Maynard, outlaw, whose real name is Bill Dane. And the hard riding that characterizes a real Western, and any picture in which Maynard's Tarzan appears, is there from the opening scene. Bill demands of Drag Fells (Jim Mason) that his split from the latest haul go to Banty (Lloyd Ingraham), crippled and old. Mason orders one of his men to put an end to both of them, but Tarzan charges up to the window and the bandit's shot goes wild. Bill starts with Banty for Silver City for an operation on his spine, but on the way frustrates Drag's gang in an attack on a bullion wagon and rescues Miss Jane (Sheila Mannors) after a runaway. At Silver City Bill is made sheriff. Drag tricks Bill and makes him open the vault where a rich shipment is being held. Bill jumps off a bridge, returns for his guns, and goes back to get the gang, Banty insisting on joining him. The posse, which had gone to seize Bill, comes upon the battle ground after Banty has been killed, and the gang is captured, Bill accounting for Drag.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany Productions. Directed by Phil Rosen. Story and continuity by Ben Cohen. Photography, Jackson Rose. Sound, John Stransky. Release date, February 7, 1932. Running time, 63 minutes.

Wayward

(Paramount)

Drama

Paramount's adaptation of the Nateel Howe Farnham novel, "Wild Beauty," was thought by numerous of the patrons at the New York Paramount to be rather stereotyped as to story, giving comparatively little opportunity for an effective display of the abilities of the capable players in the leading roles, including Nancy Carroll, Richard Arlen, Pauline Frederick, Margalo Gillmore.

Arlen, scion of a wealthy, domineering family, which is the social elite of a small town, marries Miss Carroll, show girl, secretly in New York. Returning to the home, where Pauline Frederick, mother, rules, the two meet with stunning opposition, particularly on the part of Miss Frederick. She does all in her power to break the marriage, and eventually succeeds, when Miss Carroll, momentarily intoxicated when she is beaten in her efforts to hold Arlen, is taken away by John Litel. She returns the same night, as soon as she realized where she is, but the mother refuses her admission to the house and when Arlen returns from his pursuit of the two, she tells him the girl has not returned.

Exactly as expected, the two are finally reunited when the girl, working to support herself, has earned enough to take her small child with her. As she is attempting to get away with the child at night, Miss Frederick enters, and the argument which ensues is overheard by Arlen. Entering, he receives his first knowledge of the manner in which his mother had deceived him. It is further unfortunate, comment indicated, that Miss Frederick was cast in a role wholly unsympathetic. Miss Gillmore has only a minor part as the snobbish sister-in-law of Miss Carroll.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Edward Sloman. Screen play by Gladys Unger and Lillian Day. Based on the novel, "Wild Beauty," by Nateel Howe Farnham. Cameraman, William Steiner. Release date, February 19, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

One Man Law

(Columbia)

Western

Buck Jones, sombreroed western hero for Columbia Pictures, handles himself well, and his horse with his usual exceptional skill, in a role which again makes him the sheriff. His hard and fast riding, shooting and the like, against a background of the always impressive western mountain scenery, should give the younger element, it was thought, good cause for enjoyment, not to mention certain of the adults in any audience.

Jones loses both his horse and his personal acoutrements when he comes in just short of winner in a horse race. Robert Ellis, in the role of the villain of the piece, returns his lost possessions and offers Jones the post of sheriff. His ulterior motive is the necessity of having a helpful sheriff by his side when he completes his plan of selling out the settlers of a neighboring valley by disposing of the deeds he promised them, to outsiders.

He is nearly successful until Jones gets a clear picture of the situation. His intention is to resign, but a judge friend persuades him to stay to gather sufficient evidence to smash Ellis. Shirley Grey, who has become fond of Jones, changes her mind when he insists that the owners of the deeds have a legal right to oust the settlers. Ellis is brought to book, however, when he attempts to steal the racing horse of a man he had previously hired. When the mob is about to hang him, Ellis pays back the purchasers of the deeds, and, of course, all's well that ends well.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Story, adaptation and dialogue by Lambert Hillyer. Cameraman, Max Stengler. Sound, Russel Malmgren. Release date, December 4, 1931. Running time, 63 minutes.

Mayfair seemed duly impressed by the picture.

Set in the Paris of 1845, the backgrounds had, comment indicated, a slight appearance of artificiality, in that the neighboring houses seemed rather to have been painted upon a backdrop than built for the purpose. The work of the cast was called satisfactory, the best performance undoubtedly having been rendered by Bela Lugosi as Dr. Mirakle, the fanatical owner of the ferocious ape, Erik, and whose scientific fervor leads him to several attempts to blend the blood of the ape with that of a white woman, in each case the woman dying of shock and poisoning.

Of atmosphere there is sufficient, effective scenes picturing Lugosi enticing a girl into his carriage for experimental purposes in the laboratory from which a trap-door leads into the Seine below.

Featured in the cast are Sidney Fox, young, attractive, as the sweetheart of Leon Waycoff, medical student; Bert Roach as the jovial roommate of Waycoff; D'Arcy Corrigan, effective, unquestionably, as the keeper of the morgue.

The story is a familiar one. Waycoff, with Miss Fox, sees the ape at a carnival, and the beast shows unusual animation at her appearance. Later, unable to gain her permission to visit him for purposes indicated to the audience, Lugosi sends the ape after the girl. Meanwhile, however, experiments which Waycoff has been performing suddenly result in the discovery of the gorilla virus in the veins of the dead woman. The girl's mother is killed as the ape escapes with Miss Fox to Lugosi's laboratory in an abandoned house. Lugosi is killed by the suddenly aroused ape, and then follows the exciting chase across the rooftops of the Paris neighborhood, with Waycoff in pursuit of the beast, carrying the girl. A pistol shot sends the gorilla into the Seine, the girl barely escaping with her life.

Cain

(Talking Picture Epics)

Drama

"Filmed on the island of Nossi-Be, off Madagascar," says the exploitation matter of this picture, and a considerable part of the 78 minutes of running time was concerned with the jungle scenery, with the actions of one man, and all with little sound.

A stoker on a ship (Thomy Bourdelle) rebels against his sweltering existence, steals a satchel containing jewels and a pistol, and escapes in a native boat. Days of torture, with only bananas for food and a water supply that soon runs out, end when a breeze finally springs up and carries the craft to the shore of an uninhabited island.

There Cain fashions primitive implements for a primitive life. A group of natives from another island arrive and Cain steals one of their women. With his pistol he routs the savages. Despite his rudely fashioned home and two children he is haunted by remorse for his theft. When a passing ship sees his signal flare and rescues him, he confesses to the captain and is assigned to the stokehole to work out his crime. Zouzour (Rama Tahe), his native woman, has paddled out toward the vessel. The ship's radio brings an announcer's news incidents of misery and misfortune in various parts of the civilized world. Cain leaps overboard and rejoins Zouzour.

Leon Poirier, the director, has presented a picture which emphasizes the beauty of the island, with deliberate action and very little dialogue. Practically the entire audience at the Cameo theatre at Times Square was comprised of men, yet the natural reaction to the press sheet terms—"palpitating with passion," "daring," "primitive kingdom of savage love"—were not borne out by the picture itself, with the one exception of the capture of the half-clothed native girl.

Distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Directed by Leon Poirier. Released January 15. Running time, 78 minutes.

Torchy Turns the Trick

(Eduational)

Excellent

Ray Cooke, a happy selection, by the way, for the C. C. Burr comedies from the stories of Sewell Ford, makes a likeable comedy of the story of the office boy who uses a bit of ingenuity in winning the big steel contract for his boss. There are the loaded cigar, the overturning coat-rack that drops a stenographer's hat becomingly upon the brow of the office manager, there is the customary 'oh, yeahing," but extra color is added to the action in the uniformed soldiery from the foreign principality. Torchy manages to gain admittance to the prince's suite, togs himself in a lampshade and a drape as the "Count of Algebra," and brings the prince to his lady love for a price—the signed contract. Dorothy Dix, Franklyn Pangborn and Edmund Breese assist in the fun. Running time, 22 minutes.

Sports Interest

Ted Husing, in the fourth of his series concerning sports in the descriptive manner, takes up hockey in this number. The game is pictured in various stages, up to the climatic action of the fast and furious game on the arena rink. Interesting, especially to the sport lover. Running time, 9 minutes.

Old Songs for New

Entertaining

A modern band plays the songs our fathers knew, marches and the sentimental numbers of an earlier day in an entertaining short subject. Done in Technicolor, with beautiful precision, the effect is excellent and pleased an audience at the Broadway Criterion. One of the McCarthy sisters sings, in the style of Anna Held, and a background of the day of "The Bicycle Built for Two" does much to enhance the diversion value of the number. Very pleasing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Some Laughs

The frank slapstick that permeates this Mermaid comedy reaches a high point in a burlesque night club dance which would make any two-reeler well worth while, no matter what the qualifications of the remainder of the picture. The bored strong man at times tugs frantically at his dainty partner to swing her around his waist and over and under him, then at the crucial moment forgets all about her, and there is a resounding thump as she plops to the floor. The hired help provides an unexpected after-dinner show, but their final free-for-all extinguishes the last hope of selling the restaurant. The cast includes Addie McPhail, Monty Collins, Bryant Washburn, Phyllis Crane, Jack Shaw, Dorothy Granger, Richard Malaby, George Davis. Running time, 20 minutes.

Great

Universal's "Unshod Maiden" created a furore when shown to a private audience of local critics and newspapermen recently, which indicates that Universal may have a gold mine in this contemplated series of short subjects burlesquing old-time films.

This offering was taken from Mary McLaren's famous picture "Shoes" with scenes of that picture used all the way through, while a wit describes the action as it would be presented on the screen today had some one gone to the trouble of making the same scenes over with the same characters. As it is, one can see Mary McLaren, Fritzi Ridgeway and other actors who supported her in this picture when it was made more than 14 years ago.

A series of 52 such subjects are planned for this year with Al De Mond as producer and editor.

Door of Asia

(RKO Pathe)

Enlightening

Enlightening, deeply interesting, especially in view of the fact that the eyes of the world are turned upon China, is this number of the Vagabond Adventure series. The people perhaps more than the place are emphasized, with the wandering camera recording typical aspects of the native life, which, though quite primitive, is nevertheless a reasonably happy one, it is indicated. The short gains in impressiveness when it is considered that the peaceful country is embroiled in a war of which the quiet, industrious people understand nothing. The accompanying dialogue is clear, interesting, entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial

(Paramount)

Fine

Interesting and scenically beautiful is this, number five of the Pictorial series, in which is pictured first, the source of New York City's plentiful and excellent water supply. The camera delves through the Catskill Mountains, spotting the small brooks, narrow streams and the great lake where is harbored the water which New York drinks. Scenes on a wide western ranch, where ponies are trained for the exacting work of polo, forms the latter half of the number. Technicolor is here used with remarkably vivid effect. An interesting, diverting short with wide appeal.—Running time, 7 minutes.

College Grapplers

(RKO Pathe)

Action, Interest

One of the Grantland Rice Sportlight series, with plenty of pep and action, depicting the embryonic wrestling champions of a typical college. The boys are shown in training on the mats, and the short is climaxed by a series of bouts, in the college gymnasium, between boys of various weights, against a background of an enthusiastic, cheering mob of classmates. Sport fans will like it; any one will enjoy the enthusiasm of the young wrestlers and the spectators. Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Buys Story

Paramount has bought "The Diamond and the Lilies," an original story by Edwin Justus Mayer, former newspaper man and playwright.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from the country's key cities showed a marked increase for the calendar week ended February 13, when 181 theatres in 30 cities drew at the box office a total of $2,384,334, an increase of $150,663 over the previous calendar week, ended February 6, when a total of $2,233,671 was recorded from 182 theatres in 30 cities. One new high individual figure was established during the later seven-day period, at Keith's in Cincinnati, with "Ben Hur," while nine new low individual totals resulted. This compares with one new "high" and 11 new "lows" during the previous week.

BELIEVE COLUMBIA HAS A HOT BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION IN BEHIND THE MASK RESULTS HERE PROVE THIS STATEMENT INSPITE OF TERRIBLE BAD SHOW WEATHER INCLUDING WORST FOG EVER SEEN IN SPRINGFIELD AND THE FIRST WEEK OF LENT AGAINST TREMENDOUS DRAWING CARDS AT OTHER HOUSES WE ARE STANDING THEM UP SHOULD BE RECORD WEEK

CONGRATULATIONS=

AL ANDERS BIJOU THEATRE••

A HIT!

Behind the badge stand the forces of law, matching wits with the cunning of a mad man!

Behind the mask lurk the forces of diabolical evil!

When these two forces meet through the medium of the screen, the result is a "shocker" which will jar your box-office out of that slump and send it whirling into wealth!

Trailers sell seats!

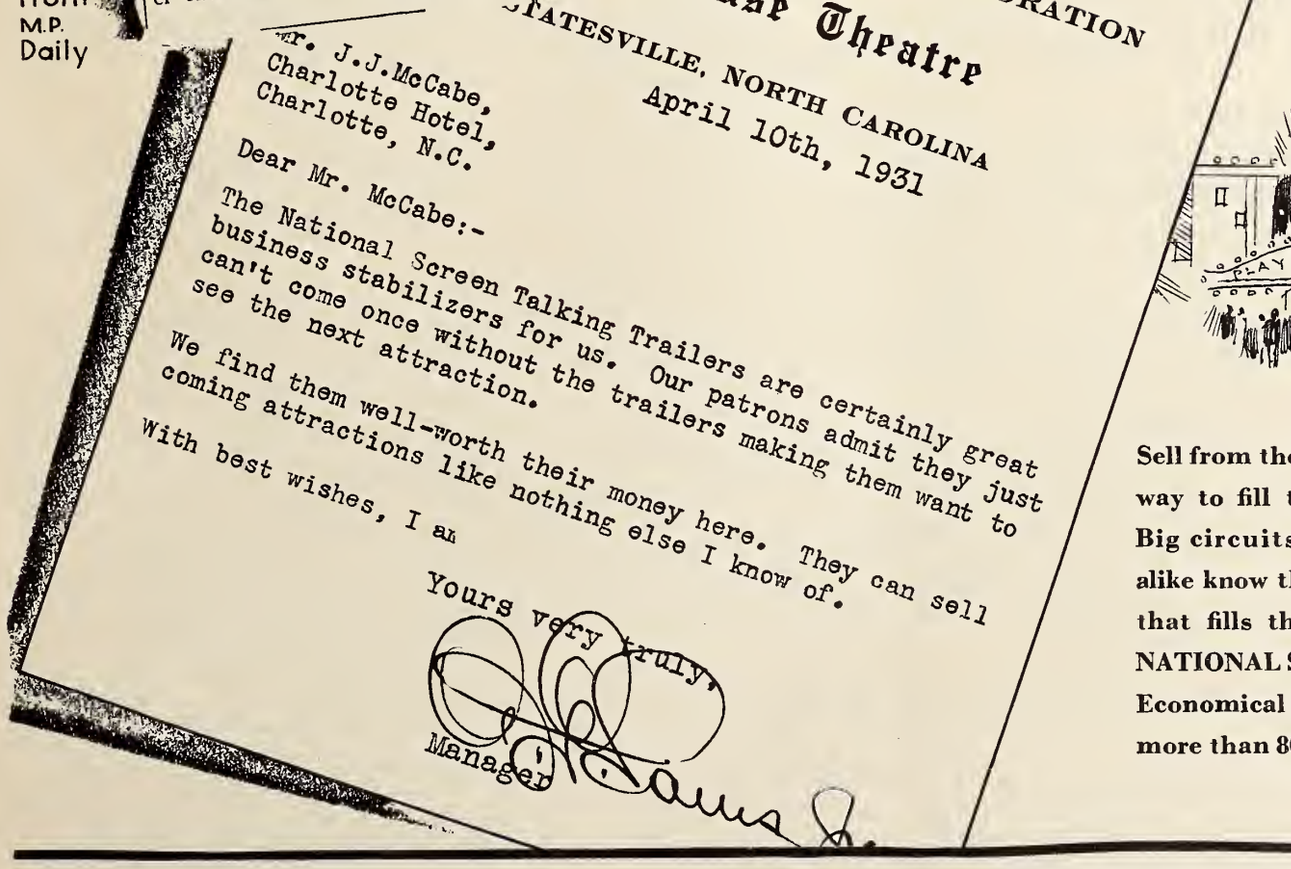
The Pay-Off

"SAY, that looks great. I'm coming here next week to see that picture."



The place was the Capitol, the comment-provoker, a trailer; the subject matter, "The Squaw Man" and the spokesman, your average picture-goer. It spoke a lot for the seat-selling value of the properly prepared trailer and emphasized to us again the definite place in any theatre's program that the trailer should enjoy.

Evidence of the interest-arousing value of trailers is available on all sides. The de luxe houses on Broadway slip one in at the break of every show and, as they should, have been doing this for months. Screen time at these big houses means dollars. Exact analysis, therefore, makes it obvious that the trailer has its function to fulfill and does it; else, it would have been ash-canned long since.

If the big houses do it, the smaller ones might well follow suit.

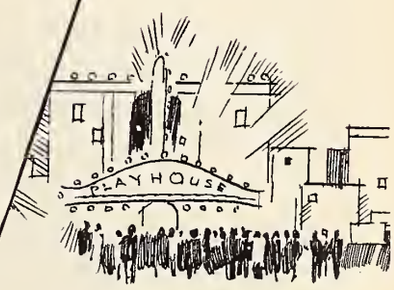
Dear Mr. McCabe:-



The National Screen Talking Trailers are certainly great business stabilizers for us. Our patrons admit they just can't come once without the trailers making them want to see the next attraction.

We find them well-worth their money here. They can sell coming attractions like nothing else I know of.

With best wishes, I am

Yours very truly,

Manager

MUST UNITE FORCES, OHIO MPTO IS TOLD

Exhibitors Protest Present Protection System, Opposes Standard Exhibition Contract, Automatic Newsreel Renewals

That the motion picture industry should unite forces to present a strong battle line to oppose inimical factors was urged by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, in addressing the eleventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, held last week at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel, Columbus, Ohio.

Protest Protection System

Protest against the present system of protection and zoning was registered by a two to one vote of the exhibitors, after the convention had decided to permit proxy voting by theatres. The theatre men also voted opposition to adoption of any standard exhibition contract, denounced the tying up of shorts with features in group buying, and protested against automatic renewal clauses in newsreel contracts.

Resolutions of sympathy were voted to the members of the families of the late J. J. Harwood and John August Ackerman, both of whom had been very active in exhibitor affairs.

President W. M. James, serving his fifth term as head of the Ohio organization, called the convention to order and Henry C. Worley, mayor of Columbus, welcomed the delegates, Martin C. Smith, of Toledo, replying for the exhibitors.

New State Tax Law Explained

Anthony J. Kraus, member of the Ohio Tax Commission, and Carlton S. Dargusch, attorney for the Commission, explained at length the methods of listing personal property and the payment of taxes under the new Ohio state law. Discussion centered around the method of listing sound equipment held under lease. It was declared that such equipment must be listed by the owner, which in this case is the manufacturer or selling agency, even if the contract of lease provides for the lessee to pay taxes. Deduction of 25 per cent for annual rate of depreciation is insufficient, exhibitors declared. Pipe organs not in use should not be taxed, they felt, and it was pointed out that under the new law only such personalty as is actually in use is taxable.

Lightman declared 10 per cent cancellation should be allowed in booking contracts.

Double features were almost unanimously opposed by the exhibitors. It was declared that such a policy leads to unduly heavy expense. The practise of giving premiums likewise was unanimously discouraged. Protection and zoning and percentage contracts were discussed, without decision. Speakers accused manufacturers of sound equipment of demanding unreasonable service charges.

P. J. Wood, business manager, said the association is entitled to much of the credit for the enactment of the Sunday option law in Ohio, which has helped the industry in many locations where Sunday exhibitions previously were prohibited.

At the banquet President James acted as toastmaster, Speakers were Governor White if Ohio, Mayor Henry C. Worley, M. A. Lightman, C. C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Film Board of Trade, B. O. Skinner, director of education of Ohio and head of the Ohio Censor Board; Senator Joseph N. Ackerman, Rabbi Jacob Tarshish and others. Censorship was discussed by Pettijohn, Skinner and Lightman.

For the sixth consecutive time Mr. James was named president. E. C. Flanigon, Cleveland, was elected vice president at large; A. J. Holt, Cincinnati, first vice president; Henry Bieberson, Jr., Delaware, second vice president; Ed Hiehle, Newark, third vice president; Martic C. Smith, Toledo, secretary; Caldwell H. Brown, Zanesville, treasurer, and P. J. Wood, business manager.

The new executive committee is composed of John A. Schwalm, Hamilton, chairman; Henry Greenberger, Cleveland; I. Lipson, Cincinnati; C. F. Pfister, Troy; Fred Desberg, Cleveland, and J. E. Fernkoess, Cleveland.

B.I.P. America Opens Branch In New Orleans; Total Now 11

B.I.P. America, American distribution unit of British International Pictures, has opened an exchange in New Orleans, bringing the total of its branches to 11, in its program of national expansion, according to Sidney Garrett, general manager.

A tentative schedule of 24 features is planned for release during this season. No definite number of exchanges is set, said Garrett, but sufficient will be opened to cover the country, the full list expected to be in operation within a short time.

Legal Division at Radio Plant

A resident legal department has been established at Radio's Coast plant, consisting of Gordon E. Youngman, general counsel for RKO Radio in New York, and Daniel T. O'Shea. Youngman may return to New York after the Coast department is organized.

Makes Commercial Series

Lem F. Kennedy, former director for Fox, Pathe and Universal, has completed a series of commercial talking films for Wilding Productions, Inc., in Detroit, and plans an educational series in the south shortly.

Roxy To Speak on Radio City

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel is scheduled to address the New York Building Congress on Friday, February 19 at the Hotel Commodore on the main architectural and amusement features of Radio City.

Double Features Make for Quality, Says John Freuler

The case of "protesting too much" against double features has taken a new form—that of pointing to hazards which are nonexistent, says John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, who points to "daily exhibitor capitulation to this policy, despite the frenzied fears of those who have least to gain and most to lose."

"No fair-minded person who scans the talent in writing, direction and casting, which has come to the fore lately, within the independent ranks, can give credence to the latest expression that double features will encourage inferior product. To the contrary, a picture which is necessarily judged along with major companies' product, must be well up to standard to 'get by,' for the public, appraised of conditions within the industry, through newspapers and fan magazines, is keen in picking flaws and is justified in demanding consistently good entertainment. The old 'quickie' methods—and one need not quibble with terms—are over. They served their purpose at the inception of sound, but now the die has been cast and it will be the purpose of each succeeding picture to improve upon the last.

"Contrary to the belief expressed by one executive, I feel that if the public wants two features exhibitors should not 'fight them'—as is suggested—but that the old, old adage which helped so greatly in building business in this country be here applied, I mean 'the customer is always right.'"

Important Figures To Grace Club Ball

Numerous prominent persons have accepted invitations to attend the Motion Picture Club ball at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Saturday. The affair is called the first major social event held in the city by the industry in two years.

Among the more important figures expected to be present are: Mayor James J. Walker, honorary club president; Royal S. Copeland and Robert F. Wagner, New York's senators; Lieutenant Thomas B. Mulroy, chief engineer of all three of Rear Admiral Byrd's expeditions; the Count and Countess Von Luckner; Lieutenant Earl Rossman, U. S. N.; Bernt Balchen, aviator; Commander Charles E. Rosendahl of the U. S. S. Akron, and others, who will occupy the dias at "The Banquet of the Stars," which will be held at midnight.

Invitations have also gone forward to General Smedley D. Butler, Rear Admiral Byrd, the German ambassador, Governor Roosevelt, former governor Alfred E. Smith, Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, Brigadier General Fuller and former ambassador James W. Gerard.

Sam E. Morris Returns

Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of Warners, left Europe last week, arriving in New York this Thursday.

TO THE WIVES of INDEPENDENT THEATRE OWNERS

This message is addressed to you!

DOES your husband come home after the show at night and crab because he doesn't like the assortment of food you have in the ice box?

DOES he hate to get up in the morning to go to the theatre? Has he lost the enthusiasm that made him a successful showman?

THERE IS A REASON

Bad business, Poor pictures, Protection that is gradually creeping closer and closer to him, unfair Competition, impossible sales policies, threats of a 10% Federal Tax, an uncertain future of the business that you and he have your all tied up in.

IT'S A WONDER HE DOESN'T GO NUTS
NOW'S THE TIME FOR YOU TO TAKE A HAND!

Show HIM this NOTICE that the independent exhibitors of the United States, under the auspices of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION of Motion Picture Exhibitors are holding a MASS MEETING in Detroit, March 9th and 10th—tell him he should be there. Tell him that if he is not willing to help himself—NO ONE ELSE WILL.

At DETROIT plans will be made to solve these problems.

It's time to get back to the good old days when producers produced good pictures, independent exhibitors showed them, the public liked them, and we all made money.

BUT—YOU CAN'T DO IT STAYING AT HOME

INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS and wives will have to do it if it is to be done. Your job is to show him it is important for him to come to DETROIT, that if he wants you to, you will come with him or will remain at home if necessary and run the theatre, and third, that it will do him good to get away from bad business for a couple of days and mingle with theatre owners from all parts of the U. S. He will go home with renewed enthusiasm to put into play the new ideas he will get while in DETROIT.

IT WILL BE ALL BUSINESS FOR HIM. But for you, if you come, the ladies of Detroit have planned a full two days of Luncheons, Trips, Bridge (if you like it), a tour to Henry Ford's Early American Village, Banquets and Entertainment that will do you a lot of good too.

Hotel RATES in Detroit are at their LOWEST, with special reduced railroad fares from any City.

Answer to Question No. 112

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 116.—(A) To what is the light producing power of the crater floor of an ordinary carbon arc due? (B) What is the light source of the high intensity arc and why is it more brilliant than the ordinary arc? (C) Just what various items in the ordinary arc offer resistance to current flow, and in what proportion does each offer resistance? (Note: You may all have a try at this one, but I shall have the National Carbon Company make answer. The Bluebook figures on this [Page 393, Vol. 1] may still be accurate, though possibly more accurate measurements are now available.) (D) What is the temperature of the high intensity arc gas from which illumination is had? (Note: I shall have this answered by an expert in high intensity.)

Bluebook School Question No. 112 was: "(A) Will every projection arc operate best at one voltage? (B) Your 60-volt arc is pulling 70 amperes. What is its resistance in ohms? How did you arrive at the result? (C) Set forth the formula for calculating projection arc voltage. (D) Set forth the rule-o'-thumb formula for calculating projection arc voltage. Is is accurate?

The list of those sending in answers has grown somewhat since the new "course" has begun. I am especially gratified to see so very many of the old "students" still sending in answers regularly. Relatively few have dropped out—not nearly as many as entered at the beginning of the new course. This week I shall print the answers of different ones to various sections of the question, since no one man made best reply to all sections. Those making good, as a whole, are (asterisks indicating the better answers):

Lester Borst*, C. Rau and S. Evans*, Roy J. Arntson, Lewis A. Goldman*, G. E. Doe*, Mike McGuire*, Henry B. Coates, John Ahrenson*, A. Gibson, H. D. Schofield, Don Warren*, Dave Lode*, James Ledbetter, Wm. Broadbent*, Bill Doe*, H. G. Tonlin, Richard Michaels, K. L. Knight*, T. G. Graves, Frank C. Hagmyer, H. D. Tyler, Pat O'Brien*, R. L. Little, Dan L. Mason, Dave Goldberg*, S. T. Jones, S. Kay, Andrew Wells*, Chas. Tamper, Seymour Carroll, Andy Bailey*, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Charles Ray and Tom Taylor, P. H. Bondom*, Frank Burker, R. Jackson, John G. Farmann, T. L. May*, John Cermak, Frank Davis*, Dave Andrews, Alonzo Zerach*, Dan L. Simmons, Dave Lambert and Tom Davis*, Tom Murphy, F. B. Gamble, Thomas McGruder, John Wentworth*, Henry Sicmann, P. L. Davis, Roy J. Arntson, Tom Rathburn*, Andrew Breaston, F. D. Holler, T. R. Peters, Gorman Helder, Dave Anderson, P. D. Thompson, D. Samuels, Jack Billings*, John Williams, James Traxler, H. B. Billings, Frank Ferguson, Dave Bitdoll, Chick Peters*, Richard Singleton, Nic Granby*, M. D. Dove, Tom Whitnath, D. L. Sinklow, P. L. Toeping and P. T. Garling.

Be sure each time to (a) write the number of the question being answered in good-sized figures at the top of the first sheet, and to sign your name either under it or at the end of the answer. The task of going through such a mass of correspondence as this "school" entails is too great to permit of hunting up numbers, names, etc., if they are missing. In this lot were six answers—two of them excellent ones, too—to which no names were signed, except it may have been on a separate sheet. Be careful. Answers and letters are separated immediately and without examination upon opening.

As to Section A5, I will print the answer of Tom Davis, though there were several other very excellent replies. Davis says:

"Gosh, no! An alternating current projection arc (there still is such a thing) operates at much lower voltage than a d.c. arc of equal voltage. All direct current projection arcs of any given amperage will operate best at approximately the same voltage, though composition of carbons will make some difference. I have no means of knowing just what effect difference in carbon composition may have, but I do not believe it to be very much. Arc voltage will, however, vary with amperage, assuming, of course, that the arc is maintained at its best light producing value. Projection arcs of any given amperage may be operated at rather widely varying voltage, but only at one voltage for best results. If a certain amperage direct current arc operates best at 53 volts, and that voltage be changed to, say, 56 volts, there will be a very appreciable falling off in results."

An excellent answer, if you ask me. And now we will examine the answer of Messrs. Evans and Rau as to Section B. They say:

"The resistance of a 60-volt arc pulling 70 amperes of current (d. c.) would be six-sevenths, or approximately .857 of an ohm. This result is obtained by applying Ohm's Law, which says, 'Voltage divided by number of amperes flowing equals resistance in ohms.' Hence, the problem resolves itself into

$$60 \div 70 = \frac{60}{70} = \frac{6}{7} \text{ ohm."}$$

One man made it out to be 3.56 ohms. I can't imagine where he got the figures.

Lester Borst says regarding Section C: "Projection arc voltage equals the product of arc resistance, in ohms, and arc amperage, or as per Ohm's Law, E = IXR, in which E represents e.m.f., or voltage; I, the number of amperes; and R, ohms resistance."

G. E. Doe answers Section D as follows:

"The rule-o'-thumb is a combination of three Ohm's Law formulae. It is expressed in which E stands for e.m.f., or voltage; I, for the number of amperes flowing; and R, the number of ohms resistance. If we cover up the symbol standing for the quantity desired, what remains will give the answer. For example: We wish to know the ohms resistance of something we know the applied voltage and current flow of. We cover up R in the rule-o'-thumb, and see that E (voltage) divided by I (current flow in amperes) will give us the resistance in ohms. If it were applied voltage we desired, and if we knew the resistance and amperage, we should cover the E and see that ohms multiplied by amperage will give us what we seek. This formula is accurate, provided two of the quantities are definitely known. However, to employ this formula for a projection arc, the circuit of which contains a resistance element (rheostat), it must be expressed

$$\frac{E}{IR},$$

$$\frac{\text{E minus arc voltage}}{CR}."$$

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

INDIVIDUALITY IN ADVERTISING!

EACH showman responsible for a theatre's advertising will naturally adopt a style or series of styles according to his own idea of good newspaper advertising. That's why we have so many different slants in the make up of movie ads.

If you were to accumulate several hundred theatre ads clipped from newspapers from all over the country on the same picture, you would get the surprise of your life to see how many totally opposite slants are injected to sell the same picture in the different localities.

That's what you can label "individuality" in advertising.

Many things enter into the make-up of these various ads. The amount of space allowed. The ability of the manager to inject original art work with the aid of an ad artist. The use or absence of mats. The individual valuation of white space. But regardless of these individual slants practically every one of those ads possess one outstanding characteristic; the personality of the showman.

Now, there is still another angle to the "personality" style of show-advertising and that is, the personal indorsement type. There is nothing new about it, it's been worked time and again, but it can be handled in so many different ways that it will ever remain new.

It's a style that must not be used too often or like the famous "welcome," you may wear it out entirely. But used discriminately it carries a hugh wallop in most communities. Especially where the manager is a man of high standing in his town and one whose judgment is respected. Lacking these two essentials your personal indorsement won't mean much to the town and better to keep away from that style of advertising.

In personally indorsing a picture your copy must convey more than just your indorsement or approval. You must tell them why; you must reflect in your copy the enthusiasm that the preview of the picture has worked up in you; it must convey the thought that here is a picture so great, so outstanding and so human (or whatever else it may possess) that you want everyone in your town to see it. That's why you are departing from your usual style of advertising to tell them so.

Beware of ridiculous phrases or over-enthusiasm in your text. Never leave yourself open to a comeback from your local editor or newspaper critic. If you are completely sold on the merits of a particular picture and feel that it warrants the "personal indorsement" type of advertising make it so convincing that even the skeptic will buy a ticket just to be sure that you are wrong.

"FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD." Just what can YOU do with a title like this?

Well, you'll get your chance to find out and at the same time possibly, we repeat, possibly win some nice cash prizes while finding out.

First National Pictures, in this issue, announce a nation-wide contest in which they offer many cash prizes for the best all-round campaign on this Joe E. Brown picture.

We of the Round Table Club always get a great kick out of these contests because invariably the winners' list carries a great majority of Club members. Not that that's surprising, we do honestly believe that the better kind of showman belongs to the Club.

But to get back to the contest. Read over all the details and rules and then see just where you can spot your dates on this picture. Then get busy. Start framing your campaign now, work out every conceivable type of exploitation and gag; a contest in your local papers; tieups with the local fire department; novel ballyhoos and various methods of promoting plenty of free space with stories and pictures; and last, but not least, the outstanding newspaper advertising campaign of your career.

Here is a glorious opportunity to demonstrate the kind of a showman you are and a peach of a chance to attract nation-wide attention to yourself and the kind of show-merchandiser you are. Take advantage of it within the bounds of your particular situation. Don't spend a penny more than you would for any other picture. But promote, brother, promote. Here is a picture that makes promoting easy. It lends itself to most any kind of a stunt and tie-up.

Keep a scrap book or folder on your campaign, put all the tear sheets from your newspapers into it, have snapshots or photos made of the various phases of your activities with this picture, and when it is all over send it to me at Club headquarters marked clearly as an entry for the contest and the prize money that goes with it.

Here's wishing you plenty of business and one of the prizes. Let's go.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

We're digging up this one again because we happened across it at the same time a bulletin fell into our hands stressing a circuit's great desire to help make each theatre beautiful and ending up with: "In conclusion we are taking this means of informing you that two new chromium cuspidors have been ordered for your house."

Feeling certain that it would hand the boys a laugh we are giving you Dick's impression of the big boss arriving at the theatre with the glad tidings for the poor harrassed manager. Now suppose YOU tell one. Dick needs ideas for his cartoon series. Don't be a slacker, come clean.

GRANDJEAN STRESSED AID FROM PULPIT AS KEYNOTE OF CAMPAIGN

The keynote of the campaign made on "Way Back Home" by L. H. Grandjean, Texas-Oklahoma division manager for the H-F circuit, was co-operation from the pulpit. In view of the fact that a number of towns registered a remarkable increase over previous receipts, and that few opportunities to contact the church are offered these days, we will briefly relate the highlights of the plan.
